

A LITERARY HISTORY OF PERSIA

IN FOUR VOLUMES

VOLUME IV

Cambridge University Press
Fetter Lane, London

New York

Bombay, Calcutta, Madras

Toronto

Macmillan

Tokyo

Maruzen-Kabushiki-Kaisha

SHÁH 'ABBÁS THE GREAT

1920.9.17-044 (Brit. Mus.)

Frontispiece

A LITERARY HISTORY OF PERSIA

VOLUME IV

Modern Times

(1500-1924)

10922

BY

EDWARD G. BROWNE

M.A., M.B., F.B.A., F.R.C.P.

SIR THOMAS ADAMS'S PROFESSOR OF ARABIC AND FELLOW OF PEMBROKE COLLEGE IN THE
UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

CAMBRIDGE
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS

1928

I DEDICATE THIS VOLUME TO MY MOTHER
IN TOKEN OF A GREAT DEBT OF GRATITUDE AND LOVE

همانم که از چشم نگذاشتی ' مدام در آغوش بر داشتی '
گرامت بودم از جان خویش ' نودت ز من هیچ کس بیش 'یش
مرا هوش و جان و روان با تو است ' دلم آشکار و نهان با تو است '

Firdawsi, Yûsuf u Zulaykhâ (ed. Ethé, p. 240, ll. 2421-2 and 2426).

گویند مرا چو زاد مادر پستان بدهان گرفتن آموخت '
شب بر سر کاهواره من بیدار نشست و خنن آموخت '
لب خند نهاد بر لب من بر غنچه گل شکفتن آموخت '
دستم بگرفت و پا بپا برد نا شیوه راه رفتن آموخت '
بك حرف و دو حرف بر دهانم الفاظ نهاد و گفتن آموخت '

پس هستی من زهستی اوست '

تا هستم و هست دارش دوست '

Îraj Mîrzâ Jalâlu'l-Mamâlik.

PREFACE

THIS volume concludes the task which I undertook more than twenty-two years ago, and which represents the labour of a life-time, for ever since I began the study of Persian in the summer of 1880, being then only eighteen years of age, the desire to write a complete Literary History of Persia has increasingly possessed me. The first instalment, "from the earliest times until Firdawsī," carried the history down to the early days of the eleventh century of the Christian era, and was published in 1902; and the continuation, down to the Mongol Invasion in the middle of the thirteenth century, in 1906, both these volumes being published by Mr Fisher Unwin. Fourteen years elapsed ere the third volume, entitled A History of Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion (A.D. 1265-1502), saw the light. The reasons which led me to issue it in a form and under a title differing somewhat from its predecessors are explained on p. viii of the Preface, but essentially it constitutes the third volume of the Literary History of Persia, just as this, which deals with the last four centuries (A.D. 1500-1924), and is entitled, as foreshadowed in the same Preface (p. ix), A History of Persian Literature in Modern Times, is to be regarded as the fourth and last volume of the work.

Although I cannot regard this present volume as superior to its three predecessors in form or interest, and am fully aware of its defects, I think that it contains more new matter and represents more original research than the others. Owing to the opinion prevalent not only in Europe, but to a considerable extent in Turkey and India also, that poetry is the only department of Persian literature which merits much attention, and that little poetry worth reading has been produced since the time of Jámī, the literature of the last four centuries has been very much neglected, and the sources of which I have made use are almost exclusively Persian, and, until the nineteenth century is reached, when printing and lithography were gradually introduced into Persia, chiefly manuscript. In the formation of my Persian library I have always had regard to the requirements of my work rather than to mere beauty of illumination, illustration, or hand-writing, and I have been singularly fortunate in acquiring the very interesting collection of the late Sir Albert Houtum Schindler and a number of the rare and precious manuscripts collected by the late Hájji 'Abdu'l-Majíd Belshah. To Mr A. G. Ellis I am indebted for the generous loan, often for a period of several years, of many rare books to which I could not otherwise have obtained access; while for constant and ungrudging help I am under the deepest obligations to his successor in the Oriental Book Department of the British Museum, Mr E. Edwards, as well as to Dr L. Barnett, the Head of that Department.

I wish that I could have profited more by the counsel of my Persian friends, especially Mírzá Muḥammad Khán of Qazwín and Hájji Mírzá Yahyá of Dawlatábád, during the progress of this work, but to my old acquaintance Ḥusayn Dánish Bey of the Ottoman Public Debt, a notable man of letters both in Persian and Turkish, I am indebted for many valuable and illuminating observations. Another old friend, Sayyid Ḥasan Taqí-záda, fortunately chanced to visit this country after an absence of some fourteen years while the last sheets of this book were passing through the Press, and he most kindly read through the proofs and favoured me with numerous observations and corrections which will be noticed under the Errata and Addenda. From well-read and intelligent Persians the European student of their language can learn many things not to be found in books, at any rate in books to which he has access, while their taste and judgement, even if at times he cannot wholly agree with them, are almost always suggestive and deserving of consideration. Only a few days ago I received a visit from the learned Shaykh Kázim ad Dujaylí, an Arabic speaking Shí'a of 'Iráq who has recently joined the teaching staff of the London School of Oriental Studies and I enquired of him what, in his opinion, were the best Arabic books on Shí'a doctrine. He at once named the five following works, none of which I had previously heard of, much less seen, though all have been printed or lithographed in Persia

(1) Kashfu'l Ghita fi Akhbári Alí l Mustafà, by Shaykh Ja'far al Kabír

(2) Kitabu'l Qawáintn, by al Qummí

(3) Kitabu Rasá'il-shi Shaykh Murtadá al Ansari

(4) Jawáhiru'l-Kalam, by Shaykh Muhammad Hasan

(5) Kitabu'l Wasa'il, by Hájjí Mirzá Husayn an Nuri

I will not attempt to thank individually all those who by their sympathy and interest have encouraged me in my book, or who by their skilful craftsmanship have given it form and substance. The writing of it has been a pleasure and the completing of it is a source of thankfulness and satisfaction. Even its errors and imperfections will, I trust by provoking criticism and stimulating research, serve to advance and extend our knowledge of the subject, and if, as I hope, I have been single minded in this aim I shall prefer the reasoned criticism of competent scholars to the indiscriminating praise of over zealous friends, even as Sa'di says —

كُفِّيتَ أَذَىٰ يَا مَنْ تَعَدَّدَ مَحَاسِنِي ، عَلَانِيَتِي هَذَا وَلَمْ تَذَرِ نَاطِقِي ،

"Thou who recountest my virtues, thou dost me harm in sooth

Such is my outward seeming, but thou hast not known the truth

EDWARD G BROWNE

June 12, 1924

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
PREFACE	vii
PART I
AN OUTLINE OF PERSIAN HISTORY DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES
CHAP
I Some general considerations on the Safawí Dynasty	3
II The Creation of the Safawí Power to 930/1524 Sháh Isma'íl and his Ancestors	32
III Culmination and Decline of the Safawí Power, from Sháh Tahmásp (A D 1524-1576) to Sháh Husayn (A D 1694-1722)	84
IV An Outline of the history of Persia during the last two centuries (A D 1722-1922)	121
PART II
PERSIAN VERSE DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES
V Some general considerations on the later and especially the Religious Poetry of the Persians	161
VI Poets of the Classical Tradition Pre Qájár period (A D 1500-1800)	224
VII Poets of the Qájár period	298
PART III
PERSIAN PROSE DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES
VIII The orthodox Shí'a Faith and its exponents, the Muja hids and Mullás .	353
IX Prose writers until A D 1850	412
X The most modern developments (A D 1850 onwards)	458
INDEX	491

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

I.	Sháh 'Abbás I ("the Great")	Frontispiece
II.	Shaykh Abdál Pír-záda presenting the Uzbek leader's horse to Sháh 'Abbás	To face page 42
III.	Sháh 'Abbás II	" " 112
IV.	Karím Khán-i-Zand's Court	" " 140
V.	Karím Khán-i-Zand alone	" " 142
VI.	Áqá Muḥammad Khán and Ḥájji Ibráhm	" " 144
VII.	Shifá'í, poet and physician	" " 256
VIII.	Autograph of the poet Šá'ib	" " 266
IX.	Autograph of the poet Wişál	" " 300
X.	Ḥájji Mírzá Áqásí	" " 328
XI.	Autograph of the poet Yaghma	" " 338
XII.	Muzaffaru'd-Dín Mírzá with his tutor Riḍá-qulí Khán "Hidáyat"	" " 344
XIII.	Autograph of Mullá Muḥammad Báqir-i-Majlisí	" " 404
XIV.	Autograph of Mullá Šadrá	" " 408
XV.	Autograph of Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín-i-'Ámilí	" " 428
XVI.	Autograph of Mullá Muḥsin-i-Fayḍ	" " 432

ERRATA AND ADDENDA

(The letters Tz in brackets at the end of a note indicate that the correction was suggested by Taqí záda.)

- p 92, inset For Ṭasmásp read Ṭahmásp
- p 133, l 15 Insert commas after "but" and "ruined".
- p 170, l 14 "Read معابر ('ways,' 'passages') for مقابر ('Tombs'), which gives no good sense" [Tz] The washing of the feet before praying is a Sunní practice, the Shí'a confine themselves to mere stroking of the foot (mash) with the damp hand. The clasping of the hands mentioned in the succeeding misrâ' is also characteristic of the Sunnís, the Shí'a let them hang down by their sides.
- p 187, l 14 "For مرد read حلق. No Shí'a could have written this verse without exposing himself to the charge of blasphemy" [Tz]
- p 188, last three lines "The *Asrár i Shahádat*¹ is commonly ascribed to Mullá Aqá yí Darbandí, entitled 'the Promoter of mourning for the Holy Family' (Mura-vvuj i 'Azá dári yí Ahl i Bayt)" [Tz]
- p 220, last paragraph "Mention should be made of the poems of Sáfí 'Alí Sháh, and of his versified Persian commentary on the Qur'án" [Tz] (I can find no mention of him in the Majma'ul Fusahá, the Rizá'd il 'Arifin, the Bustánu's Siyáhat, or any of the Catalogues at my disposal.)
- p 221, "Rudáfi," and p 299, "Rudáfi" should be identical in spelling, and I believe that the latter form is the more correct.
- p 222 "Mention should be made of V. Zhukovskí's collection of Persian *Tasníf*s, with Russian translations, published at St. Petersburg in 1902. Berezine also published nine *Tasníf*s with English translations set to music and adapted to the piano." [T.z.] (I find that I possess the former work, which is entitled ОБРАЗЦЫ ПЕРСДСАГО НАРОДНАГО ТВОРЧЕСТВА, but I cannot identify the latter.)

¹ It is, however, ascribed, as I have ascribed it, to Isma'íl Khán Sarbáz by Edwards in his Catalogue of Persian Books in the British Museum, col. 302-3. The life of Mullá Aqá yí Darbandí, who died at an advanced age sometime before A.D. 1873, is given in the Qisasu'l 'Ulamá (Tíhrán lith. ed. of 1304/1886, pp. 75-9). Amongst his works mention is there made of one entitled Iksiru'l 'Ibádat ft Asrári'sh-Shahádat.

- p. 338. "Two half-verses (miṣrā') have been accidentally omitted after l. 7. The two verses should run thus" [T.z.]:—

عكسِ تو فتاده است در آئینه عالم

[ز آنروی همه ز نقحبه گشته است پدیدار]

ز نقحبه مُحالست ز تو دست بدارم]

تا آنکه بز نقحبه گی خود کنی اقرار

- p. 355, l. 1. There is some difference of opinion as to the proper vocalization of the place-name which I have written "Tanukábun." Taqí-záda thinks it should be "Tunukábun," while Riḍá-qulī Khán in his Anjuman-árá-yi-Náṣiri gives it as "Tanakábun."

- pp. 369-370. "The titles 'Muḥaqqiq-i-Ardabíli' and 'Muḡaddas-i-Ardabíli' both belong to Mullá Aḥmad, so that the first line on p. 370 should read "The same mujtahid of Ardabíl, also entitled Muḥaqqiq," etc.

- p. 370, last line. "Ḥájji Mírzá Ḥasan-i-Shírází and Ḥájji Mírzá Ḥasan-i-Ashtiyání are not to be mentioned in the same breath. The former was to the latter as a king is to a petty local governor." [T.z.]

- p. 373. "Áqá Jamál-i-Khwánsárí was the author of the well-known book on the superstitions of Persian women entitled Kitáb-i-Kulthúm Nana. His father, Áqá Ḥusayn-i-Khwánsárí, was called Ustád-i'l-Kull fi'l-Kull ('the Master of All in All'), and, besides many facetiae, wrote glosses on the Shahíd-i-thání's commentary on the Lum'a." [T.z.]

- p. 378, ll. 19 et seqq. "Many similar catechisms (with such titles as Risála-i-'amaliyya, Mas'ila, Nukhba, and the like) have been composed in the last century, and as many as a hundred may have been printed. One of the best known is the Jámí'ú'sh-Shattát of Mírzá Abu'l-Qásim ibnu'l-Ḥusayn ar-Riḍawí al-Qummí, author of the Kitáb-i-Qawántín." [T.z.] Concerning the last-named writer, see Edwards's Catalogue of Persian printed books, cols. 60 and 61.

- p. 393, ll. 8-9. "Alí Awsaṭ succeeded his father Ḥusayn as Imám, not 'Alí Akbar, who, together with the infant 'Alí Aṣghar, perished at Karbalá." [T.z.]

- p 407, l 14 "The Jāmiʿ : ʿAbbāsī was completed in 20 chapters, and has been printed repeatedly, but the first five chapters are often published separately for the instruction of children in elementary religious duties' [T z] According to Edwards (op cit, cols 407-8) chapters vi-xv were subsequently added to Shaykh ʿ-Baháʾí's unfinished work by Nizám b Husayn ʿ Sáwají
- p 407, fourth line from the end, and p 435, l 5 "The Abwábil Jann was not by Mullá Muhsin ʿ Fayd, but, so far as I remember, by Mullá Husayn Wáʿiz ʿ Káshifí, the author of the well known Anadr ʿ Suhayh" [T z] The real author appears to have been Muhammad b Fathulláh Rafiʿu d Din, called 'Wáʿiz ʿ Qazwini' ('the Preacher of Qazwin') See Edwards, op cit, cols 405 6
- p 410 "Sayyid Muhammad Báqir of Rasht was only a third or fourth rate theologian, and Mullá Ahmad ʿ Niráqí (p 411) only of the second class Much more important, though omitted here, are —
- (i) Áqá yí Bihbihání, the founder of the Usulí and Mujtahidí School, who flourished at the end of twelfth century of the hijra
 - (ii) Shaykh Jaʿfar ʿ Arab (also called al Kabír, 'the Great'), who was contemporary with Fath ʿAlí Sháh
 - (iii) Shaykh Muhammad Hasan, author of the Jawáhiruʿl Kalám, a large work in six volumes on Shiʿa Jurisprudence (see p ix supra)
 - (iv) Shaykh Murtadá al Ansárí, the founder of present day Shiʿa Law, and the Master of all the mujtahids of the last seventy years with the exception of—
 - (v) Shaykh Hádf of Tíhrán, who was also of the first class "
- p 430 "Shaykh Ahmad al Ahsáʾí was not an admirer and follower but a great enemy of Mullá Sadrá Of modern Persian philosophers mention should have been made of Mírzá Abul Hasan ʿ Jilwa, who died only some twenty years ago" [T z] I met him in Tíhrán in the winter of 1887-8 See my Year amongst the Persians, p 149
- p 435 "One of the best of Mullá Muhsin's works is the Kalimát ʿ Maknuna ('Hidden Words'), of which mention should have been made here" [T z]
- p 441 "Dr Muhammad of Kirmánsháh, called Kufuf, who died in 1326/1908, specialized in cardiac diseases, and first called attention to a peculiar murmur (called in French 'empiolement') characteristic of embolism, on which he published a monograph in French¹. He also wrote several medical treatises on the Diseases of Women and Children in Persian." [T.z.]

- p. 454, l. 1. "For I'timádu'd-Dawla read I'timádu's-Saltana." [T.z.]
- p. 468. "Newspapers existed in Persia before A.D. 1851, in the reign of Muḥammad Sháh (A.D. 1835-1848) and even in the later days of his predecessor Fath-'Alí Sháh. See the Káwa newspaper passim, especially No. 6 of the New Series (Darwa-i-Jadid)." [T.z.] The article in question appeared in the issue of June 8, 1921, pp. 14-16. It mentions a rather vague report of a Persian newspaper published at Dihlí in A.D. 1798, and a much more definite report of one published in Tíhrán in 1253/1837-8.
- p. 486, end. "The articles to which reference is here made were not by Mírzá Muḥammad Khán but by myself, writing under the pen-name of Muḥaṣṣil ('Student')." [T.z.]²
- p. 488. "To say 'Mírzá Kázim-záda,' 'Sayyid Jamál-záda,' 'Taqi-záda Khán' and the like is as contrary to Persian usage as to say in English 'Sir Grey' for 'Sir Edward Grey' and the like. Such titles as 'Mírza,' 'Sayyid' and Hájji can only be prefixed, as 'Khán,' 'Beg' and the like can only be suffixed, to personal names, such as Ḥasan, 'Alí and Muḥammad, not to patronymics." [T.z.]²

¹ I have been unable to find any trace of this alleged discovery or of the French term connoting it (which I think should be empilement), though I have consulted two eminent physicians on the subject.

² Taqí-záda's letter was received in time to correct the two passages to which the two concluding notes refer, but I have allowed them to stand because the first specifies the true authorship of the articles in question, while the second lays down a rule of which I had hitherto been unaware.

PART I.

AN OUTLINE OF PERSIAN HISTORY DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES

CHAPTER I

SOME GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS ON THE SAFAWÍ DYNASTY

The rise of the Safawí dynasty in Persia at the beginning of the sixteenth century of the Christian era was an event of the greatest historical importance, not only to Persia herself and her immediate neighbours, but to Europe generally. It marks not only the restoration of the Persian Empire and the re creation of the Persian nationality after an eclipse of more than eight centuries and a half, but the entrance of Persia into the comity of nations and the genesis of political relations which still to a considerable extent hold good. Mr R. G. Watson in the brief retrospect with which he opens his excellent *History of Persia from the beginning of the Nineteenth Century to the year 1858*¹ shows a true appreciation of the facts when he takes this period as his starting point, for in truth it marks the transition from mediaeval to comparatively modern times. The Arab conquest in the middle of the seventh century after Christ overthrew the Zoroastrian religion and the Sásánian Empire, and reduced Persia to the position of a mere province of the Caliphate until the Caliphate itself was destroyed by the Mongols or Tartars in the middle of the thirteenth century. Both before and after this momentous event there were, it is true, independent or quasi independent dynasties ruling in Persia, but these were generally of Turkish or Tartar origin like the Ghaznawís Saljuqs, Khwarazmsháhs and Houses of Chingíz and Tímur, or, if Persian like the Buwayhids, exercised control over a portion only of the old Persian Empire. To the Historical importance of the Safawí dynasty

¹ London. Smith and Elder, 1866

4 CONSIDERATIONS ON THE ŞAFAWÍ DYNASTY [PT I

Şafawí dynasty belongs the credit of making Persia "a nation once again," self-contained, centripetal, powerful and respected, within borders practically identical in the time of Sháh 'Abbás the Great (A.D. 1587-1628) with those of the Sásánian Empire. It was then that Işfahán, whither he transferred the seat of government from Qazwín, became, as the Persian saying runs, "Half the world" (Nisf-i-Jahán), or "Medio mundo" as Don Juan of Persia has it, abounding in splendid buildings and skilful craftsmen, frequented by merchants from distant lands, and visited by diplomatic missions, not only from India, Transoxiana and Turkey, but from almost every European state from Russia to Spain and Portugal.

Yet, in spite of its importance and the abundant materials available, no good complete history¹ of the Şafawí dynasty has yet been written. The outlines given by Sir John Malcolm and Sir Clements Markham in their histories of Persia are inadequate in scope and inaccurate in detail, and are based on very limited materials, and those not by any means the most authentic. The abundance and variety of the materials, the inaccessibility of many important sources of information, and the polyglot character of the documents concerned constitute serious obstacles to one who aspires to treat adequately of this period. The four most important contemporary Persian records of its earlier portion, down to the death of Sháh 'Abbás the Great, are the Şafwatü's-Şafá, containing the biography of Shaykh Şafiyyu'd-Dín, that celebrated saint of the thirteenth century from whom the dynasty derives its name; the Nasab-náma-i-Silsila-i-Şafawiyya on the genealogy of the family, with valuable biographical details of its earlier representatives not to be found elsewhere; the Lack of a satisfactory complete history of the dynasty.

Four important unpublished Persian sources.

¹ Of Krusinski's and Hanway's admirable accounts of the later Şafawí period I shall speak in chap. iii.

Ahsanî't-Tavârikh, completed in A D 1577, only about a year after the death of Shâh Tahmâsp, whose reign together with that of his father and predecessor Shâh Isma'îl, the founder of the dynasty, it records, and the Ta'rikh-i-'Âlam-âra-31-'Abbâsî, an immense monograph on the reign of Shâh 'Abbâs the Great. Not one of these has been published¹, much less translated, and all except the last are very rare even in manuscript. Of the Nasab-nâma and the 'Âlam-âra I am fortunate enough to possess copies which formerly belonged to the late Sir Albert Houtum-Schindler, while the incomparable generosity of Mr A. G. Ellis placed at my disposal manuscripts of the two other histories mentioned above. And though the authors of later general histories in Persian, such as Ridâ qulî Khân in his supplement to Mîrkhwând's Rawdatu's Safa, have made use of some of these works, they too often not merely abridge but grievously distort the passages they cite.

Untrustworthiness of later Persian compilations

Of such wanton distortion the following is a good instance. In July, A D 1599, Shâh 'Abbâs the Great sent to Europe a mission accredited to the Courts of Russia, Poland, Germany, France, Spain, England and Scotland, and to the Pope of Rome and the Seniors of Venice. This mission included Husayn 'Alî Beg² as Persian Envoy, with four Persian gentlemen or "knights" (caballeros, as they are called in Don Juan of Persia's narrative), fifteen Persian servants, the celebrated Sir Anthony Sherley with fifteen English attendants, two Portuguese friars, and five interpreters.

A flagrant example of perverted history

¹ Since this was written I have received through a Persian correspondent a copy of the excellent lithographed edition of the Safwatü's-Safâ published at Bombay in 1329/1911.

² Don Juan calls him (f 120^b) "Uzen Aly Bech," but Antonio di Govea has "Ussein Alibeg," which shows clearly that the first part of the name is Husayn, not Uzun, as I had at first supposed.

Travelling by way of the Caspian Sea and the Volga, they first visited Moscow, where they remained for five or six months; thence through Germany to Italy, where they were not permitted to go to Venice for fear of offending an Ottoman envoy who happened to be there at the time, but were well received at Rome, where they arrived in April, 1601, and remained for two months. Thence they proceeded by ship from Genoa to the south of France and so to Spain, where three of the four "Persian knights" adopted the Catholic faith and took the names of Don Philippe, Don Diego and Don Juan of Persia.

Sir Anthony Sherley, whose relations with his Persian colleague had from the first been very strained, separated

"Don Juan
of Persia."

himself from the mission at Rome, but up to that point the independent accounts written by himself and some of his companions¹ enable us to check Don Juan's narrative. Don Juan, however, having apostasized from Islám, dared not return to Persia to meet the fate of a renegade, so that for the tragic sequel we must turn to the Persian historians. In the 'Álam-árá-yi-Abbásí' under the year 1022/1613-4² we find an account of the arrival at Işfahán of ambassadors from the King of Spain, accompanied by several Christian priests and a Persian envoy returning from Europe³. The latter, who had incurred the Sháh's displeasure, was incontinently put to death in the most cruel manner, without being permitted any opportunity for explanation or apology; and the Sháh then explained to the Spaniards that he had dealt thus with him because of sundry treasonable and disrespectful acts of which he had been guilty during his mission, such as opening letters sealed with the royal seal and making known their contents, wearing mourning on the occasion of the Queen of Spain's death, and selling the credentials to the Pope with which he had been provided to a merchant who should impersonate him and derive what profit he could from the transaction "But," the Sháh concluded, 'the chief of his faults and the chief reason for his punishment was that he behaved so ill towards the attendants who accompanied him, and vexed them so much, that several of them adopted the Christian faith and remained in Europe in order to escape from his tyranny, so that zeal for Islám required his punishment, and thus he received his deserts'

¹ See especially The Sherley Brothers...by one of the same House (Chiswick, 1828), pp. 22-35.

² F. 230 of my MS. marked H. 14.

³ Although the envoy is here named Dengiz Beg Shámlú with the title of Yüz-báshí (Captain), not Húsayn 'Alí Beg, as in Don Juan's narrative (f. 120^b), there can, I think, be little doubt as to their identity.

Turning now to Ridá qulí Khan's supplement to the Rawdatu s-Safa, a general history of Persia compiled about A.D. 1858, we find an account of the same event obviously copied, with very slight modifications, from the 'Álam arayi 'Abbási', but with one important and most wanton alteration, for Sháh 'Abbás is there represented as saying that the chief of his ambassador's faults was that several persons were disposed to embrace Islam and come to Persia, but the Persian envoy treated them so ill that they repented of their intention, returned to the Christian faith, and remained in that country. For this deliberate falsification of history I can only account by supposing that Ridá qulí Khán did not wish to encourage the idea that a Persian Muslim could possibly become a Christian, but the moral I wish to draw is that the later Persian historians must be used with great caution, and that every statement should, where possible, be traced to contemporary records.

Before leaving this subject, I must refer to an erroneous conjecture of Sir John Malcolm's arising from an inadequate use of the Persian sources. In the year 1002/1593-4, being the seventh year of Sháh 'Abbás's reign, Jalal, the Chief Astrologer, foretold disaster to the occupant of the Throne, and advised that the Sháh should abdicate for a few days and substitute for himself some person worthy of death on whom the prediction of the stars might be fulfilled. This was accordingly done, and a man named Yúsufí was made king for three days, at the conclusion of which he was put to death, and Sháh 'Abbás resumed the Throne. Sir John Malcolm¹ says that this Yúsufí, "whom Persian authors take care to tell us was an unbeliever," was "probably a Christian," but this is an error; he belonged to a heterodox Muslim sect called Nuqṭawíyya ("People of the Point") who believed in metempsychosis and other heretical doctrines, and of whose appearance and destruction a full account is given by the 'Álam-árá-yi-'Abbásí'² and reproduced in the Rawḍatu's-Şafá. It is therefore essential, if a true history of the Şafawís is to be written, that we should go back to the original sources, and, as a preliminary, that these sources, at present existing only in manuscript, should be published.

An error of Sir
John Malcolm's.

The Persian histories, however, are only part of the material available for such a work: the numerous and in some cases excellent Turkish chronicles, published and unpublished, dealing with this period, and especially with the Turco-Persian wars of information.

Turkish sources

which continued almost without intermission during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, constitute an indispensable supplement and corrective. Almost more important is Firídún Bey's great collection of Turkish State Papers entitled Munsha'át-i-Salátn, compiled some time before 991/1583 and published at Constantinople in two volumes³ in 1274/1858.

¹ History of Persia (London, 1815), vol. i, p. 527.

² Ff. 46^b-47^b of my MS. H. 14.

³ When this was written, I possessed only the first volume, which contains 626 pp. and comes down to the year 966/1558. By the kindness of my friend Hısayn Dánish Bey I have since acquired the second volume also.

The diplomatic correspondence contained in this valuable and insufficiently-appreciated book is arranged chronologically and is partly in Turkish, partly in Arabic, and partly in Persian. From the time of Tímur onwards much of it is concerned with contemporary Persian affairs, and of the last half of the first volume a large portion consists of letters interchanged between the Sultáns Báyzáid II (A D 1482-1512), Salím I (A D 1512-1520), and Sulaymán I (A D 1520-1566) on the one hand, and Sháh Isma'íl (A D 1500-1524) and his son and successor Sháh Tahmásp (A D 1524-1576) on the other. There are also valuable journals of certain campaigns, such as that which culminated in the Battle of Cháldiran, so disastrous to the Persians, on August 23, 1514, wherein the movements of the Ottoman army and the incidents of their outward and homeward marches are chronicled day by day. Other State Papers, both Persian and Turkish, which exist only in manuscript, have hitherto remained practically unexplored¹.

A third class of materials of which it is impossible to overestimate the importance consists of the writings of Europeans who visited Persia during this period on diplomatic, missionary or commercial business. Thanks to the liberal attitude of Sháh 'Abbás the Great towards Christians, the number of these in his and the succeeding reigns was very large. The best general account of them and their works with which I have met is that given by the late M. Charles Schefer, in the Introduction (pp 1-cxv) to his edition of *l'Estat de la Perse en 1660*² by le Père Raphael du Mans, Superior of the Capuchin Mission at Isfahán, a man singularly qualified by his high character and intellectual attainments, as well as by his prolonged sojourn of fifty years (A.D. 1644-1696) in Işfahán, to speak with authority. The works enumerated by M. Schefer¹ are variously written in Dutch, English, French, German, Italian, Latin, Portuguese and Spanish, but many of the more important have appeared in two or three different languages. Of their authors (excluding the earlier Venetian envoys to the Court of Úzún Hasan, such as Caterino Zeno, Josepho Barbaro and Ambrosio Contarini, most of whom visited Persia during the latter half of the fifteenth century, and consequently before the rise of the Şafawí dynasty) the best known are Anthony Jenkinson, the Sherley brothers, Cartwright, Parry and Sir Thomas Herbert of the English, and of the others Antonio di Govea, Don Garcias de Silva Figuerosa, Olearius, Teixeira, Pietro della Valle, Tavernier, Thevenot, and last but not least Chardin and Pétis de la Croix. M. Schefer does not carry his survey beyond the seventeenth century, but the final downfall of the Şafawís before the Afghán onslaught in A.D. 1722 found an able historian in the Jesuit Père Krusinski, while letters from some of the Dutch merchants in Işfahán, a few of which have been published by H. Dunlop in his Perzië (Haarlem, 1912; pp. 242-7), serve to illuminate the tragic details of that disaster. From this time until the rise of the present Qájár dynasty towards the end of the eighteenth century comparatively few Europeans visited or resided in Persia, a fact due partly to the unsettled state of the country, and the consequent difficulties in the way of missionary or commercial enterprises, and partly to the changed political conditions. The object of the numerous diplomatic missions from various European countries which visited Persia during and immediately before the Safawí period was, in nearly all cases, to seek her cooperation in combating the formidable power of the Ottoman Turks, which was at its height during the period which began with their conquest of Constantinople in A D 1453 and culminated in the reigns of Sultans Salím "the Grim" and Sulaymán "the Magnificent" (A D 1512-1566), of whom the former conquered Egypt and the Holy Cities and assumed the title of Caliph, while the latter only failed by the narrowest margin to capture Vienna. So formidable did the Turkish menace appear to European statesmen that Busbecq, Ferdinand's ambassador at the Court of Sulaymán, expressed himself in the following remarkable words: "'Tis only the Persian stands between us and ruin. The Turk would fain be upon us, but he keeps him back. This war with him affords us only a respite, not a deliverance¹." In A D 1722 when the Safawí dynasty, long degenerate, finally collapsed, Persia was left for the moment a negligible quantity, the Turks had ceased to be a menace to Europe, and the bitter sectarian quarrel which lay at the root of two centuries of Turco-Persian warfare gradually lost much of its virulence, especially after the development of the more conciliatory policy of the great Nádir Sháh. Under these changed conditions the earlier European policy became at once unnecessary and impossible.

¹ Some other very interesting State Papers from the Dasturu'l Inshá of Sári 'Abdu'lláh Efendi (d 1079/1668) have also been published and annotated by the late M. Ch. Schefer in his Chrestomathie Persane (Paris, 1885), vol II, pp 218-259 and 331-334.

² Leroux, Paris, 1890, pp cxv+465.

¹ To these we must not omit to add the Mirátu'l-Mamálík ("Mirror of Kingdoms") of the gallant Turkish admiral Sídí 'Alí Ra'is, who travelled overland from India to Turkey in A.D. 1554-6, and was received by Sháh Tahmásp at Qazwín. Vambéry's English translation of this book (Luzac, London, 1899) leaves a good deal to be desired.

From this brief survey of the sources whence our knowledge of the Safawí dynasty is derived, we must now pass to the consideration of its chief characteristics. These, though clear enough in general outline, present a series of very interesting problems.

Chief characteristics of the Safawí dynasty

¹ Creasy's History of the Ottoman Turks (London, 1877), pp. 171-2 ad calc. Cf. Forster and Daniell's Life and Letters of Busbecq (London, 1881), vol. 1, pp. 221-2.

which even yet cannot be regarded in all cases as definitely solved. These problems group themselves under the headings of Nationality, Religion, Art and Literature, and in this order we shall now proceed to consider them.

NATIONALITY.

It has been said above that to the Şafawís belongs the credit of making Persia, after the lapse of eight centuries and a half, "a nation once again." This is true, but the nationalism which thus found expression was very different in several respects from the various forms of nationalism with which we are familiar at the present day. Language and race, which are the key-notes of the latter, played a very small part in it compared with religion. At no time was the mutual hatred of Turk and Persian more violent and bitter than during the eight years (A.D. 1512-1520) when Sultán Salím "the Grim," and Sháh Isma'íl, the founder of the Şafawí power, were the respective protagonists of the two nations. The despatches of this period, recorded by Firdún Bey, pass from the realm of diplomacy to that of vulgar abuse, and "rascally Red-heads" (Awbásh-i-Qizil-básh) is the politest expression wherewith the Turkish Sultán refers to his Persian foes. The cause of this intense hatred, equally adequate and obvious, will be discussed under the heading of "Religion," but it did not extend to race or language. When America entered the late War it was stated in the newspapers that in certain towns the people, to give vent to their hatred of everything German, collected all the German books they could find and burned them. No Turk or Persian of the sixteenth century would have given expression to his feelings of hostility in so puerile a fashion. On the contrary, it is a remarkable fact that while Sultán Salím and Sháh Isma'íl both possessed considerable poetic talent, the former wrote almost exclusively in Persian, and the latter, under the pen-

In what sense the Şafawí movement may be described as "Nationalist."

name of Khatá'í, almost exclusively in Turkish¹. Ottoman hatred was directed against the heretical Qizil-bdsh as mis-believers, not as Persians (Írání), while the Persian language (Fársí) continued to hold its position as the polite idiom of literature and diplomacy. And though the ancient conflict between Írán and Túrán was familiar to all educated Turks and Persians in the classical Sháh-náma, or "Book of Kings," of Firdawsí, Salím, in the following curious exordium to a despatch written in April, 1514 (Safar, 920)², compares himself to the legendary Persian kings Fírdún, Kay-Khusraw and Dárá, while likening his Persian opponent Sháh Isma'íl to the Turkish protagonist Afrásiyáb

اما بعد این خطاب مستطاب از جناب خلافت مآب ما که
قاتل الكفرة و المشرکین قانع اعداء الدین مرغمرانوف الفراعین
مغیر تبحان الحواقین سلطان الغزاة و المحاهدین فریدون فر
سکندر در کیمسرو عدل و داد دارای عالی نژاد سلطان سلیمشاه
بن سلطان بایزید بن سلطان محمد خانیم بسوی تو که فرمان
ده عمر بهسالار اعظم سردار معظم ضحاک روزگار داراب گیر و دار
افراسیاب عهد امیر اسمعیل نامداری سمت صدور یافت ...

[After the doxology] "But to proceed. This excellent address hath been issued on our part, we who are the Refuge of the Caliphate³, the slayer of the infidels and polytheists, ¹ See E. J. W. Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol II, p. 261, for a brief account of Salím's Persian Díwán, of which a most sumptuous edition, based on numerous MSS, by the late Dr Paul Horn, was printed in Berlin as a gift to the late Sulţán 'Abdu'l-Hamíd from the ex-Emperor of Germany in 1904. A number of Sháh Isma'íl's Turkish poems are given in my MS. of the Silsilatü'n-Nasab ı-Safawíyya. See J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, p. 412, where other references are given.

² See Fírdún Bey, vol I, p. 381.

³ An interesting proof that, contrary to the views of Professor Nalino, the position of Caliph was already claimed by Sulţán Salím, as it certainly was by his son and successor Sulaymán of the foci of the Faith, the humbler of the the extirpator¹, the tarnisher of the Kháqán's² crowns, the Pharaohs' prie who fight and strive for Religion, whose King of those that of Firdún, whose Court is as that of pomp is as whose justice and equity is as that of Kay-Alexander, ut Dará of noble descent, Sultán Salím Sháh, Khusraw, the Báyzáid, son of Sultán Muḥammad Khán, to son of Sultán the ruler of the Persians, the most mighty thee, who arpuissant leader, the Dahhák³ of the time, the general and combat, the Afrásiyáb of the age, the famous Daráb of the."

14 CONSIDER

Amír Isma'īl her hand I have only found one verse wherein

On the otl is definitely identified with the Persian as Sháh Isma'īl with the Shí'a cause. This verse occurs in the contrasted *vawárikh*⁴ and runs :

Aḥsanu 't-T فروزنده تاج و تخت کیان ' فرازنده اختر

كاويان 'minator of the crown and throne of the Kayánians⁵,

"The illuolder of the star of the Káwayán⁶."

The uphrest, the seven tribes who formed the back-bone

For the i-básh army were, as their names Rúmlú, Shámlú, of the Qizil Mawşillú, etc., sufficiently indicate, almost exclusively Turkish, as were the principal officers of the Şafawí army, whose war-cry, as we learn Extensive use of Turkish under the Şafawís.

, "he who rubs in the dust the noses of the Pharaohs,"

¹ Literally Sultán Salím's conquest of Egypt and overthrow of the alluding to gynasty.

Mameluke dáqán is the title given to the king of Túrán and the Turks.

² The Khó I believe, Mongol, and is identical with the alternative The word is and Khán.

forms Qá'án is the Azhi-daháka or Dragon-king of the Avesta, represented in the year 908/1502-3, f. 47^b of Mr A. G. Ellis's MS.

³ Dahhák⁴ Sháh-náma as an Arab usurper.

⁴ Under ond dynasty of the ancient legendary kings of Persia.

⁵ The ser was the patriotic blacksmith who led the revolt against the

⁶ Káwa rper Dahhák, and whose leather apron became the national foreign ushder the name of Dirafsh-i-Káwayán.

standard u

from the rare history of Sháh Ismá'il¹, was not "Long live Persia!" or the like, but, in the Turkish language, "O my spiritual guide and master whose sacrifice I am!"

صدای قربان اولدیعم و صدقه اولدیعم پروم مرشدم که شوه و
شعار فرقه' ناحیه' قزلش است در مسیه و مسره' کارزار انداختند'

More than a century after Ismá'il's death, when the capital had been transferred from the north of Persia to Isfahán, Turkish seems still to have been the language generally spoken at Court². These instances, to which might be added many more, will suffice to show how different was the spirit which animated the Sáfawí revival (though it undoubtedly produced that homogeneity which is the basis of national sentiment) from the Nationalism of the modern Pan-Turanians and "Young Persians," who put the extension and purification from foreign elements of the national language in the foremost place in their programme. At the present time the Turkish nationalists of Angora proclaim their new Caliph in Turkish instead of in the time-honoured Arabic, while Rídí Khán, the Persian military dictator, strives to introduce in his army a purely Persian military terminology.

RELIGION

Although the Muhammadans, according to their own statements, are divided into seventy-two or seventy-three different sects³, in later times at any rate, when certain controversies, such as those connected with Free Will and Predestination and the

Essential nature of the Sháh's doctrine

¹ Add 200 f 41* of the Cambridge University Library. See Sir E. Denison Ross's description of this book in the J R A S for 1896, vol. xxviii, pp. 264-283.

² See the second English edition of Olearius (London, 1669), p. 212.

³ See Shahrístán's Kutbu'l Milal, ed. Cureton, pp. 2-3.

Creation of the Qur'án, have sunk into a subordinate position, it may fairly be said that the capital and cardinal division is into the People of the Sunnat and the People of the Shí'a. Scattered communities of the latter are found in Asia Minor, Syria (where they are called Mutawallí, pl. Matawila), India and other Muhammadan lands, but in Persia only is the Shí'a doctrine not only that held by the great majority of the people, but also the State Religion. Before considering how it was raised to this position by the Şafawís about the year A.D. 1500, we must briefly consider its essential nature, and here we cannot do better than quote Shahristáni, the learned author of the Kitábu'l-Milal, or "Book of Sects," who died in the middle of the twelfth century, and who writes of them¹ as follows :

"THE SHÍ'A.—They are those who took the side of (Sháya'u) 'Alí in particular, declaring him to be Imám and Khalífa by explicit written deed, public or secret, and believing that the *Imám*ate cannot quit his posterity ; and that, should it do so, it is only by reason of wrong wrought by another, or prudential renunciation on his own part². They assert that the *Imám*ate is not a question of expediency but of principle: it does not depend on popular choice, so that an Imám can be set up by their appointment, but is an essential of Religion which it is not permissible for even the Apostle of God to ignore or neglect, and which cannot be transferred or committed to the common people. They are united in their assertion as to the necessity of such explicit designation [of the Imám on the part of his predecessor] and the established innocence of the Imáms of all sins, small or great, and also cited.

Shahristáni

¹ Op. cit., pp. 108-9.

² E.g. the second Imám, al-Hasan, elder son of 'Alí, ostensibly surrendered his rights "for prudential reasons" (taqiyya) to the Umayyad Mu'áwiya, but he could not really divest himself of the sacred quality of Imám.

in their principles of recognition and repudiation, alike in word, deed and faith, save in cases of 'prudential concealment' (taqiyya), in which point, however, some of the Zaydís oppose them. As to the actual transmission of the Imámate, however, there is much discussion and difference of opinion, and at each such transmission and stage there is an argument, a doctrine and a schism. There are five [principal] divisions, the Kaysánis, the Zaydís, the Imímís, the Extremists (Ghulát) and the Isma'ílís, of whom some incline in their principles to the Mu'tazila, some to the Sunna and some to Anthropomorphism (tashbîh)"

Put in a briefer, clearer and more concrete form, this means that all the Shí'a reject and repudiate the first three of the "Four Orthodox Calíphs" (al-Khulafá-u'r Ráshidun), Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthmán, who were elected, and hold that 'Alí, the cousin of the Prophet Muhammad and the husband of his daughter Fátima, should have succeeded him, and had in fact been nominated by him as his successor, and that after 'Alí the succession continued in his family by Divine Right. But even within this family there was no place for election, each Imám specifically choosing and nominating his successor, as the Prophet had chosen and nominated 'Alí. Amongst those who agreed in these general principles, however, there was plenty of room for disagreement as to details. Some of the Shí'a were content that the Imám should be descended from 'Alí, and were therefore ready to recognise Muhammad ibnu'l-Hanafíyya, "the son of the Hanafite woman", others, including the "Sect of the Seven" or Isma'ílís and the "Sect of the Twelve" or Imámís, with which last we are chiefly concerned, limited the succession to the children born to 'Alí by his wife Fatíma, the Prophet's daughter. With the third Imám Husayn, 'Alí's younger son by Fátima a new factor came into operation, for, according to quite early and respectable historians, such as al-Ya'qúbí¹, a daughter of the last Sásánian king of Persia, Yazdigird III, was given to him in marriage and bore him a son named 'Alí and entitled Zaynu'l-'Abidín, who was the Fourth Imám, and who combined in himself direct descent from the Prophet through his daughter Fátima and from the ancient Royal House of Persia. Small wonder that to him and his descendants the loyal devotion of the Persians was so freely rendered !

Why the Shí'a doctrine especially appeals to the Persians.

Thus we see that the quarrel between Sunní and Shí'a is by no means one of names and personalities only, but of the essentially antagonistic doctrines of Democracy and the Divine Right of Kings. The Arabs are, and always have been, in large measure democratic in their ideas, while the Persians have ever been disposed to see in their Kings divine or semi-divine beings. And if the idea of a humanly-elected head of the State be repugnant, how much more that of an Imám, or Vice-gerent of the Prophet, chosen by popular suffrage ? Hence the Imámí and Isma'ílí sects of the Shí'a have always had their stronghold in Persia, though under the Sunní Turkish dynasties of the Ghaznawís and Saljúqs they were kept in a state of subordination². They were more favoured under the Buwayhids and some of the Mongols, notably Gházán and Khudá-banda (Uljáytú), but they first obtained unquestioned supremacy throughout the whole of Persia under the Şafawís.

Who, then, were these Şafawís, when did they so vehemently adopt the Shí'a doctrine, and how did they succeed in establishing their supremacy ?

Origin of the Şafawís.

¹ He wrote about the end of the ninth Christian century, and his excellent history, edited by Houtsma, was published at Leyden in two vols. in 1883. See also vol. i of my Lit. Hist. of Persia, p. 229 and n. 2 ad calc.

² Abundant illustrations of this are furnished by such works of the Saljúq period as the Siyásat-náma and the Ráḥatü's-Şudúr.

Safawí is the adjective formed from Safí, a notable Súfí saint, named in full Safíyyu'd Dín, who died in Gílán in A D 1334 at the age of 85 in the odour of sanctity, and who claimed to be descended in the twentieth degree from Musa Kázim the seventh Imám¹. That he was really a man of note in his own time is proved beyond doubt by the way in which his contemporary, the great statesman and historian Rashídu'd-Dín Fadlu'lláh, speaks of him in his letters², and also by the fact that an immense biography of him, the Safwatü's Safa, was composed shortly after his death, largely from data supplied by his son Sadru'd Dín, which has been used directly or indirectly by all the historians of the great dynasty whereof he was the ancestor. Sháh Isma'íl, the actual founder of the dynasty, was sixth in descent from him, but I have found no evidence to prove that he himself adopted the violent Shí'a views characteristic of his descendants. The little evidence available points rather the other way, for in a letter written to Isma'íl's son Sháh Tahmasp in A D 1529-30 by the Uzbek leaders, they say that, according to what they have heard, Shaykh Safíyyu'd-Dín was a good Sunní, and express their astonishment that Tahmasp "neither follows the example of His Holiness Murtadá 'Alí, nor that of his forefather"³. Khwája 'Alí, grandson of Şafíyyu'd-Dín and great great grandfather of Sháh Isma'íl, is the first member of the House who shows a strong Shí'a bias⁴ and holds converse in his dreams with the Imáms, and his grandson Junayd and his great grandson Haydar are the first to assert their claims with the sword and to die on the field of battle.

At the beginning of the fifteenth century, then, the Safawís were simply the hereditary pírs, murshíds, or spiritual

¹ For the full pedigree, see the J R A S for July, 1921, p 397 and n 1 ad calc

² Ibid, pp 417-18

³ For the text of this passage, see p 43 infra

⁴ See the J R A S for July, 1921, pp 407-8 directors of an increasingly large and important order of darwishes or Şúfis which drew its adherents not only from

The Şafawís
originally a religious order.

Persia but from the Turkish provinces of Asia

Minor, where they appear to have carried on an active propaganda¹. How successful this promised to become in later days is shown by the dreadful massacre of some forty thousand of the Shí'a perpetrated in his dominions by Sultán Salím "the Grim" as a preliminary to his great campaign against Sháh Isma'íl in A.D. 1514². To these devoted darwishes or muríds, as their war-cry cited above (p. 15) sufficiently shows, the head of the Şafawí House, even after he had ceased to be a Shaykh and had become a Sháh, continued to be regarded as the pir or murshid. Chardin, Raphaël du Mans³, and other reputable authorities have scoffed at the title "Great Sophi,"

The term
"Great Sophi."

by which the Şafawí Sháhs are commonly designated by contemporary European diplomatists and writers, on the ground that the Şúfis were generally poor and humble people and of doubtful orthodoxy, despised and rejected of men, and unlikely to lend their name to the Great King of Persia. But in the Persian histories of the Şafawís, even in the Silsilatü'n-Nasab compiled about the time when Raphaël du Mans wrote, and still more in the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh and other earlier chronicles, the Şúfis, especially the Şúfis of Rúm (i.e. Turkey in Asia), are represented as the cream of the Şafawí army; we read of "self-sacrifice, courage, and whatever else is inseparable from Şúfi-hood"⁴ and of unworthy and disloyal acts described as "un-Şúfi-like" (ná-Şúfí). What, then, more natural than that he who was regarded not only as the Sháh of Persia

¹ See Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. ii, pp. 227-8 ad calc.

² Ibid., p. 259, and pp. 71-3 infra.

³ L'Etat de la Perse en 1660, ed. Schefer, pp. 16-17.

⁴ See J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, the Persian words on the illustration facing p. 415.

but as the Shaykh of these devoted darwīshes or Sūfis, whose courage amazed contemporary Venetian travellers, should be called in Europe "the Great Sufi" or "Sopli"? At any rate no more probable origin has been suggested for this term, which can scarcely be regarded as a corrupt pronunciation of سافلی

It would appear that an idea prevailed in Europe (based, perhaps on vague recollections of the Magi or Wise Men from the East) that Sopli was derived from σοφός, an opinion which Don Juan of Persia¹ is at pains to refute, for, having described how Sháh Isma'íl immediately after he had conquered Tabriz adopted the title of "gran Sopli de Persia," he adds "no Sopli por sabio, como algunos mal entendieron, pensando que venia de Sôpos vocablo Griego, sino de Sopli, que es vocablo Persiano, y quiere dezir, lana, ô algodón" ("Not Sopli in the sense of wise, as some have erroneously supposed, thinking it to come from the Greek word σοφός, but from Sopli, which is a Persian word meaning wool or cotton²")

The rapid rise to power of Isma'íl is one of the most remarkable events in Persian history, especially in view of his forlorn and threatened childhood. His father, Shaykh Haydar, was killed in A D 1490 when he was only about three years of age³, and he and his two brothers, of whom the elder, Sultán 'Alí, also fell in battle about A D 1495, were in constant danger from the Turkmán rulers of the "White Sheep" dynasty, and had many hair-breadth escapes in which they owed their lives to the devoted loyalty of their faithful Sufis. Only seven of these accompanied Isma'íl when, at the age of thirteen, he set out from Láhiján for Ardabíl to win a kingdom or perish in the attempt, but at every

¹ Ed Valladolid, 1604, f 50^a

² Krusinski agrees with this view. See p 68 of the English version (London, 1728)

³ He was born on Rājab 5, 892 (June 27, 1487) stage he received reinforcements, so that at Tárúm his army numbered fifteen hundred men, and by the time he reached Arzinján on his way to attack Farrukh-Yasár, king of Shírwán, it had increased to seven thousand. Within a year he had taken Tabríz, been crowned king of Persia, and, despite

Sháh Isma'íl
enforces the Shí'a doctrine at Tabríz.

the attempts of his counsellors to dissuade him, imposed the Shí'a doctrine on his subjects. He was warned that two-thirds of the people of Tabríz were Sunnís, and that the introduction into the prayers and professions of Faith of the distinctively Shí'a clauses, and more especially the cursing of the first three Caliphs, Abú Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthmán, might lead to trouble. "God and the Immaculate Imáms are with me," he replied, "and I fear no one. By God's help, if the people utter one word of protest, I will draw the sword and leave not one of them alive¹." He was as good as his word, and when the above-mentioned anathema was uttered all men were commanded, on pain of death, to exclaim, "May it (i.e. the curse) be more, not less!" (Bísh bád, kam ma-bád!).

Ruthless and bloodthirsty as he showed himself, Sháh Isma'íl, as depicted by contemporary Venetian travellers,

Character of Sháh Isma'íl.

had many attractive characteristics. At the age of thirteen he was, according to Caterino Zeno,

"of noble presence and a truly royal bearing, ... nor did the virtues of his mind disaccord with the beauty of his person, as he had an elevated genius, and such a lofty idea of things as seemed incredible at such a tender age." Angiolello describes him as "very much beloved...for his beauty and pleasing manners"; and, when grown to man's estate, as "fair, handsome, and very pleasing; not very tall, but of a light and well-framed figure; rather stout than slight, with broad shoulders. His hair is reddish; he only wears moustachios, and uses his left hand instead of his right. He is as brave as a game-cock, and stronger than any of his lords ; in the archery contests, out of the ten apples that are knocked down, he knocks down seven." The anonymous merchant, after describing Isma'íl's doings in Tabriz, adds "from the time of Nero to the present, I doubt whether so bloodthirsty a tyrant has ever existed," yet adds a little further on that at Caesarea "he caused proclamation to be made that everyone who brought provisions for sale should be liberally paid, and forbade his men, under pain of death, to take even as much as a handful of straw without paying for it, as it was a friendly city." He further describes him as "amiable as a girl, left-handed by nature, as lively as a fawn, and stronger than any of his lords," and says that "this Sophi is loved and revered by his people as a god, and especially by his soldiers, many of whom enter into battle without armour, expecting their master Ismael to watch over them in the fight."

¹ The original text is quoted on p. 53 infra, ad calc.

The closest historical parallel to the Safawí movement is, I think, afforded by the propaganda in favour of the 'Abbásids carried on by Abú Muslim in Persia

Parallel between Safawí and 'Abbásid propaganda.

with so great a success in the first half of the eighth century of our era. Both were consciously religious and only unconsciously, though none the less truly, racial ; the chief difference was that the later movement had to confront in the person of the Ottoman Sultán Salím a far more energetic and formidable antagonist than the earlier in the Umayyad Caliph Marwán, and hence its more limited success ; for while the 'Abbásid cause triumphed throughout almost the whole of the Eastern lands of Islám, the Safawí triumph was limited to Persia,

Why the Turco-
Persian quarrel became so embittered at this time.

though without doubt at one time it threatened Turkey as well. Fear is the great incentive to cruelty, and it was chiefly fear which caused Sultán Salím to massacre in cold blood some forty thousand of his Shí'a subjects. Fear, however, was not the only motive of this ferocity ; with it were mingled anger and disappointment. For Sultán Salím was what is now called a Pan-Islamist, and his ambition was to be not merely the Sovereign of the greatest and most powerful Muhammadan State, but the supreme head of the whole Muslim world. His conquest of Egypt and the Holy Cities of Mecca and Madína in A.D. 1517, and his assumption of the title of Caliph, which, whether by threats or promises, or a combination of the two, he induced the last titular 'Abbásid Caliph to surrender to him, might well have given him this position but for Sháh Isma'íl and the barrier of heterodoxy which he had erected between the Turks, Egyptians and other Sunnís to the West and their fellow-believers to the East in Transoxiana, Afghánistán, Balúchistán and India. The Persians not only refused to recognise Sultán Salím as Caliph, but repudiated the whole theory of the Caliphate. The Turkish victory over the Persians at Cháldirán in August, 1514, failed of its results owing to the refusal of the Ottoman troops to push home their advantage, and thus robbed the succeeding Egyptian campaign of its full measure of success, and left a lasting soreness which served greatly to weaken the political power of Islám and to impose a check on Turkish ambitions whereby, as we have seen, Europe greatly profited. Between A.D. 1508, when it was taken by the Persians, and A.D. 1638, when it was finally recovered by the Turks, Baghdád, once the metropolis of Islám, changed hands many times as the tide of these bitter and interminable wars ebbed and flowed, until the increasing weakness and effeminacy of the later Şafawí kings left Turkey in undisputed possession of Mesopotamia.

ART AND LITERATURE.

One of the most curious and, at first sight, inexplicable phenomena of the Şafawí period is the extraordinary dearth of notable poets in Persia during the two centuries of its duration. Architecture,

Remarkable lack of great poets under the Şafawís.

miniature-painting and other arts flourished exceedingly, the public buildings with which Sháh 'Abbás adorned his realms, and especially his capital Isfahán, have not ceased to command the admiration of all who beheld them from his time until the present day, and Bihzád and the other artists who flourished at the Tímúrid court of Herát found worthy successors in Ridá-yi-'Abbásí and his colleagues. Yet, though poets innumerable are mentioned in the *Tuhfa-i-Sámi*¹ and other contemporary biographies and histories, there is hardly one (if we exclude Jámí, Hátífí, Hilálí and other poets of Khurásán, who were really the survivors of the school of Herát) worthy to be placed in the first class. During the seventy stormy years of Tímúr's life there were at least eight or ten poets besides the great Háfiz, who outshone them all, whose names no writer on Persian literature could ignore, while during the two hundred and twenty years of Safawí rule there was in Persia, so far as I have been able to ascertain, hardly one of conspicuous merit or originality. I say "in Persia" advisedly, for a brilliant group of poets from Persia, of whom 'Urśí of Shíráz (d. A.D. 1590) and Sáb of Isfahán (d. A.D. 1670) are perhaps the most notable, adorned the court of the "Great Moghuls" in India, and these were in many cases not settlers or the sons of emigrants, but men who went from Persia to India to make their fortunes and returned home when their fortunes were made. This shows that it was not so much lack of talent as lack of patronage which makes the list of distinctively Safawí poets so meagre. The phenomenon is noticed by Ridá-qulí Khán in the preface to his great anthology of Persian poets entitled *Majma'u-l-Fuṣahá*², composed in the middle of the last century, as well as by European scholars like the late Dr Ethé, who have written on Persian poetry; with this difference, that the European writers commonly speak of Jámí as the last great Persian poet, and consider that during the four centuries which have elapsed since his death Persia has produced no poet of eminence, while Ridá-qulí Khán, rightly as I think, places certain modern poets of the Qájár period, notably such men as Qá'ání, Furúghí and Yaghmá, in the first rank.

¹ This biography of contemporary poets by Prince Sám Mirzá, the son of Sháh Isma'íl, is another work which urgently needs publication.

² Lithographed at Tíhrán in two large volumes in 1295/1878.

That no great poet should have arisen in Persia in days otherwise so spacious and so splendid as those of the Şafawís seemed to me so remarkable that I wrote to my learned and scholarly friend Mírzá Muḥammad Khán of Qazwín, to whose industry and acumen students of Persian owe so much, to ask him, first, whether he accepted this statement as a fact, and secondly, if he did, how he explained it. In reply, in a letter dated May 24, 1911, he wrote as follows:

Reasons for this dearth of poets.

"There is at any rate no doubt that during the Şafawí period literature and poetry in Persia had sunk to a very low ebb, and that not one single poet of the first rank can be reckoned as representing this epoch. The chief reason for this, as you yourself have observed, seems to have been that these kings, by reason of their political aims and strong antagonism to the Ottoman Empire, devoted the greater part of their energies to the propagation of the Shí'a doctrine and the encouragement of divines learned in its principles and laws. Now although these divines strove greatly to effect the religious unification of Persia (which resulted in its political unification), and laid the foundations of this present-day Persia, whose inhabitants are, speaking generally, of one faith, one tongue, and one race, yet, on the other hand, from the point of view of literature, poetry, Şúflism and mysticism, and, to use their own expression, everything connected with the 'Accomplishments' (as opposed to the

Mírzá Muhammad Khán's views on this subject.

'Legalities')¹, they not merely fell far short in the promotion thereof, but sought by every means to injure and annoy the representatives of these 'Accomplishments,' who were generally not too firmly established in the Religious Law and its derivatives. In regard to the Šufís particularly they employed every kind of severity and vexation, whether by exile, expulsion, slaughter or reprimand, slaying or burning many of them with their own hands or by their sentence. Now the close connection between poetry and Belles Lettres on the one hand, and Súffism and Mysticism on the other, at any rate in Persia, is obvious, so that the extinction of one necessarily involves the extinction and destruction of the other. Hence it was that under this dynasty learning, culture, poetry and mysticism completely deserted Persia, and the cloisters, monasteries, retreats and rest-houses [of the darwúshes] were so utterly destroyed that there is now throughout the whole of Persia no name or sign of such charitable foundations, though formerly, as, for instance, in the time of Ibn Baṭúṭa, such institutions were to be found in every town, hamlet and village, as abundantly appears from the perusal of his Travels, wherein he describes how in every place, small or great, where he halted, he alighted in such buildings, of which at the present day no name or sign exists. Anyone ignorant of the circumstances of the Safawí period might well wonder whether this Persia and that are the same country, and the creed of its inhabitants the same Islám; and, if so, why practically, with rare exceptions, there exists now not a single monastery throughout the whole of Persia, while in those parts of Turkey, such as Mesopotamia, Kurdistán and Sulaymáníyya, which did not remain under the Šafawí dominion, there are many such buildings just as there were in Ibn Baṭúṭa's days.

"At all events during the Šafawí period in place of great

و بقول خودشان هرچه معلق بكماليات بود (در مقابل شرعيات)¹

poets and philosophers there arose theologians, great indeed, but harsh, dry, fanatical and formal, like the Majlisís, the Muḥaqqiq-i-thání, Shaykh Ḥurr-i-ʿAmulí and Shaykh-i-Bahá'í, etc."

Most professional poets in the East are primarily panegyrists, and if Riḍá-qulí Khán is correct in his assertion that the Şafawí kings, especially Tahmásp and 'Abbás the Great, expressed a wish that laudatory poems should be addressed to the Imáms rather than to themselves, another and a more creditable cause for the diminution of poets in their realms is indicated. More material benefits were to be looked for from the Great Moghuls¹ than from the Imáms, and hence the eyes and feet of the more mercenary poets turned rather to Dihlí than to Karbalá. But to religious poetry commemorating the virtues and sufferings of the Imáms a great impetus was given in Persia, and of these poets Muḥtasham of Káshán (d. A.D. 1588) was the most eminent. But, besides these more formal and classical elegies, it is probable that much of the simpler and often very touching verse, wherein the religious feelings of the Persians find expression during the Muḥarram mourning, dates from this period, when every means was employed to stimulate and develop these sentiments of devotion to the House of 'Alí and detestation of its oppressors. On the other hand the dramatisation of these moving scenes, which now form so remarkable a feature of the Muḥarram mourning (Ta'ziya), and are often described by European writers as "Miracle Plays," seems to have taken place at a much later period. That careful writer Olearius spent the month of Muḥarram, A.H. 1047 (May-June, 1637) at Ardabíl, the sanctuary of the Şafawí family, and gives a very full description of all that he saw the mournings, wailings, lamentations and cuttings culminating on the 'Ashūra, the tenth day of the month or Ruz i-Qatl, but he makes no mention of any dramatic representations, so that it is pretty certain that none existed at that time. To elucidate this point I addressed enquiries to two well informed and intelligent Persian friends, Sayyid Taqī zāda and Mīrzā Husayn Dānīsh. The former expressed the opinion that while the solemn recitations known as Rawda-khwānt (i.e. the reading from the pulpit of the Rawdatu sh-Shuhadā, or "Garden of the Martyrs," and other similar books) dates from Safawī times, the Ta'ziya gardān, shabth, or "Passion Play" was of much later date, and perhaps owes something to European influences. The latter also placed the origin of these "Passion Plays" (of which Sir Lewis Pelly's translations give a good idea to the English reader) about the end of the eighteenth or beginning of the nineteenth century, i.e. at the beginning of the Qājār period, and incidentally cited the following interesting verses by Shaykh Ridā yī Kurd in illustration of the view that the Persian dislike of 'Umar is due not less to the fact that he conquered Persia and overthrew the Sāsānian dynasty than to his usurpation of the rights of 'Alī and Fātima

¹ The liberality of Humáyún towards poets and men of letters is especially noticed under the year of his death (962/1555) in the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh. This and the succeeding topics will be more fully discussed in a subsequent chapter.

شکست عمر پشتِ هُزُرانِ احمرّا

بر باد فنا داد رگ و ریشه احمرّا

این عریده بر غصب خلافت و علی بست

با آلِ عمر کسه قدیم است احمرّا

"'Umar broke the back of the lions of the thicket

He cast to the winds the thews and sinews of Jamshīd

This quarrel is not about the usurpation of the Caliphate from 'Alī

Persia has an ancient grudge against the House of 'Umar"

In conclusion we must not omit to notice another step taken by the Safawī kings which added greatly to the consolidation of Persia and the prevention of a continued outflow of men and money from the country, namely the exaltation and popularisation of Mashhad, Qum and other holy cities of Persia, whereby the tide of pilgrims was to a considerable extent confined within the limits of their Empire, in which, as we have seen, the most sacred shrines of Karbalá, Najaf and Mashhad 'Alí were long included before they finally fell under Turkish dominion'.

POSTSCRIPT.

I am indebted to my friend Mr H. L. Rabino, of H.B.M.'s Consular Service, for the following valuable notes on the celebration of the Muḥarram mourning at Baghdád as early as the fourth Muhammadan (tenth Christian) century. I have only the text of the two passages (one in German and the other in Persian): the reference was probably given in the accompanying letter (December 23, 1922), which has unfortunately been mislaid. I have an impression that they are taken from one of Dorn's articles, probably published in the Mélanges Asiatiques. The whole quotation runs as follows :

"Die 'ta'sieh' wurden in Baghddad i. J. 963 von der Buwaihiden Mu'iss-ed-daula eingeführt, wie uns Ahmed b. Abu'l-Feth in seinem Werke احسن القصص الخ (Inscr. Mus. As. No. 567^a) berichtet."

بنای تعزیه سید الشهداء در بغداد در سنه ۳۰۲ هجری
در تاریخ ابن کثیر شامی آورده که معز الدولة احمد بن بویه
در بغداد در دهه اول محرم امر کرد تمامی بازارهای بغداد را
بسته مردم سیاه عزا پوشیدند و بتعزیه سید الشهداء پرداختند
چون این قاعده در بغداد رسم نبود لهذا علمای اهل سنت آنرا
بدعتی بزرگ دانستند و چون بر معز الدولة دستی نداشتند چاره

¹ See Krusinski, op. cit., pp. 159-161.

حر تسلیم نتواستند، بعد از آن هر ساله تا انقراض دولت دیالمه
شیعیان در ده روزِ اوّل محرم در جمیع بلاد رسم تعزیه بها می
آوردند و در بغداد تا اوایل سلطت طغرل سلجوقی برقرار بود.

"Institution of the mourning for the Chief of Martyrs in Baghdád in A H 352 [A D 963]."

"It is related in the History of Ibn Kathir the Syrian that Mu'izzu'd Dawla Ahmad ibn Buwayh issued orders in Baghdád that during the first ten days of Muharram all the bazars of Baghdád should be closed, and that the people should wear black for mourning and betake themselves to mourning for the Chief of Martyrs [the Imám Husayn]. Since this procedure was not customary in Baghdád, the Sunní doctors regarded it as a great innovation, but since they had no control over Mu'izzu'd Dawla, they could do nothing but submit. Thereafter every year until the collapse of the Daylamite [or Buwayhid] dynasty, this custom of mourning was observed by the Shí'ites in all countries during the first ten days of Muharram. In Baghdád it continued until the early days of the reign of Tughril the Saljuq."

CHAPTER II.

THE CREATION OF THE ŞAFAWÍ POWER TO 930/1524. SHÁH ISMA'IL AND HIS ANCESTORS.

That Shaykh Şafíyyu'd-Dín, the saintly recluse of Ardabil from whom the Şafawí kings of Persia derived their descent and their name, was really an important and influential person in his own day, is a fact susceptible of historical proof. He who wins a throne and founds a great dynasty destined to endure for more than two centuries is apt, if he be of lowly origin, to create, or allow to be created, some legend connecting his ancestors with famous kings, statesmen or warriors of old, or otherwise reflecting glory on a House which, till he made it powerful and illustrious, held but a humble place in men's esteem. But Sháh Isma'íl, sixth in descent from Shaykh Şafí (as we shall henceforth call him for brevity), who founded the Şafawí dynasty about the beginning of the sixteenth century of the Christian era, and raised Persia to a position of splendour which she had scarcely held since the overthrow of the ancient and noble House of Sásán by the Arabs in the seventh century, had no occasion to resort to these devices; for whether or no Shaykh Şafí was directly descended from the seventh Imám of the Shí'a, Músá Kázim, and through him from 'Alí ibn Abí Tálíb¹ and Fátima the Prophet's daughter (and his claim is probably at least as good as that of any contemporary Sayyid), two facts prove that in his own time (the thirteenth century) he was highly accounted as a saint and spiritual guide.

¹ The full pedigree is given (with only slight variants) in the Şafwatu's-Şafá, Aḥsanu't-Tawdríkh, Silsilatu'n-Nasab-i-Şafawiyya and most other histories of this dynasty, and runs as follows: (1) Şafíyyu'd-Dín Abu'l-Faṭḥ Isháq b. (2) Amínu'd-Dín Jibrá'íl b. (3) Şálih b. (4) Quṭbu'd-Dín Aḥmad b. (5) Şaláḥu'd-Dín Rashíd b. (6) Muḥammad Ḥáfiz b. (7) 'Awaḍ al-Khawáṣṣ b. (8) Fírúزشáh-i-Zarrín-kuláh b. (9) Muḥammad b. (10) Sharafsháh b. (11) Muḥammad b.

The first and more important of these two facts is the concern shown by that great Minister Rashidu'd-Dín Fadlu'lláh for his welfare, and the desire to win

The high esteem in which he was held by the Minister
Rashidu'd-Dín Fadlu'lláh.

his favour and intercession. In the very rare collection of the Minister's letters known as the Munsha'ât : Rashid there occur two documents affording proof of this. The first is a letter

(No 45 of the collection, ff 145^b-149^a of the MS) addressed to Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Dín himself, offering to his monastery (Khangdli) a yearly gift of corn, wine, oil, cattle, sugar, honey and other food-stuffs for the proper entertainment of the notables of Ardabíl on the anniversary of the Prophet's birthday, on condition that prayers should be offered up at the conclusion of the feast for the writer and benefactor. The second (No 49, ff 161^a-169^b) is addressed by Rashid to his son Mír Ahmad, governor of Ardabíl, enjoining on him consideration for all its inhabitants, and especially 'to act in such wise that His Holiness the Pole of the Heaven of Truth, the Swimmer in the Oceans of the Law, the Pacer of the Hippodrome of the Path, the Shaykh of Islám and of the Muslims, the Proof of such as attain the Goal, the Exemplar of the Bench of Purity the Rose tree of the Garden of Fidelity, Shaykh Safiyyu'l Millat wa'd Dín (may

(12) Hasan b (13) Muhammad b (14) Ibráhím b (15) Ja'far b
(16) Muhammad b (17) Isma'íl b (18) Muhammad b (19) Sayyid
Ahmad al A'rábí b (20) Abu Muhammad Qásim b (21) Abu'l Qásim Hamza b (22) AL IMÁM MÚSÁ AL KÁZIM, the seventh Imám and fifth in direct descent from 'Alí and Fátima

¹ See my article on the Persian MSS of the late Sir Albert Houtum Schindler, K C I E in the J R A S for Oct 1917, pp 693-4, and my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion (hereinafter sometimes denoted as "Pers Lit iii"), pp 80-87

God Most High perpetuate the blessings of His Holy Exhalations!) may be well pleased with and grateful to thee¹." These letters, and especially the second, which is filled with the most exaggerated praises of Shaykh Şafí, sufficiently prove the high repute which he enjoyed amongst his contemporaries².

The second fact germane to our thesis is that comparatively soon after his death a most extensive monograph on his life, character, teachings, doctrines, virtues and miracles was compiled by one of his followers, the darwish Tawakkul³ ibn Isma'íl, commonly called Ibnu'l-Bazzáz, apparently under the inspiration and direction of Shaykh Şadru'd-Dín, who succeeded his father Shaykh Şafí as head of the Order and held this position for fifty-eight years (A.D. 1334-1392). This rare and important book has never been printed⁴, but is the chief source of all later accounts of the head of the family and dynasty, in most of which it is frequently and explicitly cited. A much later recension of it was made in the reign of Sháh Tahmásp (A.D. 1524-1576) by a certain Abu'l-

The great monograph on his life entitled Şafí-watí's-Şafí.

و نوعی سازی که جناب قطب فلك حقیقت، و سبّاح بحار¹
شریعت، مسّاح مضمار طریقت، شیخ الاسلام و المسلمین، برهان
الواصلین، قدوه، صُقه، صفا، گلبن دوحه، وفا، شیخ صفی المله
و الدین ادام الله تعالی برکات انفاسه الشریفة از تو راضی و شاکر باشد،

² Shaykh Şafí died in 735/1334 at the age of 85. Rashídu'd-Dín was put to death in A.D. 1318 at the age of 70 or somewhat over.

³ Or Túklí (توكلی) as it is written and pointed in a note in Mr Ellis's manuscript.

⁴ Since this was written I have obtained through the kindness of one of my Persian correspondents a copy of an excellent lithographed edition published at Bombay in 1329/1911, of the very existence of which I was ignorant when this chapter was written.

Fath al-Husaynī I have personal knowledge of only three manuscripts, Add. 11745 of the British Museum¹; No. 87 of the Pote Collection in the library of King's College, Cambridge²; and a fine copy made at Ardabil in 1030/1621, now belonging to Mr A. G. Ellis, who, with his customary generosity, placed it at my disposal for as long as I required it. This exhaustive work comprises an Introduction, twelve chapters, and a Conclusion, each of which is divided into numerous sections³, and its contents are summarized by Rieu with his usual precision. It contains interesting matter, diluted by much that is wearisome save to a devoted disciple, and represents on a more extensive scale the type of hagiography familiar to all Persian students in such books as the Manāqibu'l-ʿArifin of Afīākī, available in the English version of Redhouse⁴ and the French of Huart⁵. The extracts from it included in most later histories of the family, notably the *Silsilat-u'n-Nasab-i-Safawiyya*⁶, will suffice to satisfy the curiosity of most readers, though a careful perusal and analysis of the original work would undoubtedly yield results of value, most of the anecdotes and sayings being vouched for by Shaykh Sadru'd-Dīn. But before further discussing Shaykh Saff and his descendants something more must be said about his ancestors.

¹ See Rieu's Pers. Cat., pp. 345-6.

² See my Suppl. Hand-list, p. 137, No. 837.

³ Ch. viii comprises no less than 27 sections.

⁴ Prefixed to his metrical translation of the First Book of the Mesnevi (Mathnawi) of Jalālu'd-Dīn Rūmī, published in Trubner's Oriental Series in 1881. The Manāqib, or "Acts of the Adepts," occupies pp. 3-135.

⁵ Les Saints des Derviches Tourneurs (Etudes d'Hagiographie Musulmane), vol. 1 (Paris, Leroux), 1918, vol. II, 1922.

⁶ See my account of this rare and interesting work in the J R A S for July, 1921, pp. 395-418. Both Dr Babinger and M. Minorsky have called my attention to the fact that another MS. of this work at St Petersburg was described by Khanikoff in the Mélanges Asiatiques, I, pp. 580-583.

THE ANCESTORS OF SHAYKH ŞAFÍYYU'D-DÍN.

That the seventh Imám Músá Kázim had, besides the son 'Alí Riḍá who succeeded him in the Imámate, another son named Hamza, from whom Shaykh Şafí claimed descent, is a fact vouched for by the historian al-Ya'qúbí¹, but the next dozen links in the chain (including five Muḥammads without further designation) are too vague to admit of identification. The earliest ancestor of the Şafawís who is invested with any definite attributes is Fírúزشáh-i-Zarrín-kuláh ("Golden-cap"), who is stated by the Silsilatu'n-Nasab to have been made governor of Ardabíl, henceforth the home and rallying-point of the family, by a son of Ibráhím-i-Adham, here represented as king of Persia. Ibráhím-i-Adham, however, though reputed of kingly race, renounced the world, became a notable saint, and died about A.D. 780 in Syria, and history knows nothing of any son of his who succeeded to a throne in Persia or elsewhere. Fírúزشáh died after a prosperous life at Rangín in Gílán, and was succeeded by his son 'Awad, of whom nothing is recorded save that he lived and died at Isfaranján near Ardabíl. His son Muḥammad earned the title of Háfiz because he knew the Qur'án by heart, an accomplishment for which he is said to have been indebted to the *Jinn*², who kidnapped him at the age of seven and educated him amongst themselves for a like number of years. The two succeeding heads of the family, Şaláḥu'd-Dín Rashíd and Quṭbu'd-Dín Aḥmad, seem to have lived quietly at Kalkhorán³, devoting themselves to agriculture, until a fierce incursion of

The seventh
Imám Músá
Kázim.

Fírúزشáh-
i-Zarrín-kuláh.

'Awad al-Khawáss.

Muḥammad
Háfiz.

Şaláḥu'd-Dín
Rashíd.

Quṭbu'd-Dín
Aḥmad.

¹ Ed. Houtsma, vol. ii, p. 500.

² For some account of the believing Jinn, see Qur'án, lxxii.

³ This, as M. V. Minorsky has pointed out to me, and not "Gilkhorán," is the proper pronunciation of this name.

the Georgians compelled the latter to flee to Ardabíl with his family, including his little son Amínu'd-Dín Jibra'íl, then only a month old. Even here they were not left unmolested: the Georgians pursued them and they had to take refuge in a cellar, where their lives were only saved by a devoted youth, who, ere he fell beneath the swords of his assailants, succeeded in concealing the entrance to the cellar by throwing down a large earthen jar over it. Qutbu'd Dín himself was severely wounded in the neck and hardly escaped with his life, and his grandson Shaykh Sáfi, who was born during his life, used to relate that when his grandfather took him on his shoulder he used to put four baby fingers into the scar left by the wound. In due course Qutbu'd-Dín was succeeded by his son Amínu'd-Dín Jibra'íl, farmer and saint, who adopted Khwája Kamálu'd-Dín 'Arabsháh as his spiritual director, and married a lady named Dawlatí, she in due course, in the year 650/1252-3, bore him the son who afterwards became famous as Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Dín, with whom the family suddenly emerges from comparative obscurity into great fame. The author of the Silsilatun Nasab, not content with giving the year of his birth, further fixes the date as follows. At the time of his birth Shams i Tabríz had been dead five years, Shaykh Muhyi'd-Dín ibnu'l-'Arabí twelve years, and Najmu'd-Dín Kubrá thirty-two years. He was five years old when Hulágu Khán the Mongol conquered Persia, twenty two on the death of Jalálu'd Dín Rúmí, and forty one on the death of Sa'dí. The eminent saints contemporary with him included Amír 'Abdu'lláh i-Shírází, Shaykh Najíbu'd-Dín Buzghúsh, 'Alá'u'd Dawla-i Samnání and Shaykh Mahmud-i-Shabístarí (author of the Gulshan-i Ráz or "Rose-bed of Mystery"). He had three elder¹ and two younger brothers² and one elder sister, being thus the fifth in a family of seven; and his father died when he was six years of age.

Amínu d Dín Jibra'íl.

Safiyyu d Dín.

¹ Muhammad, Saláhu'd Dín Rashíd and Isma'íl

² Ya'qúb and Fakhru'd Dín Yúsuf

SHAYKH ŞAFIYU'D-DĪN (A.D. 1252-1334).

Hitherto we have suffered from the exiguity of biographical details, but now we are rather embarrassed by their abundance. The Şafiatu's-Şafī, it is true, probably contains all that can now be known about Shaykh Şafī, but it is a voluminous work, containing some 210,000 words, and written in a fairly simple and direct style without much "stuffing" (hashw) or rhetorical adornment, so that anything approaching a full analysis of its contents would in itself constitute a volume of considerable size. It is lamentably deficient in dates, and in general deals rather with the spiritual than the material aspects of the life of Shaykh Şafī and his director Shaykh Zāhid-i-Gilānī. Stated as briefly as possible, its contents are as follows:

Introduction (in 2 sections). Shaykh Şafī's advent foretold by the Prophet and by former saints, such as Jalālu'd-Dīn Rūmī.

Chapter I (in 11 sections, two of which are further subdivided). Early life of Shaykh Şafī. His genealogy. Portents preceding his birth. His birth and childhood. His search for a spiritual director. He finally meets Shaykh Zāhid of Gilān. His life as a disciple of this holy man. His succession to the supremacy of the Order. His spiritual affiliation up to the Prophet. Characteristics and miracles of Shaykh Zāhid.

Chapter II (in 3 sections). Some of the miracles of Shaykh Şafī, whereby he delivered men from the perils of the sea and of deep waters, of mountains, mist and snow, and from foes, bondage and sickness.

Chapter III (in 3 sections). Some of the miracles wrought by the favourable or unfavourable regards of Shaykh Şafī.

Chapter IV (in 6 sections, two of which are further subdivided) Some of Shaykh Safi's sayings, and his explanations of verses of the Qur'ān, traditions of the Prophet, utterances of the Saints, and allegorical verses of the poets

Chapter V (in 3 sections) Some of Shaykh Safi's miracles connected with the Jinn, with animals, and with inanimate objects

Chapter VI (undivided) Ecstasies and devotional dancing of Shaykh Safi

Chapter VII (in 5 sections) Various miracles of Shaykh Safi, such as thought reading, foretelling future events, converse with the dead, etc

Chapter VIII (in 27 sections) Further examples of the virtues, powers, pious actions, effective prayers intuitions and views of Shaykh Safi, vouched for by his son Shaykh Sadru'd Dīn

Chapter IX (in 2 sections) Last illness and death of Shaykh Safi

Chapter X (in 3 sections) Posthumous miracles of Shaykh Safi

Chapter XI (in 3 sections) The fame and greatness of Shaykh Safi and his vicars (Khulafā) throughout the world

Chapter XII (in 2 sections) Miracles wrought by Shaykh Safi's disciples

Conclusion

That so comparatively small a portion of this voluminous work should be biographical is disappointing but not surprising, for how can those who regard themselves as belonging to the Timeless and Placeless (La Makān) be expected to trouble themselves about dates or similar details? All these hagiographies, indeed, have a similar character, and deal chiefly with the pious sayings, devout practices and supernatural achievements (karamāt) of those whose lives they record

That these *karámât*¹ have an interest of their own in connection with Psychological Research has been recognised by D. B. Macdonald in his excellent book on The Religious Attitude and Life in Islam;² and by Cl. Huart in his Saints des Derviches Tourneurs.³ The latter classifies the psychological phenomena.

Psychical

phenomena recorded in his original, the Mand-qibul-'Arifin (composed about 718/1318, only some thirty years earlier than the Şafwatü's-

Şafá, which was very probably modelled on it), as follows: dreams; knowledge of future events; second sight and divination of hidden objects; thought-transference; luminosity of bodies, human and inanimate; automatic opening of closed doors; ubiquity; anaesthesia and immunity against poisons; action on material objects at a distance; production of the precious metals; abnormal muscular, digestive and sexual powers and physical enlargements of the body; shifting features and instability of countenance; apparitions; psychotherapy; replies to difficult questions; conversions to Islám; sermons to animals; vengeance of the Saints; mental alienation; protracted seclusion and fasting; talismans; sudden disappearances. Examples of all, or nearly all, of these phenomena are to be found in the Şafwatü's-Şafá, while a smaller but fairly representative selection is contained in the Silsilatu'n-Nasab, but a detailed examination of them, though not without interest and value, would be out of place in this volume. It must be noted, however, that certain aspects of these Muslim saints, as recorded by their disciples and admirers, are to Western minds somewhat repellent, their curses are no less effective than their blessings, and their indulgences no less remarkable than their abstentions, while grim jests on the fate of such as have incurred their displeasure are not uncommon. Thus a certain prince named Siyámak, son of Shírwánsháh, when setting out for the Mongol camp (urdu), spoke in a disparaging manner of Shaykh Záhíd's disciples, and threatened on his return to pull down or burn their monasteries. When this was reported to the Shaykh he merely remarked, playing on the prince's name, that Siyámak would become Siyah marg (meaning "the Black Death"), which saying was duly fulfilled, for, having in some way incurred the wrath of the Mongol sovereign, he was, after the barbarous fashion of these people, wrapped up in black felt and kicked or trampled to death¹. To Shaykh Záhíd, on the other hand, Gházán Khán² the Mongol Ílkhán showed the greatest respect, especially after the saint had exhibited his powers of mind-reading, which so impressed Gházán that he insisted on kissing his feet. ✓

¹ The supernatural achievements of thaumaturgists are divided by Jámí (Nafahátu'l-Uns, ed. Nassau Lees, pp. 22-31) into three classes: (i) the evidential miracles of the Prophets, called mu'jizát; (ii) the "gifts" (karámât) vouchsafed by God to his saints for their greater honour; and (iii) the "wonders" (khawáriqu'l-'ádát) wrought by ordinary men by means of Black or White Magic.

² University of Chicago Press, 1909.

³ Paris, Leroux, 1918-1922.

Externally the life of Shaykh Safi, especially after he became the disciple of Shaykh Záhíd and settled at Ardabíl, was not very eventful. As a child he was serious, unsociable and disinclined for play. At a comparatively early age he appears to have got a "concern" about religion, and to have seen visions and held converse with the Unseen World. Finding no adequate direction in Ardabíl, and hearing the fame of Shaykh

¹ The last 'Abbásid Caliph, al Musta'şim, is said to have been put to death by Hulágu Khán in this way, the Mongols having a dislike to shedding kingly blood. So Clavijs informs us that at the court of Tímur "the custom is that when a great man is put to death he is hanged, but the meaner sort are beheaded". See Sir Clements Markham's translation of his Narrative, published by the Hakluyt Society in 1859, p. 150.

² He reigned A.D. 1295-1304. See my Pers. Lit. iii, pp. 40-46.

Najíbu'd-Dín Buzghúsh of Shíráz, he desired to go thither, but, having finally overcome his mother's opposition to the journey, arrived there only to find the saint dead¹. While at Shíráz he made the acquaintance of many notable saints and darwíshs, and of the celebrated poet Sa'dí, of whom, however, he seems to have formed but a poor opinion. Indeed he appears to have treated the poet with scant civility, even refusing to accept an autograph copy of his poems. Finally Záhíru'd-Dín, the son and successor of Shaykh Buzghúsh, told Shaykh Şafí that no one could satisfy his spiritual needs except Shaykh Záhíd of Gílán, whose personal appearance and dwelling-place on the shore of the Caspian Sea he described to him in detail. Four years elapsed, however, ere he was successful in tracking down the elusive saint, then sixty years of age, by whom he was cordially welcomed, and with whom he spent the next twenty-five years of his life.

He meets Sa'dí.

He becomes the disciple of Shaykh Záhíd
of Gílán.

Shaykh Záhíd's full name, as given in the Şafwatü's-Şafá, is Táju'd-Dín Ibráhím ibn Rawshan Amír ibn Bábil ibn Shaykh Pindár (or Bundár) al-Kurdí as-Sanjání, and the mother of his grandfather Bábil is said to have been a Jinniyya. The title of Záhíd ("the Ascetic" or "Abstemious") was given to him by his Director Sayyid Jamálu'd-Dín for reasons which are variously stated. He gave his daughter Bíbí Fáţima in marriage to Shaykh Şafí, to whom she bore three sons, of whom the second, Şadru'd-Dín, ultimately succeeded his father as head of the Order. The author of the Silsilatu'n-Nasab was one of his descendants, who were collectively known as Pír-záda and apparently continued to enjoy high consideration during the whole Şafawí period.

Account of Shaykh Záhíd.

From the data given by the Silsilatu'n-Nasab, viz. that ¹ According to Jámi (Nafahát, p. 548) he died in Sha'bán 678 (Dec. 1279).

Shaykh Abdal Pirzada presenting the captured horse of the Uzbek leader, Dū Muhammad Khan, to Shah 'Abbas the Great

From a MS of the Silsilatun Nasab i Safaviyya (H. 12, f 80^a) in the Library of Professor L. G. Browne

Shaykh Záhíd was 35 years older than Shaykh Safí, that both died at the age of 85, and that the latter died in 735/1334, we may conclude that the former died about 700/1300, and this is corroborated by the further statement that his grandson Sadru'd-Dín was born in 704/1305, four years after his death. Shaykh Safí now became head of the Order, and held this position for 35 years when he died¹, and was in turn succeeded by his son Sadru'd-Dín. He produced some poetry both in the dialect of Gilán (in which also several of his conversations with Shaykh Záhíd were conducted) and likewise in ordinary Persian. Though one of his quatrains² testifies to his love of 'Alí ("how much soever he in whose heart is a grain of love for 'Alí may sin, God will forgive him" are his words), I find no evidence that he held those strong Shí'a views which subsequently characterised his descendants. There is, indeed, a piece of evidence to the contrary in the Ahsan-u't Tawárikh, an important unpublished history of the first two Safawí kings composed in the reign of Sháh Tahmásp and including the years A.H. 901-985 (A.D. 1495-1577)³. In a letter of remonstrance addressed to this ruler by the Uzbek 'Ubayd Khán in 936/1529-1530 the following sentence occurs⁴:

و پدر کلاں شما حباب مرحوم شیخ صفی را همچین شیده ایمر
که مردی عرب اهل نُسْت و جماعت بوده مارا حیرت عظیم
دست میدهد که شما نه روش حضرت مرتضی علی را تابعید و نه روش پدر کلاں را

¹ On Monday, Muharram 12, 735 (Sept. 12, 1334)

² See J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, p. 403

³ Mr A. G. Ellis most kindly placed at my disposal his MS. of this rare book, to which all subsequent references are made

⁴ F. 166^a

"We have thus heard concerning your ancestor, His sainted Holiness Shaykh Şafí, that he was a good man and an orthodox Sunní, and we are greatly astonished that you neither follow the conduct of Murtaḍá 'Alí nor that of your ancestor."

He did much, however, to extend and develop the Order of which he was the Superior, and his influence is illustrated by a statement of Mawláná Shamsu'd-Dín Barníqí of Ardabíl, quoted in the *Silsilatun-Nasab*¹, that the number of those who came to visit him along one road only—that from Marágha and Tabríz—in the course of three months amounted to some thirteen thousand. Many if not most of these must have come from Asia Minor, so that even at this early date the Order was establishing and consolidating itself in regions where it was afterwards destined to cause the greatest anxiety to the Ottoman Sultáns².

Influence of Shaykh Şafí
in Asia Minor.

Shaykh Şadru'd-Dín succeeded his father at the age of 31 in 735/1334 and controlled the affairs of the Order for 59 years until his death in 794/1392. He also composed verses in Persian, and is besides credited with many miracles, the most celebrated of which was his recovery and restoration to Ardabíl of the door of the principal mosque which had been carried off by the Georgians when they raided that city about 600/1203-4³. Amongst the most celebrated of his disciples was the poet Qásimu'l-Anwár, whose orthodoxy was somewhat suspect, and who was expelled from Herát by Sháh-rukh under circumstances which I have discussed elsewhere⁴. That Shaykh Şadru'd-Dín's influence and ac-

Şadru'd-Dín succeeds his father in 735/1334.

¹ See J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, pp. 403-4.

² Compare Dr Franz Babinger's remarks in his admirable study Scheich Bedr ed-Dîn der Sohn des Richters von Simāw (Berlin and Leipzig, 1921), especially p. 15 of the Sonderabdruck.

³ See pp. 36-7 supra, and J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, pp. 406-7.

⁴ Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, pp. 473-486 and pp. 365-6. I must here note an error into which I fell concerning the tivities also aroused the suspicions of neighbouring potentates is shown by the action of Malik-i-Ashraf, who lured him to Tabríz and kept him in confinement there for three months, when, warned by a dream, he released him, but subsequently attempted to recapture him and compelled him to flee into Gílán. Other holy and learned men suffered at the hands of this tyrant, and one of them, the Qádí Muhyi'd-Dín of Barda'a, depicted in such vivid colours the odious oppression of Malik-i-Ashraf to Jání Beg Khán son of Uzbek, the ruler of the Dasht-i Qipcháq, that the latter invaded Ádharbáyján, defeated Malik-i-Ashraf, and put him to death. According to the *Silsilatü'n Nasab*² he also had an interview with Shaykh Sadru'd-Dín, treated him with great respect, and confirmed to him the possession of certain estates whereof the revenues had formerly been allocated to the shrine at Ardabíl.

Shaykh Sadru'd-Dín, like his father Shaykh Safi, performed the pilgrimage to Mecca at the end of his life, and is said to have brought back with him to Ardabíl the Prophet's standard. Shortly after his return he died, in 794/1392, and was succeeded by his son Khwája 'Alí who controlled the affairs of the Order for thirty six years until his death on Rajab 18, 830 (May 15, 1427). This happened in Palestine, where he is buried, his tomb being known as that of "Sayyid 'Alí 'Ajamí". Like his father and grandfather he

Sadru'd D n is succeeded in 794/1392 by his son Khwája 'Alí

verses of Qásim quoted on p 474. These obviously refer not to Shaykh Safi but to his son Sadru'd Dín, who actually lived exactly ninety years (A H 704-794). The word نقد in l 1 probably needs emendation to some word (like نحل) meaning "son", in any case this is its meaning here. The translation should run "The Sadr of Saintship, who is the son [or survivor or representative] of Shaykh Safi," etc.

¹ See d'Ohsson's Histoire des Mongols, vol iv, pp 740-2

² J R A S for July, 1921, pp 405-6

³ See J R A S for July, 1921, p 407. Dr Franz Babinger wrote to

was a worker of miracles and a poet, and over two hundred of his Persian verses are quoted in the Silsilatü'n-Nasab. In him strong Shí'a tendencies reveal themselves : instigated by the Ninth Imám Muḥammad Taqí in a dream he converts the people of Dizful, by a miraculous stoppage of their river, to a belief in and recognition of the supreme holiness of 'Alí ibn Abí Tálíb ; and he exhorts Tímúr, whose regard he had succeeded in winning by a display of his psychical powers, to "chastise, as they deserve, the Yazídí Kurds, the friends of Mu'áwiya, because of whom we wear the black garb of mourning for the Immaculate Imáms¹." More celebrated is his intercession with Tímúr on behalf of a number of Turkish prisoners (astrán-i-Rúm) whose release he secured, and whose grateful descendants, known as "the Turkish Şúfis" (Şúfiyán-i-Rúmlí), became the most devoted adherents and supporters of the Şafawí family².

me in a private letter : "Quds-i-Khalíl ist vielmehr al-Quds wa'l-Khalíl, d.h. Jerusalem und Hebron, eine häufige Bezeichnung für Südpalästina." This is confirmed by the Rev. Canon J. E. Hanauer, to whom Dr Babinger wrote about this matter, and who kindly endeavoured to identify this tomb. His very interesting letter is too long to quote in full. "The Arab historian Mejd ed-Dín," he says, "who wrote about A.D. 1495, i.e. seventy years later [than Khwája 'Alí's death], gives a list of the most renowned Shaykhs buried at Hebron, but does not mention 'Alí 'Ajámí. We must therefore look for the shrine elsewhere. Four different places of note suggest themselves." These are (1) the Haram of 'Alí ibn 'Alawí 2½ hours north of Jaffa ; (2) the Walí of al-'Ajámí, just south of Jaffa ; (3) a sacred oak-grove with the shrine of "the Imám 'Alí" near the Báb-el-Wad ; and (4) another very holy shrine of al-'Ajámí, on the hill above the village of Bayt Maḥsír, amidst woods and thickets. Canon Hanauer is inclined to think that the last is most probably the tomb in question.

¹ J.R.A.S. for July, 1921, p. 408.

² See Sir John Malcolm's History of Persia (ed. 1815), vol. i, pp. 496-7 and footnotes. The ascription of this act of intercession to Shaykh Şadru'd-Dín and still more to his father Şafíyyu'd-Dín is an anachronism.

Shaykh Ibrāhīm, better known as Shaykh Shāh, succeeded his father in 830/1427 and died in 851/1447-8

Shaykh Shāh

A.H. 830-851

(A.D. 1427-1447)

Little is recorded of him save the names of his six sons, and he is even omitted entirely in the succession by the Ta'rīkh i-'Ālam-ārā yi-

'Abbāsī. He was succeeded by his youngest son Shaykh Junayd, with whom the militant character of the family first asserted itself. He visited Dīyār Bakr and won the favour of Uzun Hasan, the celebrated ruler of the "White Sheep" Dynasty, who bestowed on him the hand of his sister Khadīja in marriage.

Shaykh Junayd

(A.D. 1447-1456)

This alliance, combined with the assembly round his standard of ten thousand Sufi warriors (ghuzat i Sūfiyya),

"who deemed the risking of their lives in the path of their perfect Director the least of the degrees of devotion," aroused the alarm of Jahānshāh, the Turkmān ruler of Ādharbāyjān and the two 'Iraqs, and other neighbouring princes, and Shaykh Junayd fell in battle against Shīrwān shāh.¹ His body, according to one account, was brought to Ardabīl and there buried, but according to others it was buried near the battle field at a village variously called Quryāl, Qaruyāl or Quriyān.

Shaykh Haydar (the "Sechaidar" of Angiolello), like his father Junayd, whom he succeeded, found favour in the eyes of the now aged Ūzun Hasan his maternal

Shaykh Haydar

(A.D. 1456-1488)

uncle who gave him in marriage his daughter

Marta, Halīma, Bakī Āqā or 'Ālam shāh Begum, whose mother, the celebrated Despina Khātun ("Despina caton"), was the daughter of Kalo Ioannes, the last Christian

Emperor of Trebizond, of the noble Greek family of the Comneni.² The anonymous Venetian merchant whose narrative is included in the Italian travels in Persia in the *fifteenth and sixteenth centuries*¹ describes him as "a lord about the rank of a count, named Secaidar, of a religion or sect named Sophi, revered by his co-religionists as a saint and obeyed as a chief. There are," he continues, "numbers of them in different parts of Persia, as in Natolia (Anatolia) and Caramania (Qaramán), all of whom bore great respect to this Secaidar, who was a native of this city of Ardouil (Ardabíl or Ardawíl), where he had converted many to the Suffavean (Şafawí) doctrine. Indeed he was like the abbot of a nation of monks; he had six children, three boys² and three girls, by a daughter of Assambei (Hasan Bey, i.e. Úzún Hasan); he also bore an intense hatred to the Christians." He it was who, divinely instructed in a dream, bade his followers adopt in place of the Turkmán cap (táqiya-i-Turkmání) the scarlet cap of twelve gores (Táj-i-duwázda tark)³ from which they became universally known as "Red Heads" (Qizil-básh in Turkish; Surkh-sar in Persian). "They are accustomed," says the anonymous Venetian merchant cited above (p. 206 of the Italian Travels), "to wear a red caftan, and above that a high conical turban made with a dozen folds, representing the twelve sacraments of their sect, or the twelve descendants of 'Alí"⁴.

¹ These particulars are from the Ta'rīkh i-'Ālam-ārā yi-'Abbāsī

² In 860/1456 according to Babinger, op. cit., p. 83

³ See Pers. Lit. iii, p. 407

Origin of the term Qizil-básh.

Shaykh Haydar, like his father, fell in battle against the hosts of Shírwánsháh and his Turkmán allies at Ṭabar-sarán near Darband. Twenty-two years later his death was ¹ Translated and edited by Charles Grey and published by the Hakluyt Society in 1873, pp. 139-207.

² These were Sultán 'Alí Mírzá (or Pádisháh), Isma'íl, and Ibráhím, according to the Ta'rikh-i-'Álam-árá-yi-'Abbásí, but they are differently given in the Aḥsanu't-Tawdríkh.

³ See the late Sir A. Houtum-Schindler's note on this in the J.R.A.S. for 1897, pp. 114-115. For a long note on Qizil-básh, see Babinger's Schejch Bedr ed-Din, pp. 84-5 of the Sonderabdruck.

⁴ This, of course, is an error, for the Twelve Imáms include 'Alí, who was the first of them and was succeeded by eleven of his descendants.

avenged and his body recovered and brought to Ardabíl by his redoubtable son Sháh Isma'íl, who was at this time (Rajab 20, 893 · June 30, 1488)¹ only a year old.

Shaykh Haydar
killed in battle
in 893/1488.

SHÁH ISMA'ÍL

(Born 892/1487, crowned 905/1499-1500, died 930/1523-4)

Nothing could appear more unpromising than the position of the three little sons of Shaykh Haydar, who were for the moment entirely at the mercy of their father's enemies Sultán Ya'qub, the son of Úzún Hasan, however, shrank from killing them for the sake of their mother, who was his sister, and contented himself with exiling them to Istakhr in Fárs, where they were placed in the custody of the governor Mansúr Beg Parnák. According to Angiolello², however, the three boys were confined on an island in the "Lake of Astumar" (identified by the translator with Lake Van) inhabited by Armenian Christians, where they remained for three years and became "very much beloved, especially Ismael, the second, for his beauty and pleasing manners," so that when Rustam, the grandson of Úzún Hasan, after the death of his uncle Ya'qúb, sent a message to demand their surrender, intending to put them to death, the Armenians not only made excuses for not giving them up but enabled them to escape by boat to the "country of Carabas" (Qará-bágh). In the Persian accounts, however, Rustam is credited with their release from Istakhr, because, being at war with his cousin Bay-sunqur, he thought to strengthen himself by an alliance with them and their numerous devoted followers. He accordingly invited the eldest brother Sultán 'Alí to Tabriz,

Isma'íl and his two brothers.

¹ According to the rare history of Sháh Isma'íl represented by Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, however, Shaykh Haydar was killed in 895/1490.

² Pp 101-2 of the Hakluyt Society's translation by Charles Grey received him with much honour, conferred on him all the paraphernalia of sovereignty and the title of Pádisháh, and despatched him to attack Baysunqur, whom he defeated and slew in a battle near Ahar. Having thus got rid of his rival, Rustam sought to rid himself of his ally, who, warned by one of his Turkmán disciples, fled to Ardabíl, but was

Isma'íl's brother
Sultán 'Alí is killed.

overtaken by his enemies at the neighbouring village of Shamásí and killed in the ensuing skirmish in the year 900/1494-5¹. His two brothers, however, reached Ardabíl in safety, and were concealed by their faithful followers during the house-to-house search instituted by the Turkmáns, until an opportunity presented itself of conveying them secretly into Gílán, first to Rasht, where they remained for a short period, estimated

Isma'íl in hiding in Láhiján.

at anything from seven to thirty days, and then to Láhiján, the ruler of which place, Kár-kiyá

Mírzá 'Alí, accorded them hospitality and protection for several years. It is related that on one occasion when their Turkmán foes came to look for them he caused them to be suspended in a cage in the woods so as to enable him to swear that they had no foothold on his territory.

To the valour and devotion of Isma'íl's disciples, the "Şúfis of Láhiján," contemporary European writers testify

Devotion of Isma'íl's followers.

as forcibly as the Persian historians. "This Sophi," says the anonymous Italian merchant², "is loved and revered by his people as a god, and especially by his soldiers, many of whom enter into battle without armour, expecting their master Ismael to watch over them in the fight. The name of God is forgotten throughout Persia and only that of Ismael remembered. "The Suffaveans fought like lions" is a phrase which repeatedly occurs in the pages of the Venetian travellers. Yet for all this, and the numbers and wide ramifications of the Order ("from the remotest West to the limits of Balkh and Bukhára," says the rare history of Sháh Isma'il, speaking of the days of his grandfather Junayd), it is doubtful if their astounding successes would have been possible in the first instance but for the bitter internecine feuds of the ruling "White Sheep" dynasty after the death of the great and wise Úzun Hasan in A D 1478, from which time onwards their history is a mere welter of fratricidal warfare.

¹ The following portion of this account, taken from the rare history of Sháh Isma'íl mentioned in n. 1 on p. 15 above, has been published with translation by Sir E. Denison Ross in the J.R.A.S. for 1896 (vol. xxviii), pp. 264-283.

² P. 206 of the Hakluyt Society's Travels of Venetians in Persia (London, 1873). See also p. 223 of the same volume, where Vincentio d'Alessandri speaks in similar terms of the devotion of his subjects to Tahmásp, the son and successor of Isma'íl. Most of this passage has been already quoted on p. 23 supra.

Isma'il was only thirteen years of age when he set out from the seclusion of Láhiján on his career of conquest.

Isma'il at the age of thirteen sets out on his career of conquest.

He was accompanied at first by only seven devoted "Súfis," but, as he advanced by way of Tárum and Khalkhál to Ardabíl, he was reinforced at every stage by brave and ardent disciples, many from Syria and Asia Minor.¹ Ordered to leave Ardabíl by the Turkmán Sultán 'Alí Beg Chákariú, he retired for a while to Arjaván near Astará on the Caspian Sea, where he amused himself with fishing, of which he was very fond, but in the spring of A D 1500 he was back at Ardabíl, having rallied round him a goodly army of the seven Turkish tribes who constituted the backbone of the ¹ Cf Pers Lit iii, p 417. So the rare history of Sháh Isma'il (Add 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f 27^a).

در عرص راه ارباب حلاوت و صوفیاں پاک طیت ار روی عقیدت
در هر مری ار مارل ار طوائف روم و شام بموکب عالی می پیوستند

Şafawí military power¹. He now felt himself strong enough to embark on a holy war against the Georgian "infidels" and a war of revenge against Farrukh-Yasár, king of Shírwán, whom he defeated and killed near Gulistán. He decapitated and burned the corpse, built a tower of his enemies' heads, destroyed the tombs of the Shírwánsháhs, and exhumed and burned the remains of the last king, Khalíl, who had killed his grandfather Shaykh Junayd. The noble dynasty thus extinguished claimed descent from the great Sásánian king Anúsharwán (Núshírwán), and numbered amongst them the patron of the famous panegyrist Kháqání.

Isma'íl defeats and kills Farrukh-Yasár,
king of Shírwán,
906/1500.

Battle of Shurúr.
Isma'íl is crowned at Tabriz.
907/1501-2.

Having captured Baku (Bádkúya, Bádkúba) Isma'íl, advised in a dream by the Imáms, decided to raise the siege of Gulistán and march on Ádharbáyján. Alwand and his "White Sheep" Turkmáns endeavoured to arrest his advance, but were utterly defeated at the decisive battle of Shurúr with great slaughter. Alwand fled to Arzinján, while Isma'íl entered Tabriz in triumph and was there crowned King of Persia. Henceforth, therefore, we shall speak of him as Sháh Isma'íl, but by the Persian historians he is often entitled Kháqán-i-Iskandar-shán ("the Prince like unto Alexander in state"), as his son and successor Sháh Tahmásp is called Sháh-i-Dín-panáh ("the King who is the Refuge of Religion").

Already Sháh Isma'íl and his partisans had given ample proof of their strong Shí'a convictions. Their battle-cry on the day they slew Shírwánsháh was Alláh! Alláh! wa 'Alí waliyyu'lláh (God! God! and 'Alí is the Friend of God!)"², while Alwand was offered peace if he would

¹ These were the Shámlú, Rúmlú, Ustájlú, Takallú, Dhu'l-Qadar, Afshár and Qájár. From the two last respectively there arose in later days Nádir Sháh and the present Royal House of Persia.

² Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f. 35^b.

embrace this doctrine and pronounce this formula¹ But now Sháh Isma'íl resolved that, with his assumption of the kingly rank, the Shí'a faith should become not merely the State religion but the only tolerated creed This decision caused anxiety even to some of the Shí'a divines of Tabríz, who, on the night preceding Isma'íl's coronation, represented to him that of the two or three hundred thousand inhabitants of that city at least two thirds were Sunnís, that the Shí'a formula had not been publicly uttered from the pulpit since the time of the Imáms themselves, and that if the majority of the people refused to accept a Shí'a ruler, it would be difficult to deal with the situation which would then arise To this Sháh Isma'íl replied, "I am committed to this action, God and the Immaculate Imáms are with me, and I fear no one, by God's help, if the people utter one word of protest, I will draw the sword and leave not one of them alive²" Nor did he content himself with glorifying 'Alí and his descendants, but ordained the public cursing of the first three Calíphs of the Sunnís, Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthmán, and that all who heard the cursing should respond

Energetic measures adopted by Sháh Isma'íl to propagate the Shí'a
doctrine

The cursing of the first three Calíphs instituted

¹ Add 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f 40.

² Ibid., f 44^b The text of this important passage, to which reference has been already made (p 22 supra), runs as follows

قربانت شویم دوست سید هرار خلق که در تبرست چهار
دایک آن همه سنی اند و از زمان حصرات تا حال این خطه را
کسی بر ملا نخوانده و مستریم که مردم نکوید که پادشاه
شیعه نمیخواهیم و نعوذ بالله اگر رعیت برگردند چه تدارک درین
ناب توان کرد پادشاه فرمودند که مرا ناس کار نار داشته
اند و حدای عالم را حصرات ائمه معصومین همراه مسد و من
از هیچ کس ناک ندارم توفیق الله تعالی اگر رعیت حرفی بگویند شمشیر میکشیم و یک کس را رنده نمیکذارم

"May it be more, not less!" (Bísh bád, kam ma-bád!) or suffer death in case of refusal.

Immediately after his coronation, according to the *Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh*¹, he ordered all preachers (Khuṭabá) throughout his realms to introduce the distinctively Shí'a formulae "I bear witness that 'Alí is the Friend of God" and "hasten to the best of deeds" (ḥayya ila khayri'l-'amal) into the profession of Faith and the call to Prayer respectively; which formulae had been in abeyance since Ṭughril Beg the Saljúq had put to flight and slain al-Basásirí five hundred and twenty-eight years previously². He also instituted the public cursing of Abú Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthmán in the streets and markets, as above mentioned, threatening recalcitrants with decapitation. Owing to the dearth of Shí'a theological works the religious instruction of the people necessitated by the change of doctrine presented great difficulties, but finally the Qáđí Naşru'lláh Zaytúní produced from his library the first volume of the Qawá'idu'l-Islám ("Rules of Islám") of Shaykh Jamálu'd-Dín...ibn 'Alí ibnu'l-Muṭahhir al-Ḥillí³, which served as a basis of instruction "until day by day the Sun of Truth of the Doctrine of the Twelve [Imáms]

Rigorous enforcement of Shí'a doctrine.

¹ F. 44 of Mr A. G. Ellis's manuscript.

² See Weil's Geschichte der Chalifen, vol. iii, pp. 92-102. Al-Basásirí was the Commander-in-chief of the troops of the Buwayhid al-Maliku'r-Raḥím. He espoused the cause of the Fátimid Caliph al-Mustanşir and attempted to depose the 'Abbásid Caliph al-Qá'im. He was killed on Dhu'l-Qa'da 6, 451 (Dec. 14, 1059). Since Isma'íl was crowned in 907/1501-2, we must understand "previously" as referring not to this event, but to the composition of the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh, or rather this portion of it, for it extends to the year 985/1577, while the date we require is 979/1571-2 (451 + 528 = 979).

³ The name is defective in the MS., but most closely resembles this. Such a writer is mentioned towards the end of the fifth Majlis of the Majálisu'l-Mi'mínin, but he has no work bearing precisely this name. It is possible that the popular Sharáyi'u'l-Islám of another al-Ḥillí is intended. See Rieu's Arabic Supplement, p. 212.

increased its altitude, and all parts and regions of the world became illuminated by the dawning effulgences of the Path of Verification "

Of the anger and alarm aroused by these proceedings in the neighbouring kingdoms, and especially in the Ottoman Empire, we shall have to speak presently, but first we may with advantage give from the

Rival rulers in Persia at this time
907/1502

*Ahsan'u't Tawárikh*¹ the list of potentates in Persia itself who at this time claimed sovereign power (1) Sháh Isma'íl in Ádharbáyján, (2) Sultán Murád in most of 'Iráq, (3) Murád Beg Báyardarí in Yazd, (4) Ra'ís Muhammad Karra (كروه) in Abarquh, (5) Husayn Kiyá-yi-Chaláwí in Samnán, Khwár and Fíruzkuh, (6) Bárík Parnák in 'Iráq-i-'Arab, (7) Qásim Beg ibn Jahángír Beg ibn 'Alí Beg in Diyár Bakr, (8) Qádl Muhammad in conjunction with Mawlání Mas'ud in Káshán, (9) Sultán Husayn Mírzá (the Tímurid) in Khurásán, (10) Amír Dhu'n Nun in Qandahár, (11) Badí'uz Zamán Mírzá (the Tímurid) in Balkh, and (12) Abu l-Fath Beg Báyardarí in Kirmán

Many of these petty rulers (Mulúkk'u't-Tawá'if) were quite insignificant, and several of them I cannot even identify

Isma'íl disposes of his minor rivals

None of them long stood in Sháh Isma'íl's victorious path His old enemy Alwand of the

"White Sheep" dynasty suffered a decisive defeat at his hands in the summer of A D 1503, and died a year or so later at Diyár Bakr or Baghdád² His brother Murád was defeated and Shíráz occupied about the same time, and

Sunni doctors put to death at Kázarún

stern punishment overtook the Sunni doctors of Kázarún, many of whom were put to death, while the tombs and foundations of their predecessors were destroyed³ The words Rahmatu'n il'Ála-

¹ F 45 of Mr Ellis's MS

² According to contemporary European accounts he was put to death in cold blood by Isma'íl See p 62 infra

³ Add 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f 55

mín ("a Mercy to the Worlds") were found, not very appropriately from an impartial point of view, to give the date 909 (A.D. 1503-4) of this event; while the equivalent chronogram Shaltáq-i-Sipáhi ("Military Coercion") was observed by the poets and wits of Fárs to commemorate in like manner the appointment by Sháh Isma'íl of his captain Ilyás Beg Dhu'l-Qadar as governor of Shíráz. Káshán, always a stronghold of the Shí'a¹, received Isma'íl with enthusiasm, and he held a great reception at the beautiful suburb of Fín. Thence he passed to the holy city of Qum, intending, apparently, to winter there, but hearing that Ilyás Beg, one of his most trusted officers, "a Şúfí of pure disposition and right belief²," had been murdered by Ḥusayn Kiyá-yi-Chaláwí, he marched out on February 25, 1504, to avenge him. Three weeks later he was at Astarábád, where he was met by Muḥammad Muḥsin Mírzá, the son of the Tímúrid Sultán Ḥusayn Mírzá, and, having attacked and destroyed the fortresses of Gulkhandán and Fírúzkúh, he reduced the stronghold of Ustá by cutting off the water-supply, massacred the garrison (ten thousand souls, according to the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh), and took captive the wretched

Cruel treatment
of captives.

Ḥusayn Kiyá, whom he confined in an iron cage, but who succeeded in inflicting on himself a wound which in a few days proved mortal³. Still more unfortunate was Ra'ís Muḥammad Karra of Abarqúh, who rebelled and took possession of the ancient city of Yazd. Him also Sháh Isma'íl confined in a cage, and smeared his body with honey so that the wasps tormented him until he was finally burned alive in the maydán of Işfahán.

¹ See the Ráḥatú's-Şudúr, ed. Muḥammad Iqbál ("E. J. W. Gibb Memorial," New Series, vol. ii, 1921), p. 30.

² آن صوفی صافی نهاد پاک اعتقاد

³ According to Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library (f. 61) the body was conveyed to Işfahán and there blown to pieces in the maydán with gunpowder.

About the same time an embassy came from the Ottoman Sultán Báyazíd II (A D 1481-1512) to offer "suitable gifts and presents" and congratulations on Shah Isma'íl's conquest of 'Irâq and Fárs. They were dismissed with robes of honour and assurances of Isma'íl's friendly sentiments, but were compelled to witness several executions, including, perhaps, that of the philosopher and judge Mír Husayn-i-Maybudí¹, whose chief offence seems to have been that he was a "fanatical Sunní". Persian kings were disposed to take this means of impressing foreign envoys with their "justice", Clavijo relates a similar procedure on the part of Tímur², and Sháh Isma'íl's son and successor Tahmásp sought to impress and intimidate Humáyún's ambassador Bayrák Beg by putting to death in his presence a number of heretics³. To the Turkish envoys it would naturally be particularly disagreeable to witness the execution of a learned Sunní doctor by those whom they regarded as detestable schismatics.

Of the increasingly strained relations between Turkey and Persia, culminating in the Battle of Cháldirán (August, 1514), we shall have to speak very shortly, but we must first conclude our brief survey of Shah Isma'íl's career of conquest. To describe in detail his incessant military activities would be impossible in a work of the scope and character of this book, and only the barest summary is possible.

During the years A H 911-915 (A D 1506-1510) Sháh Isma'íl was for the most part busy in the West. He first entered Hamadan and visited the tomb of the Imám-záda Sahl 'Alí. A serious revolt

Isma'íl's conquest in the West
A D 1506-1510.

¹ His commentary on the Hidáya is still the favourite text book for beginners in philosophy. See also Brockelmann's Gesch d Arab Litt, vol II, p 210, and Rieu, B M P C, p 1077.

² Embassy to the Court of Timour, A D 1403-6, published by the Hakluyt Society, 1859, pp 149-150.

³ W Erskine's History of India, etc (London, 1854), vol II, p 281.

of the "Yazídí" Kurds¹ next demanded his attention. Their leader, Shír Şárim, was defeated and captured in a bloody battle wherein several important officers of Sháh Isma'íl lost their lives. To their relatives the Kurdish prisoners were surrendered to be put to death "with torments worse than which there may not be." War was next waged against the conjoined forces of Sulţán Murád, the thirteenth² and last of the "White Sheep" dynasty, and 'Alá'u'd-Dawla Dhu'l-Qadar (the "Aliduli" of the Italian travellers of this period), who, refusing Isma'íl's proposal that he should "set his tongue in motion with the goodly word 'Alí is the Friend of God, and curse the enemies of the Faith" (to wit, the first three Caliphs), appealed for help to the Ottoman Turks. Sháh Isma'íl, however, was in A.D. 1508.

Baghdád taken

not to be denied, and successively captured Diyár Bakr, Akhlát, Bitlís, Arjish, and finally in 914/1508 Baghdád itself, whereby he obtained possession of the Holy Shrines of Karbalá and Najaf, so dear to Shí'a hearts, where he hastened to offer prayers and thanksgivings. At Hıwayza he showed that, ardent

Shí'a Ghulát punished at Hıwayza.

Shí'a as he was, he would not tolerate the exaggerated veneration of 'Alí characteristic of the Ghulát, represented there by certain Arabs called Musha'shí, who venerated 'Alí as God, and, invoking his name, would cast themselves on sharp swords without

¹ "All the Curds," says the anonymous Italian merchant (p. 157), "are truer Mahometans than the other inhabitants of Persia, since the Persians have embraced the Suffavean doctrine, while the Curds would not be converted to it: and though they wear the red castans, yet in their hearts they bear a deadly hatred to them."

² They are thus enumerated in the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh (f. 109^b of Mr Ellis's MS.): (1) Qará 'Uthmán; (2) 'Alí Beg; (3) Sulţán Ḥamza; (4) Jahángír Mírzá (these four ruled over Diyár Bakr only); (5) Úzún Ḥasan; (6) Khalíl; (7) Ya'qúb; (8) Báysunghur; (9) Rustam; (10) Aḥmad Beg; (11) Muḥammadí Mírzá; (12) Alwand Mírzá; (13) Sulţán Murád.

sustaining injury, after the fashion of the modern 'Isáwīyya of North Africa. Their leader, Mír Sultán Muhsin, died about this time, and was succeeded by his son Sultán Fayyád, who claimed for himself divine honours¹. Sháh Isma'íl ruthlessly suppressed these heretics, and proceeded to Dizful and Shushtar, receiving the submission of the Lur chieftain Sháh Rustam, who won his favour by "the utterance of prayer and praise in the Lurí tongue with extreme sweetness". Thence Sháh Isma'íl made his way eastwards to Fárs, encamped for a while at Dárábjird, and organised a great hunting expedition, of which the special object was a kind of mountain goat which yields the 'animal antidote' (pádzahr : haywaní)². He also put to death the Qádí Muhammad : Káshí, who held the high ecclesiastical office of Sadr, and replaced him by the Sayyid : Sharíf of Astar-ábád who was descended on his mother's side from the celebrated Jurjání. He further erected at Qasr-i Zar a mausoleum in memory of his brother Sultan Ahmad Mírzá who had died there, and, under the title of Najm : Thaní ('the Second Star'), appointed Amír Yár Ahmad : Khu-zání of Isfahán to succeed "the First Star, Amír Najmu'd-Dín Mas'ud of Rasht, who had recently died and been buried at Najaf. The poet Ummídí celebrated this appointment in a very ingenious and sonorous qasída beginning

رهی جوهرت گوهرِ آسمانی ' توئی عقلِ اوّل توئی سحرِ ثانی
رواقِ حرّ مرا تو ركبِ عراقی ' عراقِ عجم را سَهیلِ سَماسی

¹ Add 200, Camb Univ Lib, f 83^a

و آن کافر مردود دعوی الوهیت کرده قوم مشعشع حالا بالوهیت فیاص قابل اند

² In this hunting expedition 56,700 head of game are said to have been killed

From Fárs Sháh Isma'íl marched into Shírwán (where Shaykh Sháh, the son of Farrukh-Yasár, had re-established himself), recovered the body of his father Shaykh Haydar and conveyed it to Ardabíl for burial, as already related, and took Darband.

So far Sháh Isma'íl had been chiefly occupied in putting down minor princes and pretenders and in consolidating his power in Persia, of which he had to the West and North-West greatly enlarged the territories, and had almost restored the ancient frontiers of Sásánian times. Hitherto he had hardly come into conflict with the two powerful enemies who were destined to give so much trouble to himself and his successors, to wit the Uzbeks of Central Asia and the Ottoman Turks. Of his relations with these formidable rivals we must now speak, but, before doing so, a few more words may be said of Sháh Isma'íl's character and appearance. As usual, a much more vivid picture of these is given by contemporary travellers than by his own countrymen, though his courage, energy, cruelty and restless activity are sufficiently apparent in the Persian chronicles of his reign. At the age of thirteen, when he began his career of conquest, he was, according to Caterino Zeno¹, "of noble presence and a truly royal bearing, as in his eyes there was something, I know not what, so great and commanding, which plainly showed that he would yet some day become a great ruler. Nor did the virtues of his mind disaccord with the beauty of his person, as he had an elevated genius, and such a lofty idea of things as seemed incredible at such a tender age....He had vigour of mind, quickness of perception, and a personal valour... never yet...equalled by any of his contemporaries." Anglo-lello¹ speaks of "his beauty and pleasing manners" when he was a child, and relates² how, in his campaign against 'Alá'u'd-Dawla ("Alidoli"), "he supplied himself with provisions, paying for everything and proclaiming abroad that everyone might bring supplies to the camp for sale, and that anyone taking anything without paying for it would be put to death" 'This Sophi,' he says a little further on³, "is fair, handsome, and very pleasing, not very tall, but of a light and well framed figure, rather stout than slight, with broad shoulders. His hair is reddish, he only wears moustachios, and uses his left hand instead of his right. He is as brave as a game cock, and stronger than any of his lords, in the archery contests, out of the ten apples that are knocked down, he knocks down seven, while he is at his sport they play on various instruments and sing his praises" "He is almost worshipped," he remarks in another place⁴, "more especially by his soldiers, many of whom fight without armour, being willing to die for their master. While I was in Tauris [Tabriz] I heard that the king is displeased with this adoration, and being called God" The anonymous merchant describes him⁵ at the age of thirty one as "Very handsome, of a magnanimous countenance and about middle height, he is fair, stout, and with broad shoulders, his beard is shaved and he only wears a moustache, not appearing to be a very heavy man. He is as amiable as a girl, left handed by nature, is as lively as a fawn, and stronger than any of his lords. In the archery trials at the apple he is so expert that of every ten he hits six" The same writer, on the other hand, after describing his massacre of Alwand's soldiers, of the male and female kinsmen of Sultán Ya'qub, of three

Sháh Isma'íl's appearance and character as depicted by contemporary European travellers.

¹ Narrative of Italian Travels in Persia (Hakluyt Society, London, 1871), pp. 46-8. See p. 22 supra, where part of this passage has been already cited.

¹ Narrative of Italian Travels in Persia, p 102 and p 22 supra

² Ibid, pp 109 and 196, and p 23 supra

³ Ibid, p 111 See pp 22-3 supra

⁴ Ibid, p 115

⁵ Ibid, p 202 Part of this passage has been already quoted on p 23 supra

hundred courtezans of Tabríz, of "eight hundred avaricious Blasi"¹ who had been brought up under Alumut [i.e. Alwand], of "all the dogs in Tauris," and of his own mother [or step-mother], concludes, "From the time of Nero to the present, I doubt whether so bloodthirsty a tyrant has ever existed." He presented, in short, the strangest blend of antithetical qualities; and we are alternately attracted by his personal charm, his unquestionable valour, generosity and—within certain limits—justice, and repelled by actions, such as those recorded above, revealing a savagery remarkable even in that cruel and bloodthirsty age. His courage was shown not only on the field of battle but in the chase. Hearing after his conquest and occupation of Baghdád of a singularly fierce man-eating lion which had its lair in a thicket and terrified the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, he insisted, in spite of all remonstrances, in destroying it single-handed with the bow he knew so well how to use². At the age of thirteen he had already slain a fierce bear in like manner in a cave near Arzinján³. When "immense treasures" fell into his hands on the capture of one of the Caspian ports, "he divided them amongst his men, keeping nothing for himself⁴." Yet the same traveller who reports this instance of generosity and political foresight (for in consequence of it "he was joined by numbers, even those who were not Sufaveans flocking to his standard in hopes of receiving gifts of this nature from the valiant Ismael") describes how the Sháh with his own hand cut off the head of the unfortunate young prince "Alumut⁵," captured by treachery, whom he himself had seen bound in chains in a tent; and tells of even darker deeds wrought at Tabríz on the occasion of the Sháh's

¹ I am at a loss to explain this word.

² Aḥṣanu't-Tawárikh (Ellis MS.), f. 74^b.

³ Ibid., f. 26.

⁴ Travels of a Merchant, p. 188.

⁵ Ibid., pp. 197-8. The Habibu's-Siyar and other Persian histories, however, represent Alwand as dying a natural death. Cf. p. 55 supra.

second entry into that city in A D 1520¹. Towards the Sunnís he showed himself ruthless, sparing neither Ruthless repression of Sunnís.
 eminent divines like the learned Farídu'd-Dín Ahmad, a grandson of the celebrated scholar Sa'du'd-Dín-i-Taftázíní, who for thirty years had held the office of Shaykhu'l-Islám in Herát², nor witty poets like Banná'í who perished in the massacre of Qarshí in 918/1512. But perhaps the most conspicuous instance of a ferocity which pursued his foes even after their death was his treatment of the body of his old enemy Muhammad Khán Shaybání, or Shaybak, the Uzbek, of which we shall have to speak very shortly.

It has already been stated that the foreign relations of Sháh Isma'íl, after he had cleared Persia of the "White Sheep" and other rivals for the sceptre of that Foreign relations of Persia at this period.
 ancient kingdom, were chiefly with three Powers, the Tímúrids, who still kept a precarious hold on Herát and portions of Khurásán and Central Asia, the formidable Uzbeks of Transoxiana, and the Ottoman Turks. With the last two, rigid Sunnís in both cases, the relations of Persia were, and continued to be, uniformly hostile; with the Tímúrids, themselves menaced by the Uzbeks, comparatively friendly and at times even cordial. The aged Sultán Husayn ibn Bayqará, whose brilliant and luxurious court at Herát was so famous a centre of literature and art³, is reckoned amongst the rulers who, with less success than Sháh Isma'íl, endeavoured to replace the Sunní by the Shí'a doctrine in their dominions⁴, and Bábur, whether

¹ Travels of a Merchant, p. 207

² He was put to death in Ramaḍán, 916/December, 1510

³ See Dr F R Martin's Miniature Paintings and Painters of Persia etc., pp. 35-6

⁴ See 1st Hist Pers iii, p. 456, and Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f. 45^b, which places this attempt in the year 873/1468-9

from conviction or policy, showed enough partiality towards the Shí'a faction to cause grave disaffection amongst his Central Asian Sunnî subjects¹. There existed, then, in this case no such essential cause of enmity as in the two others, while a common hatred of Shaybání Khán and his redoubtable Uzbeks naturally tended to unite Bábur to Isma'íl.

It is beyond the scope of this work to enter into a detailed account of the decline of the Tímúrid and the rise of the Uzbek power, of which ample particulars may be found in Erskine's and other works². Suffice it to say that Shaybání or Shaybak Khán, a direct descendant of Chingíz Khán³, first became prominent about A.D. 1500, when he captured Samarqand and Bukhárá, and later Táshkand and Farghána. He invaded Khurásán in 911/1505-6, in the year of Sultán Ḥusayn's death, and in the course of the next year or two practically exterminated the Tímúrids, with the exception of Bábur and Badí'u'z-Zamán, of whom the latter sought refuge with Sháh Isma'íl. It was not until 916/1510-11, however, that he came into direct conflict with Sháh Isma'íl, whom he had provoked by a raid on Kirmán in the previous year and a most insulting letter in reply to Isma'íl's politely-worded remonstrance⁴. Sháh Isma'íl was not slow to respond to his taunts, and,

¹ See W. Erskine's History of India, vol. i (London, 1854), pp. 319-320.

² For example, the History of the Moghuls of Central Asia etc., by N. Elias and Sir E. Denison Ross (London, 1898), and, of course, the incomparable Memoirs of Bábur, in the tasteful new edition of Erskine and Leyden's translation annotated and revised by Sir Lucas King (Oxford, 1921).

³ The Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh (f. 88^b) gives his pedigree thus: Shaybak Khán b. Búdāq Sultán b. Abu'l-Khayr Khán b. Dawlat Shaykh b. iltf-Oghlan b. Fúlād-Oghlan b. Aybu Khwāja b. . . . b. Bulgháy b. Shaybán b. Jújī b. Chingíz Khán.

⁴ See Erskine's History of India, vol. i, pp. 297 et seqq. The text of this long letter is given in the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh (Ellis MS., ff. 80^b et seqq.).

the rest of his realms being for the moment tranquil, at once marched into Khurísán to meet him visiting on his way the Shrine of the Imám 'Alí Ridá at Mashhad, so sacred in Shí'a eyes. The decisive battle was fought on Dec. 1 or 2, 1510, at Táhír ábid near Merv, where after a stubborn and protracted conflict, the Uzbeks were utterly defeated and Shaybání killed. When his body was found under a heap of slain, Sháh Isma'íl ordered the limbs to be cut off and distributed to different parts of his kingdom, and the head to be stuffed with straw and sent as a grim gift to the Ottoman Sultán Báyazíd II at Constantinople.¹ The bones of the skull he caused to be mounted in gold and made into a drinking cup for his own use, and one hand he sent to Áqá Rustám Ru'ázun, the ruler of Mázandarín by a special messenger, Darwísh Muhámmad Yasá ul who cast the hand on to Rustam's skirt as he sat amidst his courtiers at Sárl, crying 'Thou didst say, 'My hand on Shírbak Khán's skirt' (dast i man ast u daman i Shaybak Khán)² lo, his hand is now on thy skirt!' So astounded were those present by this audacity that none lifted a hand to stay the messenger's departure, and Rustam received so great a shock that he soon afterwards sickened and died. Of the drinking-cup the following grim anecdote is told. One of Shaybání's trusted advisers, Khwája Kamálu'd Dín Ságharchí saved his life by professing the Shí'a faith and was admitted into the service of Sháh Isma'íl. One day at a banquet the latter, pointing to the drinking cup, asked him if he recognized the skull of his late master. "Yes, glory be to God," replied Kamálu'd Dín, "and how favoured by fortune was

¹ According to the history of Sháh Isma'íl contained in Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library (f. 141), Prince (afterwards Sultán) Salím was greatly offended at this, and had a violent quarrel with his father Báyazíd on the subject.

² I.e. 'I seek protection from him.'

he! Nay, fortune still abides with him, so that even now he rests in the hands of so auspicious a being as thyself, who continually drinks the Wine of Delight!"

سبحان الله چه صاحب دولتی بوده که هنوز دولت درو باقیست
که با این حال بر روی دست چون تو صاحب اقبالیست که
در بدم باده نشاط می نوشد

Shaybání Khán was sixty-one years of age at the time of his death and had reigned eleven years. He was, as already stated, a fanatical Sunní and had grievously persecuted the Shí'a in his dominions: now it was the Sunnís who suffered in their turn at the hands of Sháh Isma'íl. The Uzbek power, in spite of this disaster, was far from being broken, and, though a formal peace was concluded between them and the Persians a few months afterwards, they had an ample revenge at the battle of Ghujduwán, where Bábur and his Persian allies suffered a disastrous defeat and many of their leaders, including Najm-i-Thání, were slain in November, 1512. During the whole of the sixteenth century they were a constant menace to Persia, and accounts of their raids into Khurásán occur with monotonous iteration in the pages of the Persian historians of this period.

We must now turn to the far more important relations of Persia with the Ottoman Turks at this period, on which more light is thrown by the State Papers so industriously compiled and edited by Firídún Bey in 982/1574 under the title of Munsha'át-i-Salá-tín ("Correspondence of the Kings")¹ than by

Firídún Bey's
collection of Turkish State Papers.

¹ Printed at Constantinople in 1274/1858. Until lately I only possessed vol. i, which comprises 626 pp. and comes down to about 966/1558-9. For some account of this most important work, see von Hammer's Gesch. d. Osmanisch. Reich., iv, p. 15; Flügel's Vienna Catalogue, i, pp. 282-3; Z.D.M.G., vii, p. 460; Notices et extraits, v, pp. 668-688; Rieu's Turkish Cat., pp. 80-83; and Hájji Khalífa (ed. Flügel), v, p. 488.

most of the Persian or Turkish historians. These letters, which passed between successive Ottoman Sultans and neighbouring rulers as well as between them and their sons, ministers and governors, are sometimes in Turkish and sometimes in Persian or Arabic. Unfortunately many of them are undated. They have hitherto been so little used that no apology is needed for summarizing the contents or indicating the purport of such of them as concern the Safawis down to the death of Shāh Ismā'īl in 930/1523-4, that is, during the reigns of the Ottoman Sultans Bāyazīd II (886-918/1481-1512) Sūlīm I (918-926/1512-1520), and the first four years of Sulaymān 'the Magnificent' (926-930/1520-1524).

(1) From Ya'qub Pādishāh of the 'White Sheep' dynasty to Sultān Bāyazīd, anno incing the defeat and death of Shaykh Haydar (Shāh Ismā'īl's father), (p. 309). This letter, in Persian, is undated, but must have been written soon after Shaykh Haydar, who is called the 'President of the people of error' (Sar i halqa i arbāb i dalāl) was killed on June 30, 1488. The writer assumes that the news of the destruction of "these misguided rebels, enemies of the Prophetic Dispensation and foes of Church and State" will be welcome to all good Muslims.

(2) Sultān Bāyazīd's answer to the above, also in Persian and undated (p. 311). Congratulations are offered to Ya'qub on the victory of "the Bāyandārī hosts of salvation" over the 'misguided Haydari faction' (guruh i dālla i-Haydariyya).

(3) From Shāh Ismā'īl to Sultān Bāyazīd II, requesting that his disciples in Asia Minor may not be prevented from visiting him at Ardābil (p. 345). This letter, undated and in Persian, is important as proving how numerous were the partisans of the Safawis in the Ottoman dominions.

¹ Bāyandārī is an alternative name for the Aq Qoyunlū, or "White Sheep" dynasty.

(4) Sultán Báýazíd's answer to the above, also in Persian and undated (pp. 345-6). The Ottoman Sultán says that, having investigated the matter, he finds that the motive of many of these pilgrims is not the desire to fulfil a pious duty, but to escape from the obligation of military service.

(5) From Sháh Isma'íl to Sultán Báýazíd on the same subject, also in Persian and undated (pp. 346-7). He explains that he has been compelled to enter Ottoman territory to chastise his foes, but intends thereby no unfriendly or disrespectful act towards Báýazíd, and has strictly enjoined his soldiers to respect the persons and property of the inhabitants.

(6) Sultán Báýazíd's answer to the above, also in Persian and undated (p. 347). Báýazíd accepts Isma'íl's assurances, and has ordered his officials to co-operate with him in a friendly spirit.

(7) From Alwand, the Áq-Qoyúnlú ruler of Persia, to Sultán Báýazíd, in Persian, except the Arabic prologue, and undated (pp. 351-2). Alwand announces the arrival of Báýazíd's envoy Maḥmúd Áqá Cháwúsh-báshi with his master's letter, urging the Báýandarí or Áq-Qoyúnlú family to unite against their common enemy, the "rascally Red-heads" (Awbásh-i-Qizil-básh). Alwand promises to do his best, whether his relations help him or not, provided he can count on material and moral support from Báýazíd.

(8) Báýazíd's answer to the above, also in Persian and undated (pp. 352-3). He commends Alwand's resolve, and promises help against the "rebellious horde of the Qizil-báshes" (ṭa'ifa-i-bághiya-i-Qizil-báshiyya).

(9) From Báýazíd to Hájji Rustam Beg the Kurd, in Persian, dated Rabí' i, 908/September 1502 (p. 353). He asks for correct information as to the doings of the Qizil-báshes and the result of their struggle with the Áq-Qoyúnlú or Báýandarí princes, to be communicated to his envoy Kaywán Cháwúsh.

(10) Hájji Rustam's reply to the above, in Persian and undated (pp. 353-4). The writer states that the "religion-rendering Qizil-báshes" (Qizil-básh-i-Madhhab-kharásh), having defeated Alwand and Murád of the Áq-Qoyúnlu family, are now seeking an alliance with Egypt against the Ottoman Turks, and are advancing on Mar'ash and Diyár Bakr.

(11) From Sultán Báyzíd to Sultán Ghúrí of Egypt, in Arabic, dated 910/1504-5 (pp. 354-5). This letter contains an allusion to "the man who has appeared in the Eastern countries and defeated their ruler and overcome their peoples," which, as appears from the answer, refers to Sháh Isma'íl, or possibly Sháh-qulí.

(12) Answer to the above, in Arabic, undated (pp. 355-6). This letter contains a reference to "the victory of the misguided Qizil-báshí faction in the Eastern countries," described as a "public calamity which has appeared in those regions."

These are the only letters in Sultán Báyzíd's correspondence directly connected with the Safawís, though there are others of interest to students of Persian history addressed to Sultán Abu'l-Ghází Husayn (911/1506), the poet Jámí¹, the philosopher Jalálu'd-Dín Dawání, and the Shaykhu'l-Islám of Herát Farídu'd-Dín Ahmad-i-Taftázání (913/1507), who was put to death by Sháh Isma'íl three years later for refusing to subscribe to the Shí'a doctrine. Before we consider the State Papers of Sultán Salm's reign, something more must be said of the beginnings of that bitter strife between Turkey and Persia which is one of the most prominent features of the whole Safawí period, and has done so much to undermine the unity and weaken the power of Islám. And here we cannot do better than quote the opening paragraph of old Richard Knolles's¹ account of the formidable Shí'a revolt in Anatolia promoted by the celebrated Sháh-qull ("King's servant"), called by the Turks Shaytán-qull ("Devil's servant"), the son of Hasan Khalífa a disciple of Isma'íl's father Shaykh Haydar.

Growth of the bitter hostility between Persia and Turkey

¹ See Lit. Hist. Pers, iii, pp. 422-3

"After so many troubles," says Knolles, "Bajazet gave himself unto a quiet course of life, spending most part of his time in study of Philosophy and conference with learned men; unto which peaceable kind of life he was of his own natural disposition more enclined than to Wars; albeit that the regard of his State and the earnest desire of his Men of War drew him oftentimes even against his Will into the Field. As for the Civil Government of his Kingdom he referred it wholly to his three principal Bassacs, Alis, Achmetes and *Jachia*², who at their pleasure disposed of all things. After that he had in this quiet and pleasing kind of life to his great contentment passed over five years, of a little neglected Spark suddainly arose such a Fire in Asia as was hardly after with much blood of his People and danger of that part of his Empire quenched; the reliques whereof yet trouble those superstitious People at this day. Which thing was brought to pass by the crafty device of Chasan Chelife and Schach Culi his Boy (whom some call Teckel Scachoculu and others Techellis)³, two Hypocritical Persians; who flying into those countries and with the counterfeit shew of feigned Holiness having procured to themselves a great name amongst those rude People, with a number of windy headed Followers (filled with the novelty of their new

The Shí'a rising
in Asia Minor.

¹ I quote the sixth edition of his Turkish History, with Sir Paul Rycaut's continuation, published in London in 1687. The passage in question occurs on p. 315 of vol. i.

² I.e. 'Alí, Aḥmad and Yaḥyá Pashas.

³ These names stand for Hasan Khalífa, Sháh-qull, and Takallú or Tekellú, i.e. of the Tekké-ili.

Doctrine) raised first such a diversity of opinions about the true successors of their untrue Prophet, and afterwards such a Rebellion amongst the People, as that the one yet remaineth, and the other was not in a good while after without great bloodshed appeased"

There follows a lengthy account of this dangerous rebellion, in which the Turks suffered several severe reverses and lost many notable officers, including the Grand Vezír Khadım 'Alí Pasha, ere the rebels were dispersed, killed, or driven into Persia. Instead of rewarding or comforting the fugitives, however, Shah Isma'íl put many of them to death at Tabriz, because, as Knolles says¹, they had plundered a caravan of rich merchants, but, according to the most modern Turkish historian², in order to clear himself of complicity in the eyes of Báyzíd. Knolles adds that "Techellis himself (ie Sháh qulí), to the terror of others, was burnt alive", but, according to the Turkish historian, he fell at the same time as 'Alí Pasha in the battle of Gyuk Cháy, between Síwás and Qaysariyya, in which statement the *Ahsanu't-Tawarikh*³ agrees. "Techellis thus put to

Massacre of Shí'a throughout the Turkish Empire

flight," continues Knolles, "*Jonuses*⁴ caused strait inquisition to be made through all the Cities of the lesser Asia for all such as had professed the Persian Religion, and them whom he found to have borne Arms in the late Rebellion he caused to be put to death with most exquisite torments and the rest to be burnt in their Foreheads with an hot Iron, thereby forever to be known, whom together with the Kinsfolks and Friends of them that were executed or

¹ Op cit, p 324

² 'Abdu'r Rahman Sheref's History of the Ottoman Empire (Constantinople, 2nd edition, 1315/1897-8), vol 1, pp 196-7. Cf von Hammer's Gesch d Osmanisch Reich, vol 11, pp 359-360 and 393-4

³ Ff 90-91 of Mr A G Ellis's MS

⁴ Yunus Pasha, Grand Vezír to Sulţán Selim, executed in 923/1517

fled with Techellis he caused to be transported into Europe and to be dispersed through Macedonia, Epirus and Peloponnesus, for fear lest if Techellis, now fled into the Persian Kingdom, should from thence return with new Forces, they should also again repair unto him and raise a new Rebellion. This was the beginning, course, and ending of one of the most dangerous Rebellions that ever troubled the Turkish Empire; wherein all, or at leastwise the greatest part, of their Dominions in Asia might have been easily surprised by the Persian King, if he would thoroughly have prosecuted the occasion and opportunity then offered." These events are placed by Knolles in A.D. 1508, but by the Ahsan'u't-Tawárikh in 917/1511-12, the year before Báyazíd's death.

It is curious that little or nothing is said by the Persian historians about this massacre of the Shí'a in Turkey, which von Hammer describes as one of the most dreadful deeds ever perpetrated in the name of Religion, not excepting the cruelties of the Inquisition or the Massacre of St Bartholomew. That most of the Turkish historians ignore it is less astonishing, since it can hardly be a matter of pride for them. Knolles appears to be mistaken in placing it in the reign of Báyazíd II, for there can hardly have been two such massacres, and one certainly took place in 1514 after the accession of Salím, as witnessed by Nicolo Giustiniani in an account dated October 7 of that year¹. The number of victims is placed by Sa'du'd-Dín, Soláq-záda and 'Alí Abu'l-Faql, the son of Idrís of Bitlís, at 40,000. The particulars given by the last-named writer, quoted by von Hammer in the original Persian verse transliterated into the Roman character, are as follows²:

¹ See von Hammer, op. cit., vol. ii, p. 403 ad calc. The passage runs: "Che il Signor havea mandá a far amazzar tutti della secta di Sofi."

² Ibid., p. 638.

فرستاد سلطانِ دانا رسومِ
 دیرانِ دانا سهر مرور و رسومِ
 که اتباعِ این قوم را قسم قسمِ
 در آرد بسوگِ قلمر اسم اسمِ
 ر هفت و ر هفتاد ساله نسامِ
 بیآرد بدیوانِ عالی مقامِ
 چو دفتر سپردند اهلِ حسابِ
 پس آنکه بحکام هر کشوریِ
 رساندند فرمانسراںِ دفتریِ
 سهر حاکم رفته قدم ار قلمِ
 سهد تیغ نران قدم بر قدمِ
 شد اعدادِ این کشته های دیارِ
 فروں ار حسابِ قلمر چل هرازِ

Von Hammer's translation, which can hardly be bettered, runs as follows

"Der Sultan wohlbewandert, voll Verstand, Schickt kund'ge Schreiber aus in jedes Land ,
 Aufzeichnen sollen sie nach Stamm und Stammen
 Die Junger dieses Volks mit Nahn und Nahmen
 Von sieben Jahren bis auf siebzig Jahr
 Bring' im Diwan die List ein jeder dar
 Es waren Vierzigtausend grad enthalten
 In den Verzeichnissen von Jung und Alten,
 Die Bringer dieser Listen wurden dann
 Gesandt an die Statthalter mit Ferman
 Wo immer hin die Feder war gekommen,
 Ward Fuss für Fuss das Schwert zur Hand genommen
 Es wurden hingerichtet in dem Land
 Mehr als die Zahl, die in den Listen stand "

Turning now once more to the Munsha'at of Firîdûn Bey, we find the following letters belonging to the reign of Sultân Salîm which bear on his relations with Persia

Sultân Salîm's Persian correspondence

(13) From Sultan Salîm to 'Ubayd Khan the Uzbek, in Persian, dated the end of Muharram, AH 920 (March 27, 1514), only five months before the Battle of Chaldiran (pp 374-7) In this long letter, sent by the hand of a certain Muhammad Bey, Salîm denounces 'that vile, impure, sinful, slanderous, reprehensible and blood-thirsty

Şúff-cub" (to wit Sháh Isma'íl), "at whose hands the people of the Eastern lands are rendered desperate"

كه اهالى بلاد شرق از دستِ صوفى بچهء لئيم ناپاك ائيم افاك زمير سفاك بجان آمده اند

and calls upon 'Ubayd Khán to do his part in avenging the death of his father Shaybak Khán.

(14) Answer to the above, also in Persian, dated the end of Jumáda ii, 920 (August 21, 1514), pp. 377-9. In this letter 'Ubayd Khán describes how he has already avenged his father and slain "the lesser dog, agent and lieutenant of the greater dog (i.e. Sháh Isma'íl), who in his quintessential folly had conferred on him the title of *Najm-i-Thání*¹," and promises to aid the Turkish Sultán in extirpating the "inconsiderable remnant" (شرذمهء قليله) of the "rascally infidels and heretical 'Red-heads'" (زنداقهء اوباش و ملاحدهء) (قرلباش).

(15) From Sultán Salím to Sháh Isma'íl, in Persian, dated Şafar, 920 (April, 1514), pp. 379-381. This letter, written in the most arrogant and offensive tone, calls on Isma'íl to repent of his heresies and evil practices, especially the cursing of "the two Shaykhs" (Abú Bakr and 'Umar), and threatens, should he continue obdurate, to invade and wrest from him "the lands which he has usurped by violence."

(16) From Sultán Salím to Muḥammad Beg Aq-Qoyúnlu, in Persian, dated the end of Şafar, 920 (April 25, 1514), pp. 381-2, congratulating him on the sound Sunní principles of himself and his family and subjects, and inviting his co-operation against the "heretical 'Red-heads'."

¹ This victory of the Uzbeks over the allied forces of Sháh Isma'íl and Bábur took place on Ramadán 17, 918 (Nov. 26, 1512). Amír Najmu'd-Dín Mas'úd ("the First Najm" or "Star") died in 915 (1509-1510) and was succeeded in his office and title by Amír Yár Aḥmad-i-Işfahání, called Najm-i-Thání, "the Second Najm" or "Star."

(17) Reply to the above, in Persian dated the end of Rabī' II, 920 (June 23, 1514), p 382 From this it appears that Sālm's letter was brought by an envoy named Ahmad Jān, who took back the answer, and that the writer was in great fear that the correspondence might be discovered

(18) Sultan Sālm's second letter to Shāh Isma'īl, in Persian and undated, pp 382-3 In this letter Sālm lays claim to the Caliphate, accuses Shāh Isma'īl and his family of heresy and immorality, and calls on him to repent and suffer Persia to be annexed to the Ottoman dominions

(19) Sultan Sālm's third letter to Isma'īl, in Turkish, dated the end of Jumāda I 920 (July 23 1514) and written from Arzinjān, trunting him with his apparent unwillingness to try the fortune of battle.

(20) Shāh Isma'īl's reply to Sultan Sālm's three letters, in Persian and undated (pp 384-5) This is apparently the letter to which Cressy refers in his History of the Ottoman Turks (ed 1877, pp 136-7) for the writer hints that Sālm's secretary must have written under the influence of bang or opium, and sends a gold casket filled with a special preparation of one or both of these narcotics, sealed with the Royal Seal, by the hand of his messenger Shāh qulī Āghā

(21) Sultan Sālm's fourth letter to Isma'īl, in Turkish, dated the end of Jumāda II 920 (August 21, 1514) again challenging him to battle

Shortly after this last letter was written namely early in the month of Rajab¹, 920 (August—September, 1514), a great battle was fought between the Turks and Persians at Chāldīrān, situated some 20 parasangs from Tabriz, where 3000 of the former and 2000 of the latter were slain but the Turkish artillery decided the day, and Shāh Isma'īl, notwithstanding the valour shown by him and his devoted followers, was forced

The Battle of Chāldīrān
August 1514

¹ On the first of the month (Aug 22, 1514) according to Firdun Bey (p 402)

to give way and to fall back beyond Tabríz, which was occupied by the Turks on Rajab 16, 920 (Sept. 6, 1514). Many men of note on both sides were slain; of the Turks Hasan Pasha, Begler-begi of Rumelia, who commanded the left wing of the Ottoman army, Hasan Bey, Governor of Morea, Uways Bey of Caesarea, Ayás Bey of Latakia, and many other high civil and military officials; of the Persians Amír Sayyid-i-Sharíf of Shíráz, a protagonist of the Shí'a doctrine, Amír 'Abdu'l-Báqí, a descendant of the noted saint Sháh Ni'matu'lláh of Kirmán, Sayyid Muḥammad Kamúna of Najaf, Khán Muḥammad Khan, and many others.

Sultán Salím, greatly elated by his success, immediately despatched the usual bombastic proclamations of victory

Sultán Salím's proceedings after the victory of Cháldirán.

(fath-náma) to his son Sulaymán, to the Khán of the Crimea, to the Kurdish chieftains, to Sultán Murád, the last of the Áq-Qoyúnlu or "White Sheep" dynasty, to Sháh Rustam of Luristán, to the Governor of Adrianople, and others. The texts of these documents are given by Firídún Bey (pp. 386-96), but they are followed (pp. 396-407) by a document of much greater historical value, namely a detailed journal of the movements of the Turkish army from the time they marched out of Adrianople on Muḥarram 3, 920 (March 20, 1514) until they returned to winter at Amásiya at the end of the same year (Nov.-Dec., 1514). They marched in 105 stages from Adrianople to Tabríz by way of Constantinople, Caesarea, Síwás, Arzinján, Cháldirán, Khúy and Marand; thence back to Amásiya in 58 stages, by way of Nakhjuwán, Jisr-i-Júbán, and Bayburt. They erected a pyramid of the skulls of their enemies on the field of battle, handed over to Ja'far Bey one of Sháh Isma'íl's wives who fell into their hands, and massacred Khálid Bey and 150 of his Qizil-básh companions at the village of Sáhilán the day before they entered Tabríz, in which city, however, they seem to have behaved with moderation, as even the Persian historian of Sháh Isma'íl testifies¹ Sultán Salím remained there only about a week (Sept 6-14, 1514), when he departed, taking with him the Tímúrid Prince Badí'u'z-Zamán, the fugitive son of the late Sultán Abu'l-Gházi Husayn ibn Bayqará², and a number of skilled artisans whom he proposed to settle in his dominions. Within two or three weeks of his departure Sháh Isma'íl was back in Tabríz. According to Sir John Malcolm³, "the effect of so great a reverse upon the sanguine mind of Isma'íl was deep and lasting, and though before of a cheerful disposition he was never afterwards seen to smile." But as a matter of fact the defeat, decisive as it was, had little permanent effect, since the discontent and nostalgia of the Janissaries compelled the Ottoman Sultán to withdraw from Persian territory, and, save for the extirpation of the little Dhu'l-Qadar dynasty⁴ at Kamákh near Arzinjín in the spring of A D 1515, his martial ardour was fully occupied, until his death in A D 1520, with the subjection of Egypt, Syria and Arabia.

Sháh Isma'íl, on his return to Tabríz after the battle of Cháldirán, sent a very polite and apologetic letter⁵ by the hand of Núru'd-Dín 'Abdu'l-Wahháb to Sultán Salím, who, apparently, vouchsafed no reply, but some months later (end of Rajab, 921 = Sept. 9, 1515) wrote in Turkish a long letter to 'Ubayd Khán the Uzbek inciting him to persecute the Shí'a⁶.

¹ Add. 200 of the Cambridge University Library, f 151.

² He died at Constantinople four months later of the plague.

³ History of Persia, vol. 1, p. 504. I can find no confirmation of this in the Persian histories which I have consulted.

⁴ According to the Akhsanu't Tawárikh it comprised only four rulers, Malík Aşlân, Sulaymán, Náşiru'd Dín and 'Alí'u'd Dáwla, of whom the last, together with four of his sons and thirty of his followers, was decapitated by Sultán Salím's soldiers on June 13 1515.

⁵ Firidun Bey, vol. 1, pp. 413-414.

⁶ Ibid., pp. 415-416.

The documents connected with Sultán Salím's reign fill another 84 pages of Firídún Bey's compilation¹, but, with one notable exception, contain only incidental abusive references to Sháh Isma'íl. The exception is formed by two poems, one in Persian and the other in Turkish, addressed to Sultán Salím by an unpatriotic Persian named Khwája Işfahání, probably identical with Khwája Mawláná-yi-Işfahání, a fanatical Sunní who attached himself to the Uzbek Shaybak Khán, and whose death is recorded in the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh under the year 927/1521².

The following verses from the Persian poem will suffice to give an idea of its character.

A Persian congratulatory poem addressed to Sultán Salím.

اِلا اِی قاصِدِ فرخنده منظر
نیازم بر سوی شاهِ مظفر
بگو اِی پادشاهِ جمله عالم
توئی امروز در مردی مسلم
اساسِ دین تو در دنیا نهادی
تو شرعِ مصطفی بر جا نهادی
مجدّد گشت دین از همّت تو
جهان در زیر بارِ منّت تو
اگر ملكِ شریعت مستقیم است
همه از دولتِ سلطان سلیم است
ز بیمت در تزلزلِ فارس و ترك
چو افگندی ز سر تاجِ قزل بُرك
فگندی تاجش از سر اِی مظفر
فكن اكنون بمردي از تنش سر

¹ The last ends on p. 500.

² From a line in his Turkish poem it appears that his home was in Khurásán and Khwárazm (Khiva), which he had been compelled to leave since "Infidelity had completely destroyed the Home of Faith, and established itself in the Seat of Religion."

قرل بُرُکت همچون مارِ العیٰ

سرشرا تا نکوبی نیست بعیٰ

توئی امروز ز اوصافِ شریفه

حدارا و محمدرا حلیفه

۱۰ روا داری که کر و ملحدِ دد

دهد دشایم اصحابِ محمد

تو اورا شکسی از زورِ مردی

سرشرا تا بُرده باز کردی

اگر گیرد امایی در سلامت

بگیرم دامت را در قیامت

چنین دیدم ز اخبارِ پیمبر

که ذو القرنین ند در رومِ قیصر

نذو القرنین از آن خودرا علم کرد

که ملکِ فارس را با رومِ صر کرد

۱۱ دو قربِ او شهی اندر جهان شد

بشرق و غرب حکم او روان شد

بیا از نصرِ دین کسرِ صر کن

بتحتِ رومِ ملکِ فارس صر کن

"O messenger of auspicious aspect, carry my prayer to the victorious King

Say, 'O King of all the World, thou art today accredited in valour Thou didst lay the foundations of Religion in the World, thou didst restore the Holy Law of Muṣṭafá [Muhammad]

Religion hath been renovated by thy zeal, the World lies under the burden of thy favour

If the realm of the Holy Law is firmly established, it is all through the fortune of Sulṭán Salīm

Persia and Turkey quake through fear of thee, since thou hast cast from his head the crown of the Red-cap¹.

O victorious one, thou hast cast his crown from his head : now manfully cast his head from his body !

The Red-head is like the viper ; until thou crushest his head it availeth nothing.

Thou art today, through thy noble qualities, the Vicar (Khálifa) of God and of Muḥammad.

Dost thou hold it right that the guebre² and brute-heretic should revile the Companions of the Prophet ?³

If thou dost not break him by the strength of thy manhood, and if thou turnest back without having cut off his head,

If he obtains amnesty in safety, I will seize thy skirt in the day of Resurrection.

Thus have I seen in the accounts of the Prophet, that Dhu'l-Qarnayn ("the Two-horned")⁴ was Emperor in Rome.

For this cause did he style himself Dhu'l-Qarnayn, because he added the dominion of Persia to that of Rome⁵.

His two horns were sovereignty throughout the World ; his orders ran through East and West.

Come, break the Idol by the aid of the Faith, and add the Kingdom of Persia to the Throne of Rome⁶ ! "

Sultán Salím died in 926/1520, having reigned, according to the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh, 8 years, 8 months and 8 days. He was succeeded by his son Sulaymán, called by his

¹ Burk is a Turkish word denoting a kind of tall fur cap, and Qizil-burk ("Red-cap") is, of course, equivalent to Qizil-básh (Persian Surkh-sar) "Red-head."

² The word gabr (anglicized by Thomas Moore as "guebre") properly denotes a Zoroastrian, but is constantly applied by writers of this period to any non-Muslim, infidel or heretic, like the corresponding gyawur ("giaour") of the Turks. See p. 95 infra.

³ This, of course, refers to the cursing of Abú Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthmán instituted by Sháh Isma'íl. See pp. 53-4 supra.

⁴ This mysterious person is commonly (as here) identified with Alexander the Great. See Qur'án xviii, 82, 85, 93 and commentary thereon.

⁵ The term Rúm was applied successively to the Roman, the Byzantine and the Ottoman Empires, and by the Persian historians of this period the Ottoman Sultán is constantly called Qaysar-i-Rúm.

countrymen "the Law-giver" (Qánuní) and by Europeans "the Magnificent" The Persian poet Amíní composed a poem on his accession, of which each half verse (misra') yields the date 926 The following verse is cited as a specimen by the

Ahsanu't-Tawarikh

بداده رمان ملكتِ كامرانی ' نكاوسِ عهد و سليمانِ ثانی

"Fortune hath given the Kingdom of Desire to the Ká'us of the Age, the Second Solomon"

Three years later (in 929/1523), when Sultán Sulaymán conquered Rhodes, another Persian Poet, Niyází, commemorated this victory in an equally ingenious qasída beginning

در اولِ حلوسی بویِ سرفراری ' دوم فتحِ اردوسِ الا ای بیاری

where the first half-verse gives the date of Sulaymán's accession (926/1520), and the second the date of the conquest of Rhodes¹

Shah Isma'íl died on Monday, Rajab 19, A H 930 (May 23 1524) at the age of 38 after a reign of 24 years and was buried with his fathers at Ardabíl He left four sons, Tahmásp, born on Dhu'l-Hijja 26, A H 919 (Feb 22, 1514), who succeeded him, Alqás, born in 922/1516, and Sám and Bahram, both born in the following year, besides five daughters² In his reign the sword was more active than the pen He not only eliminated all of his numerous rivals in Persia, but greatly enlarged her frontiers "His kingdom," says the *Ahsanu't-Tawarikh*³,

¹ Ahsanu't Tawárikh (Mr Ellis's MS, f 128) The first misra' gives the correct date (926), but the second, as written in the MS (with دوم), gives 940 I have emended this to دوم, which gives 930, though this is still one too much

² Khánish Khánum, Parí Khán Khánum, Mihínbánu Sultánum, Firangish Khánum and Zaynab Khánum

³ F 131

“included Ádharbáyján, Persian ‘Irâq, Khurásán, Fárs, Kirmán and Khúzistán, while Diyár Bakr, Balkh and Merv were at times under his control. In the battle-field he was a lion wielding a dagger, and in the banquet-hall a cloud raining pearls. Such was his bounty that pure gold and worthless salt were alike in his sight, while by reason of his lofty spirit the produce of ocean and mine did not suffice for the donations of a single day, and his treasury was generally empty. He had a passion for the chase, and alone used to slay lions. He had issued orders that whoever should bring news of a lion should receive from his officers a horse and saddle; and he who should bring news of a leopard an unsaddled horse. He would go forth alone and kill lions and leopards. During his reign he fought five [great] battles, the first with Farrukh-Yasár king of Shírwán at the place called Jabání, the second with Alwand at Shurúr, the third with Sultán Murád at Alma Qúlághí near Hamadán, the fourth with Shaybak Khán in the neighbourhood of Merv, and the fifth with Sultán Salím at Cháldirán¹.” The date of his death (930) is given by the word Zill, “Shadow” (of God), and by the words Khusráw-i-Dín, “Prince of the Faith,” as expressed in the two following chronograms:

‘شاه گردون پناه اسمعیل’ آنکه چون مهر در نقاب شده
‘از جهان رفت و ظل شدش تاریخ’ سایه تاریخ آفتاب شده

رباعی

‘شاهی که چو خورشید جهان گشت مبین’
‘بزدود غبار ظلم از روی زمین’

¹ These battles were fought in 906/1500, 907/1501, 908/1503, 916/1510, and 920/1514 respectively. In all except the last Sháh Isma‘íl was victorious.

تاریخ وفات آن شه شیر کمین'

از خسرو دین طلب که شد خسرو دین'

As regards literature, there was, as elsewhere explained, an extraordinary dearth of remarkable poets in Persia during the whole Şafawî period¹, while the great theologians belong to a later time when the Shî'a faith, raised by Shâh Isma'il to the position of the established national religion of Persia, had taken firm root. Most of the celebrated writers whose deaths are recorded in the Ahsanû't-Tawarikh and other chronicles of Isma'il's reign really belong to the brilliant circle who gathered round the Tîmûrid Sultân Abu'l Ghâzî Husayn and his talented Minister Mîr 'Alî Shîr Nawâ'î. Such were the poets Hâtîfî, nephew of the great Jâmf, who died in 927/1521, Amîr Husayn Mu'ammâ'î (d. 904/1498-9), Ban-nâ'î, who perished in the massacre wrought by Isma'il's general *Najm-i-Thânt*² at Qarshî in 918/1512, Hilâlî, who was killed by the Uzbeks at Herât in 935/1528-9 for his alleged Shî'a proclivities, the philosopher Jalâlu'd-Dîn Dawânî (d. 908/1502-3), the historian Mîrkhwând (d. 903/1497-8 at the age of 66), and the versatile Husayn Wa'iz-i-Kâshifî, commentator, ethicist and narrator, best known as the author of the *Anwar-i-Suhayl*³. The poet Qâsimî celebrated the achievements of Shâh Isma'il in a Shâh-nama, hitherto unpublished and but rarely met with even in manuscript⁴, completed ten years after the death of that monarch, who appears to have been less susceptible than most Persian potentates to the flattery of courtiers and venal verse-makers⁵.

¹ See pp. 24-29 supra.

² See p. 74 ad calc.

³ Accounts of the more notable of these writers will be found in the preceding volume of this history, Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion.

⁴ See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, pp. 660-661.

⁵ See p. 28 supra.

CHAPTER III.

CULMINATION AND DECLINE OF THE ŞAFAWÎ POWER, FROM SHÁH ṬAHMÁSP (A.D. 1524-1576) TO SHÁH ḤUSAYN (A.D. 1694-1722).

Ṭahmásp, the eldest of Isma'íl's sons, was only ten years of age when he succeeded his father. He reigned over Persia for fifty-two years and a half, and died on May 14, 1576. In the contemporary chronicles he is usually denoted as Sháh-i-Dín-panáh ("the King who is the Refuge of Religion"). The date of his accession is commemorated in the following verse:

Accession of
Sháh Ṭahmásp
(May 23, 1524).

طهماسب شاه عالم كز نصرت الهی،

جا بعد شاه غازی بر تخت زر گرفتی

جای پدر گرفتی کردی جهان مستخر،

تاریخ سلطنت شد جای پدر گرفتی،¹

"O Ṭahmásp, King of the World, who, by the Divine Assistance, didst take thy place on the throne of gold after the Victorious King!

Thou didst take the place of thy father; thou didst subdue the world:
'Thou didst take the place of thy father' (já-yi-pidur girifti)¹ was the date of thine accession."

Of the numerous records of his long reign two, on which in what follows I shall chiefly draw, are worthy of special note; his own autobiography² from his accession on Monday, Rajab 19, 930 (May 23, 1524), to his shameful surrender of the Turkish Prince

Two chief Persian authorities on this reign.

¹ $3 + 1 + 10 + 2 + 4 + 200 + 20 + 200 + 80 + 400 + 10 = 930$ A.H. = 1523-4 A.D.

² Printed by the late Dr Paul Horn in vol. xlv of the Z.D.M.G. (for 1890), pp. 563-649; and lithographed in vol. ii of the Maṭla'w'sh-Shams of Muḥammad Ḥasan Khán I'timádu's-Saltāna, pp. 165-213.

Báyazíd, who had sought refuge at his court, in 969/1561-2, and the excellent Ahsanú't-Tauárikh of Hāsan Bey Rumlú, concluded in 985/1577-8 only a year after Tahmásp's death. The autobiography, possibly suggested by Bábur's incomparable Memoirs, is far inferior to that most instructive and amusing work, and is not greatly superior to the overestimated Diaries of the late Násiru'd Dín Sháh, but it throws some valuable light on the mentality of Tahmásp, and on those inner conditions which it is so difficult to deduce from the arid pages of the official chronicles containing for the most part a mere record of interminable wars and massacres, and leaving us quite in the dark as to the social and intellectual state of the people. That

Character of Tahmásp.

Tahmásp was a bigot is indicated both by Sir John Malcolm¹ and Erskine², though the former historian takes the more favourable view of his character, describing him as "of a kind and generous disposition," and adding that he "appears to have possessed prudence and spirit, and, if he was not distinguished by great qualities, he was free from any remarkable vices." Anthony Jenkinson, who carried a letter of recommendation from Queen Elizabeth³, had a not very gratifying audience with him at Qazwín in November, 1562⁴. The Venetian Ambassador Vincentio d'Alessandri, who was accredited to appearance.

His personal

his Court in 1571, describes him⁵, "in the sixty-fourth year of his age, and the fifty first of his reign," as "of middling stature, well formed in

¹ History of Persia, vol. 1, pp. 511-513.

² A History of India under Baber and Humáyún (London, 1854), vol. II, pp. 285 etc.

³ For the text of this curious letter, see the Hakluyt Society's Early Voyages and Travels to Russia and Persia (No. lxxii, London, 1886), pp. 112-114.

⁴ Ibid., pp. 144-147.

⁵ Travels of Venetians in Persia (Hakluyt Society, 1873), pp. 215 et seqq.

person and features, although dark, of thick lips and a grizzly beard," and says that he was "more of a melancholy disposition than anything else, which is also known by many signs, but principally by his not having come out of his palace for the space of eleven years, nor having once gone to the chase nor any other kind of amusement, to the great dissatisfaction of his people." He further describes him as boastful, but unwarlike and "a man of very little courage"; as caring little for law and justice, but much for women and money; as mean and avaricious, "buying and selling with the cunning of a small merchant." "Notwithstanding the things mentioned above," he concludes, "which make one think he ought to be hated, the reverence and love of the people for the King are incredible, as they worship him not as a king but as a god, on account of his descent from the line of 'Alí, the great object of their veneration," and he cites the most extraordinary instances of this devotion and even deification, which is not confined to the common people but extends to members of the Royal Family and courtiers, and to the inhabitants of the remotest parts of his realms. One magnanimous act of the king's

Ṭahmásp much influenced by dreams.

reign, which led to a great alleviation of the burden of taxation imposed on his people, the Venetian Ambassador ascribes to the influence of a dream, "in which the Angels took him by the throat and asked him whether it was becoming to a king, surnamed the Just and descended from 'Alí, to get such immense profits by the ruin of so many poor people; and then ordered him to free the people from them." This story is likely enough, for Ṭahmásp in his Memoirs records numerous dreams to which he evidently attached great importance. Thus in a dream 'Alí promises him victory over the Uzbeks about A.D. 1528¹, and a year or two later at Herát advises him as to another campaign¹, whereon he remarks, "the belief of this weak servant Tahmásp as-Safawí al-Músawí al-Husayn² is that whoever sees His Holiness the Commander of the Faithful (i.e. 'Alí), on whom be the blessings of God, in a dream, that which he says will come to pass." Again in his twentieth year two consecutive dreams, in the second of which he sought and obtained from the Imám 'Alí Ridá confirmation of the first, led him to repent of wine-drinking and other excesses, and to close all the taverns and houses of ill-repute in his domains, on which occasion he composed the following quatrain³

¹ P. 584 of Horn's Denkwürdigkeiten cited above p. 84, n. 2.

يکچند بی زمرّد سوده شدیم یکچند بیاقوتِ تر آلوده شدیم
آلودگئی بود بهر رنگ که بود سُستیم بآبِ توبه آسوده شدیم

His conversion or repentance

"For a while we pursued the crushed emerald⁴,
For a while we were defiled by the liquid ruby⁵,
Defilement it was, under whatever colour
We washed in the Water of Repentance, and were at peace"

This "repentance" or conversion of Sháh Tahmásp is recorded in the Ahsanu't-Tawárikh under the year 939/1532-3.

About the same time the army of the Ottoman Sultán Sulaymán, profiting as usual by Persia's preoccupation with one of the constantly recurring Uzbek invasions of her north-eastern province, marched into Adharbáyján, where it was overtaken by a premature but violent snow-storm (it was in the month of Premature snow causes disaster to Turkish army

¹ Horn, loc. cit., p. 592

² These three epithets refer to his ancestors Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Dín, the Imám Músá al-Kázim and the Imám Husayn

³ Horn, loc. cit., p. 600, also cited in the Atashkada (Bombay lith., 1277/1860-1, p. 17)

⁴ I.e. Bang or Hashish (Cannabis Indica), as explicitly stated in the Atashkada

⁵ I.e. wine

October), in which numbers of the Turkish troops perished. This disaster to the arms of his hereditary foe Sháh Tahmásp¹ ascribes to "the help of God and the aid of the Immaculate Imáms." It has been commemorated in the following forcible quatrain, given in the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh and the Ta'rikh-i-Álam-ará-yi-'Abbásí:

رفتم سوی سلطانیه آن طرفه چمن
دیدم دو هزار مرده بی گور و کفن
گفتم که بگشت این همه عثمانی را بادِ سحر از میانه بر خاست که من

"I went to Sultániyya, that rare pasture-ground:
I saw two thousand dead without grave or shroud.
'Who,' said I, 'killed all these Ottomans?'
The morning breeze arose from the midst saying 'I!'"

Other dreams are meticulously recorded by Sháh Tahmásp in his Memoirs: at Ardabíl he sees and converses with the vision of his ancestor Shaykh Şafíyyu 'd-Dín²; on another occasion he receives encouragement from the spirit of Shaykh Shihábu'd-Dín³; other allegorical dreams are recorded under the years 957/1550 and 961/1554⁴.

In his domestic relations Sháh Tahmásp was unhappy, though not perhaps more so than most contemporary Asiatic sovereigns, notably the Ottoman Sultáns. He had three younger brothers, Sám (notable as a poet and biographer of poets)⁵, Bahrám and

Unhappy domestic relations.

¹ Horn, loc. cit., p. 602. See also the Turkish journal of this campaign given by Firídún Bey (vol. i, pp. 588-9), where mention of this severe cold is made. Sultániyya was reached by the Turkish army on 5 Rabí' ii, 941 (October 14, 1534).

² Ibid., p. 607.

³ Ibid., p. 623.

⁴ Ibid., pp. 635-6.

⁵ He was the author of a valuable but unpublished Biography of contemporary poets entitled Tuhfa-i-Sámí.

Alqás, of whom the first and third rebelled against him. Sám Mírzá was cast into prison in 969/1561-2 and was ultimately put to death there in 984/1576-7 by Tahmásp's successor. The case of Alqás was much worse, for he was a traitor as well as a rebel, and not only took refuge with Sultán Sulaymán at Constantinople, but incited him to attack Persia and took an active part in the ensuing war against his own country. At Hamadán, in 955/1548, he plundered the house of his sister-in-law, the wife of Bahrám Mírzá, and later advanced as far as Yazdikhwást, where he made a massacre of the inhabitants, but in the following year he was defeated and fell into the hands of his brother Bahrám, who handed him over to Tahmásp. The King imprisoned him in the Castle of Alamút, according to his own Memoirs¹, or, according to the Ahsanú't-Tawárikh, in the Castle of Qahqaha, where he perished a week later. "In short," says Tahmásp in recording the event, "after some days I saw that he did not feel safe from me, but was constantly preoccupied, so I despatched him to a fortress with Ibráhím Khán and Hasan Beg the centurion, who took him to the Castle of Alamút and there imprisoned him. After six days, those who had custody of him being off their guard, two or three persons there, in order to avenge their father whom Alqás had killed, cast him down from the castle. After his death the land had peace." It can scarcely be doubted that Tahmásp approved, if he did not actually arrange, this deed of violence. Bahrám Mírzá died the same year at the age of 33.

Much worse was the case of the unfortunate Prince Báyazíd, son of the Ottoman Sultán Sulaymán, who, deprived of his government of Kútáhiya and driven from his native land by the intrigues of his father's Russian wife Khurram² (whose

Betrayal of the Ottoman
Prince Báyazíd
(A.D. 1560-62)

¹ Horn, loc. cit., p. 631

² See Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. III, pp. 10-11

one object was to secure the succession of her son Salím, afterwards known as "the Sot") took refuge at Ṭahmásp's court in 967/1559-60. An Ottoman mission headed by 'Alí Páshá was sent to Qazwín to demand the surrender of Báyzíd and his children. They arrived there, as we learn from Anthony Jenkinson's narrative¹, four days earlier than himself, to wit on October 30, 1562, and Ṭahmásp, moved partly by fear of the Turkish power, partly by bribes, disregarded his solemn promises to the contrary and caused or suffered the unfortunate Prince and his four little sons to be put to death, and, as Anthony Jenkinson says, "sent his head for a present, not a little desired, and acceptable to the unnatural father." Ṭahmásp seems to have overcome any scruples he may have felt in breaking his solemn promises to the guest he thus betrayed by handing him over not directly to his father, but to the emissaries of his brother Salím. The case is bad enough even as stated by the Sháh himself in his Memoirs, which conclude with a pretty full account of this episode², ending thus :

"At this date 'Alí Áqá came from his Majesty the Sultán³, and of [my] Nobles and Court everyone who had sent a present received its equivalent, save in the case of my own gift and offering, which on this occasion also had not proved acceptable; and there was a letter full of hints and complaints. I said, 'Here have I arrested and detained Prince Báyzíd with his four sons for the sake of His Majesty the Sultán and Prince Salím; but since I have given my word not to

Ṭahmásp's own account of this betrayal.

¹ Early Voyages, etc. (Hakluyt Society, 1886, vol. i), p. 141 and footnote, in which the substance of Knolles's contemporary account is given. See also Creasy's History of the Ottoman Turks (London, 1877), pp. 186-7.

² Horn's text, loc. cit., pp. 642-9.

³ Here, as elsewhere, called Khawándgár, apparently a corruption of Khuddáwandgár ("the Lord"), itself in turn corrupted by the Turks into Khínkár ("the Shedder of Blood").

surrender Báyzíd to the Sultán, I have determined that when the Sultán's commands arrive and likewise the emissaries of Prince Salím, I will surrender [Báyzíd] to the latter, so that I may not break my promise.' So when the Sultán's messengers arrived, I said, 'Your Excellency and Hasan Áqá are welcome, and I will act according to the commands of His Majesty and in no wise transgress his orders, but faithfully accomplish whatever service he may indicate. But in return for so material a service I desire from His Majesty the Sultán and Prince Salím such reward and recompense as may be worthy of them, and, moreover, I hope of the Sultán in a friendly way that no hurt may befall Prince Báyzíd and his sons'."

Needless to say this pious wish in no wise influenced the tragic course of events, but the Sháh's compliance with the Sultán's imperious demands led to a temporary amelioration of the relations between Persia and Turkey which is reflected both in Anthony Jenkinson's narrative and in the concluding State Papers contained in the first volume of Firdún Bey's Munsha'ât, in which for the first time Tahmásp is addressed by Sulaymán with decent civility, though there is no explicit reference to this event.

More creditable and better known is the reception of Humáyún, the son of Bábur and Emperor of Dihlí, at the Court of Tahmásp in A.D. 1544 when he was driven out of his own dominions. Of the hospitality which he received Sir John Malcolm¹ speaks with enthusiasm; but Erskine², giving less weight to the official accounts than to the "plain unvarnished tale" of Humáyún's servant Jawhar³, takes the view (which he

The Emperor
Humáyún
in Persia.

¹ History of Persia (London, 1815), vol. 1, pp 508-9

² History of India under... Baber and Humáyún (London, 1854), vol. II, pp 280 et seqq

³ Translated by Major Charles Stewart and printed in London in 1832 for the Oriental Translation Fund.

supports by numerous illustrations) that in reality "Humáyún had much to suffer and many humiliations to endure"; and that in particular great pressure was brought to bear on him to compel him to adopt the Shí'a faith, which might have gone even further but for the moderating influence of the Sháh's sister Sultánüm Khánum, the Minister Qádl-i-Jahán and the physician Núru'd-Dín. One of the pictures in the celebrated palace of *Chahil Sutún*¹ at Işfahán represents an entertainment given by Tahmásp to Humáyún.

The foreign relations of Persia during the reign of Tahmásp were chiefly, as in the reign of his father Isma'íl, with three states—Turkey, the Uzbeks of Transoxiana, and the so-called "Great Moghuls" of Dihlí. During the greater part of his reign (until 974/1566-7) the great Sultán Sulaymán occupied the Ottoman throne; afterwards Salím II ("the Sot"), and, for the last two years of his life (982-4/1574-6) Murád III. Of the Uzbek rulers 'Ubayd Khán, until his death in 946/1539-40, and afterwards Dín Muḥammad Sultán were his most formidable foes, who ceased not to trouble his eastern, as did the Ottoman Turks his western borders. Of the "Great Moghuls" Bábur (died 937/1530-1), Humáyún (died 962/1555) and Akbar were his contemporaries. Anthony Jenkinson, as we have seen, came to him with credentials from Queen Elizabeth in A.D. 1561, and some thirteen years later, towards the end of his reign, the arrival of a Portuguese mission from Don Sebastian is recorded in the Aḥsan-i-Tawárikh under the year 982/1574-5, but it met with a bad reception.

Between the Ottoman Turks on the one hand and the Uzbeks on the other, Persia enjoyed little peace at this period, and these campaigns on the N.E. and N.W. frontiers succeeded one another with varying fortune but with monotonous reiteration. Sultán Sulaymín's chief campaigns were in 940-942/1534-6, when Baghdad was taken from the Persians and Adhribáyyín invaded¹, 950/1543-4, 953-955/1546-8, when the Sháh's brother Alqás allied himself with the Turks, 959/1552, when the Persians recovered Arjsh, and 961/1554, when Sulaymán burned Nakhjuwín and attacked Adhribáyyín for the fourth time. The Turkish military power was at this time at its zenith, and was formidable not only to the Persians but to the great European Powers, who, indeed, were thankful for such diversion of its activities as the Persians from time to time effected, so that Busbecq, Ferdinand's ambassador at the Court of Sulaymín, declares that "only the Persian stands between us and ruin"². Creasy³ speaks of the "pre eminence of the Turks of that age in the numerical force and efficiency of their artillery", and adds that "the same remark applies to their skill in fortification, and in all the branches of military engineering". Inferior as were the Persian to the Ottoman troops alike in discipline and equipment, it was much to their credit that they were able to offer as stout a resistance as they did, especially as the continual object of Turkish diplomacy at this time was to incite the Uzbeks, Turkmáns, and other Sunni peoples, to combine with them in attacking "the rascally Red-heads" (Qızıl bāsh i-Awbash). Of this policy the State Papers of Sulaymán's, as of his father Sálím's, reign afford ample evidence, for instance the letter addressed to a Turkman

¹ See Lord Curzon's Persia, vol. ii, p. 35. A copy of the picture in question by Texier is reproduced in Sir Percy Sykes's History of Persia (2nd ed., London, 1921), vol. ii, p. 164.

Foreign relations of Persia in Tahmásp's reign.

¹ A complete diary of this campaign against the "arch heretic Qızıl bāsh King Tahmāsp" will be found in vol. 1 of Firdun Bey's Munshadāt, pp. 584-598. The Ottoman army left Constantinople on June 10, 1534, occupied Baghdad in December of the same year, and returned to Constantinople on Jan. 7, 1536.

² See p. 11 supra.

³ History of the Ottoman Turks (London, 1877), p. 202.

chief about the end of 960/1553 (given on pp. 612-613 of Firídún Bey's Munsha'át) and transmitted to him, apparently, by four of his representatives, Muḥammad, Mír Abú Turáb, Mír Tútí and Sunduk, who, after performing the Pilgrimage, had visited the Sultán's Court at Constantinople on their homeward journey, and had delighted him with accounts of their achievements against the Persians.

The wars with the Uzbeks were equally continuous, especially until the death of the redoubtable 'Ubayd Khán,

Wars with the Uzbeks.

the son of Shaybak Khán, a direct descendant of Chingíz, in 946/1539-40, at the age of fifty-three, after a reign of thirty years. He is said by the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh to have suffered defeat in only one of the seven campaigns he fought against the Persians. Tús, Mashhad, and especially Herát suffered terribly during persecutions.

Religious

these wars, which were nearly always accompanied by severe religious persecutions. The poet Hilálí fell a victim to the Sunní fanaticism of the Uzbeks at Herát in 935/1528-9, as the poet Banná'í had fallen a victim to Shí'a intolerance at Qarshí in 918/1512-13; and under the year 942/1535-6 the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh gives the following graphic account of the persecution of the Shí'a which took place on the capture of Herát by 'Ubayd Khán on Rajab 20, 942 (January 14, 1536):

هر روز بحكمِ آن خان بی ایمان پنج شش کس بواسطهٔ تشیع
باقوالِ جُهال در چهار سوق هراة کشته می شدند و روستائیان بی
دیانت و شهریان با خیانت با هر کس که عداوتی داشتند اورا
کرفته نزد قاضی می بردند که این مرد در زمانِ قزلباش لعن
ابو بکر و عثمان کرده است، بسخن آن دو گواه جاهل قاضی
بقتلِ آن مظلوم حکم می کرد و اورا کشان کشان بچهار سوق
هراة می بردند و بقتلش می آوردند و از شومی ایشان امواجِ محن

و التواح فتن بدرحه^۱ اعلی رسید و سلب و نهب در اطراف
هراسا واقع گردید^۲

"Every day by order of that unbelieving Khán ('Ubayd) five or six individuals were slain for Shí'a proclivities on the information of ignorant persons in the market place¹ of Herát. Godless villagers and treacherous townsmen would seize anyone against whom they cherished a grudge and drag him before the judge, asserting that in the time of the 'Red heads' (i.e. the Shí'a Persians) he used to curse Abu Bakr and 'Uthmín², and on the word of these two ignorant witnesses the judge would pronounce sentence of death on the victim, whom they would then drag to the market place of Herát and put to death. Through their sinister acts the waves of sorrow and the hosts of mischief attained their culmination, while plunder and looting took place throughout the confines of Khurásán."

With the Georgians also the Persians were constantly at war during this period, to wit in 947/1540-1, 950/1543-4, 958/1551, 961/1554, 963/1556, 968/1560-1, and 976/1568-9. These wars were also waged with great ferocity, and it is worth noting that contemporary Persian historians constantly speak of the Christian inhabitants of Georgia as "guebres" (gabran, a term properly applicable only to the Zoroastrians), as in the following verse describing the first of these campaigns

دران سنگلاخ آن ددان کرده های^۱ و طمگاه گران مردم ربای^۲

"In that stony wilderness those beasts had established themselves, the native land of man stealing guebres

In this campaign, as the Alisanu't Tawarikh informs us, such of the Georgians as consented to embrace Islam were spared, but those who refused were put to the sword, and similarly, in speaking of the campaign of 958/1551 the same history says

¹ Chahār suq (from which is derived the modern Turkish chârshî) is the point of intersection of two main bâzârs, a sort of Oriental Oxford Circus, affording the greatest publicity

² The omission of 'Umar, unless due to a scribe's error, is remarkable

غازیان ظفر شعار پست و بلند دیار کُفّار فجار را احاطه فرمودند
و هر کوه و کمر که گریزگاه آن کمره بود از لکدکوب دلاوران
با هامون یکسان شد و یک متنقّس از آن مشرکین از دایره قهر
و کین و الله محیط بالکافرین جان بسلامت بیرون نبرد و اهل
و عیال و اموال بآرث شرعی از مقتولان بقاتلان انتقال نمود¹

"The victorious champions encompassed the lands of the sinful unbelievers, lowlands and highlands, and every mountain and ridge whither that misguided one [their ruler] had fled was levelled with the plain by the trampling of the [Persian] warriors. Not one who drew breath of those polytheists saved his soul alive from the circle of wrath and vengeance of '*and God encompasseth the unbelievers*¹,' and, by lawful heritage, the wives, families and property of the slain passed to their slayers."

Besides these greater wars, there were minor operations against the more or less independent rulers of Gílán, and the last representatives of the ancient but ex-

Minor wars and disturbances.

piring dynasty of the Shírwánsháhs, who boasted descent from the great Núshírwán. Although the last of this line, Sháhrukh ibn Sulṭán Farrukh ibn Shaykh-sháh ibn Farrukh-Yasár, was put to death by Ṭahmásp in 946/1539-40, nine years later we read of a scion of the house named Burhán in conflict with Isma'íl Mírzá. In Gílán, Khán Aḥmad, the eleventh ruler of a petty dynasty which had ruled for two hundred and five years, was defeated and interned in the Castle of Qahqaha in 975/1567-8. In 981/1573-4 Tabríz was terrorized by a gang of roughs who were not reduced to order and obedience until Barbarous punishments.

a hundred and fifty of them had been put to death. Barbarous punishments were frequent. Muẓaffar Sulṭán, governor of Rasht, was for an act of treason paraded through the streets of Tabríz, decorated for the occasion, amidst the mockery of the rabble, and burned to death in an iron cage, suspended under which in a particularly cruel and humiliating fashion Amír Sa'du'd-Dín 'Ináyatu'lláh Khuzíní simultaneously suffered the same fate. Khwája Kalán Ghuriyání, a fanatical Sunní who had gone out to welcome 'Ubayd Khín the Uzbek and was accused of speaking slightly of the Sháh, was skinned in the market place of Herát and the stuffed skin exhibited on a pole. Ruknu'd-Dín Mas'ud of Kázarun, a most learned man and skilful physician, incurred the Sháh's displeasure and was burned to death. Muhammad Sálíh, a liberal patron of poets, in whose honour Hayratí composed a panegyric, had his mouth sewn up because he was alleged to have spoken disrespectfully of the King, and was then placed in a large jar which was afterwards thrown to the ground from the top of a minaret.

¹ Qur'án, ii, 18.

According to the Ahsanú't Tawárikh, Sháh Tahmásp was in his youth much interested in calligraphy and painting, he also liked riding on Egyptian asses, which consequently became fashionable, and were adorned with golden trappings and gold embroidered saddle cloths. Alluding to these idiosyncrasies a ribald poet with the extraordinary nom de guerre of Báqu l 'Ishq ("the Trumpet of Love") lampooned him in this verse

ی تکلف خوش ترقی کرده اند کاتب و نقاش و قروی و حر

"The scribe, the painter, the Qazwíní and the ass
Obtained easy promotion without trouble

He made a great ostentation of piety, "regarding most things as unclean, and often spitting out his half eaten food into the water or the fire," in view of which it is satisfactory to know that 'he would not eat in company." He was also punctilious about such matters as cutting his nails, and would spend the day after this operation in the bath

Ṭahmásp died on Tuesday, Şafar 15, 984 (May 14, 1576) at the age of sixty-four after a reign of fifty-three years and a half, the longest reign, according to the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh, of any Muhammadan sovereign except the Fátimid Caliph al-Mustanşir bi'lláh¹. Eleven of his sons are enumerated in the history just cited, of whom nine at least survived him. The eldest, Muḥammad Khudá-banda, who was about forty-five years of age, though he succeeded to the throne a year later, renounced it on his father's death on account of his partial blindness, this infirmity, whether natural or deliberately inflicted, being regarded in the East, and especially in Persia, as an absolute disqualification for the exercise of regal functions². His younger brother Ḥaydar, taking advantage of the absence from the capital of his brothers, of whom Isma'íl was imprisoned in the Castle of Qahqaha, while the others were for the most part resident in distant provinces, endeavoured to seize the throne, but was murdered in the women's apartments, where he had taken refuge, by the partisans of his brother Isma'íl, who was proclaimed king in the principal mosque of Qazwín nine days after his father's death.

Isma'íl's reign was short but sanguinary, and in his drastic methods of dealing with possible competitors for the Crown he rivalled the most ruthless of the Ottoman Sultáns. He first put to death his two brothers Sulaymán and Muşţafá; then, after providing an elaborate funeral for his father at Mashhad and a gorgeous coronation for himself at Qazwín, in which his remaining brothers occupied their due positions, he resumed his fratricidal activities. On Sunday the sixth of Dhu'l-Hijja, A.H. 984 (Feb. 24, 1577), he put to death the six following princes: Sultán Ibráhím Mírzá, poet, artist, musician and calligrapher;

Troubles succeeding the death of Ṭahmásp.

Short and sanguinary reign of Isma'íl II.

¹ He reigned sixty lunar years, A.H. 427-487 (A.D. 1035-1094).

² See Chardin's Voyages (Paris, 1811), vol. v, pp. 241-244.

his nephew Muhammad Husayn Mírzá, a lad of eighteen, who had already been deprived of his eyesight, Sultán Mahmúd Mírzá, his son Muhammad Báqir Mírzá, a child of two, Imám-qulí Mírzá, and Sultán Ahmad Mírzá. He next turned his attention to those princes who were resident in outlying provinces, such as Badí'u'z-Zamán Mírzá and his little son Bahrám Mírzá in Khurásán, Sultán 'Alí Mírzá in Ganja and Sultán Hasan Mírzá in Tíhrán, all of whom he destroyed. Only by a most wonderful chance, accounted by his biographer Iskandar Munshí¹ as a miraculous intervention of Providence, did the little Prince 'Abbás Mírzá destined to become the greatest of Persia's modern rulers escape his uncle's malevolence. The blood-thirsty Isma'íl had actually sent 'Alí qulí Khán Shámlu to Herát, of which 'Abbás Mírzá though only six years of age², was the nominal governor, to put the young prince to death, but the emissary, whether actuated by pity or superstition, delayed the accomplishment of his cruel task till the sacred month of Ramadán should be over, and ere this respite had come to an end a courier arrived bringing the joyful news of Isma'íl's death, the manner of which was as discreditable as his life. On the night of Sunday, Ramadán 13, A H 985 (Nov 24 1577) being at the time the worse for drink, he had gone out in search of adventures into the streets and bazars

Narrow escape of Prince Abbás.

Discredited table
end of Isma'íl II

of the city accompanied by one of his favourites, a confectioner's son named Hasan Beg and other disreputable companions, and towards dawn had gone to rest in Hasan Beg's house, where he was found dead later in the day. Some suggested that he had been poisoned, or first drugged and afterwards strangled, while others maintained that he had merely taken an overdose of the opium

¹ Author of the well known monograph on Sháh 'Abbás the Great entitled Táríkh-i 'Álam árá-yi 'Abbásí

² He was born at Herát on Ramadán 1, 978 (Jan 27, 1571)

wherewith he was wont to assuage the pain of a colic to which he was subject. But his death was so welcome to all that no great trouble seems to have been taken to arrive at the manner of it, and it does not even appear that any punishment was inflicted on Hasan Beg, who, indeed, is said to have been also half paralysed when found¹.

Muhammad Khudá-banda, in spite of his blindness, was now placed on the throne which he had refused on the death of his father Sháh Tahmásp. He was at this time about forty-six years of age² and was resident at Shíráz, having been replaced in his former government of Herát by his little son Prince 'Abbás Mírzá, whose narrow escape from death has just been described. The new king at once set out for Qazwín, and amongst those who welcomed him at Qum was Hasan Beg Rúmlú, the author of the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh, which important but unpublished history was concluded in this very year and contains the most authoritative account of the events above narrated. That this account is in places confused and must be supplemented by later histories like the Khuld-i-Barín and Ta'rikh-i-'Álam-árá-yi-'Abbásí arises from the fact that the author, for his own personal safety, had to walk with great caution amidst the rapidly-changing circumstances of these perilous times.

At Qazwín, Muhammad Khudá-banda received the homage of Sulaymán Páshá, a great-grandson of Abú Sa'íd the Tímúrid, who greeted him with the following verses:

شاهانِ عالم است
گردون ترا مسخر و گیتی مسلم است

یکتا شدست رشته شاهى بعهد تو

الحمد لله ارجه كه يكتاست محكم است

¹ Cf. Sir John Malcolm's History of Persia (London, 1815), vol. i, pp. 516-517.

² According to the Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh he was born in 938/1531-2.

"O King, thy gate is the qibla of the Kings of the world,
 Heaven is subjugated and earth surrendered to thee
 In thy reign the thread of royalty hath become single¹,
 But, Praise be to God, though single it is strong"

The able, ambitious and beautiful Princess Parí-Khán Khánum, Tahmásp Sháh's favourite daughter² by a Circassian wife, who had played a prominent part in the troubles succeeding his death, and aspired to rule in fact if not in name, was put to death at Muhammad Khudá-banda's command by Khalíl Khán Afshár, together with her mother's brother Shamkhál Khán, and Sháh Shujá', the infant son of the late King Isma'íl. In consequence of these pitiless slaughters the representatives of the Safawí Royal Family were now reduced to Sháh Muhammad Khudá banda himself and his four sons, Hamza, 'Abbás, Abu Tálib and Tahmásp. The first, who is sometimes reckoned amongst the Safawí kings (since he seems for a while to have exercised regal functions during his half blind father's life time), was murdered by a young barber named Khudá-verdí* on the 22nd of Dhu'l-Hijja, 994 (Dec 4, 1586). Abú Tálib was thereupon nominated Walt'-ahd, or Crown Prince, instead of his elder brother 'Abbás, who was still in Khurásán, but who speedily appeared on the scene with his guardian and tutor Murshid-qulí Khán Ustájlú, ¹ I suppose this alludes to the practical extermination of the rest of the Royal Family by Isma'íl II.

² Sir John Malcolm (op cit, vol 1, pp 514 and 517) appears to confuse her with her mother, since he calls her "the favourite Sultána of the deceased monarch" (Tahmásp), and "the sister of Shamkhál." In the 'Álam árâ yí 'Abbás' she is enumerated as the second of Tahmásp's eight daughters, but according to other Persian historians she was one of the five daughters of Sháh Isma'íl and the sister of Tahmásp. See p 81 supra, n 2 ad calc. By "Don Juan of Persia" she is called the Infanta.

³ Called by "Don Juan of Persia" (f 104*) "Cudy de Lac" (1 e Dallák), "que es como si dixeramos en Español, Cudi el barbero del Rey."

inflicted condign punishment on those who had prompted the murder of his elder brother Īlamza, and rendered his two younger brothers harmless by depriving them of their eyesight and imprisoning them in the Castle of Alamút¹. His father abdicated in his favour after a reign of ten years in Dhu'l-Qa'da, 995 (October, 1587), and Sháh

Accession of
Sháh 'Abbás the Great (A.D.
1587-1629).

'Abbás ascended the throne to which he was destined to add so great a glory. He and his three brothers were all the sons of one mother, a lady of the Mar'ashí Sayyids of Mázandarán, who seems to have resembled her sister-in-law Parí-Khán Khánum in her masterful character as well as in her tragic fate, for she, together with her aged mother and many of her kinsfolk and countrymen, was murdered by some of the Qizil-básh nobles who objected to her autocratic methods and dominating influence over her irresolute and peace-loving husband, being of opinion that—

فروغی نماند در آن خاندان ' که بانگِ خروس آید از ماکیان

“No luck remains in that household where the hen crows like a cock².”

Muḥammad Khudá-banda was born in 938/1531-2, was forty-six years of age when his father Sháh Tahmásp died in 984/1576-7, reigned ten years after the death of his brother Isma'íl, survived his abdication eight or nine years, and died in 1004/1595-6.

Character of Muḥammad
Khudá-banda.

His character is thus described by Ridá-qulí Khán in his Supplement to the Rawḍatu's-Šafá: “He had some knowledge of all the current sciences, and was incomparable in understanding and judgement, virtue and discernment, bounty and generosity, and expression and eloquence. Being a ‘servant of God’ (Khudá-banda) he showed an excessive clemency in matters of administration, war, anger and punishment, and, so far as possible, would not consent to the death of any one. Though he struck the first blow at Khudá verdí the barber¹, this was only according to the enactment of the Holy Law. In consequence of his weak eyesight he seldom gave public audience, and, while he tarried in the women's apartments, the Sayyida [his wife] gave effect to his commands, and, in order more effectively to control affairs, herself sealed the documents. In short, he was a king with the qualities of a religious mendicant, or a religious mendicant endowed with regal pomp (Padishahí darwísh khísál, ya darwíshí padishah-jaldál)”

¹ “Don Juan of Persia,” f. 107^b.

² Supplement to the Rawḍatu's-Šafá.

His reign, though short, was troubled not only by the domestic tragedies indicated above, but by the Turks, Uzbeks, Crimean Tartars, Georgians and other external foes, who, encouraged by the spectacle of those internecine struggles which succeeded the death of Tahmásp, sought to profit by the distractions of Persia.

Sháh 'Abbás I, commonly and justly called “the Great” was only sixteen or seventeen years of age when he ascended the throne in 996/1588², and died in Jumáda I, 1038/Jan. 1629 at the age of 60 after a reign of 43 lunar years, in which, by general agreement,

Persia reached the highest degree of power, prosperity and splendour ever attained by her in modern times. His position at first was, however, fraught with dangers and difficulties. Not only was his kingdom threatened, as usual, by the Ottoman Turks on the west and the Uzbeks on the east, but many of the provinces were in revolt and the country was distracted by the rivalries and ambitions of the great Qızıl báš

Sháh Abbás the Great (A.D. 1538 to 1629)

Dangers threatening Persia on his accession

¹ The murderer of his son Hamza. See p. 101 supra and n. 3 ad calc.

² He was born, according to the 'Álam árá'yí 'Abbásí, on Ramadán 1, 978 (Jan. 27, 1571), or 979 (Jan. 17, 1572). The words طال الله form the chronogram of his coronation.

nobles of different tribes, in the hands of two of whom, Murshid-qulí Khán and 'Alí-qulí Khán, the young King seemed at first to be a mere puppet. When the former accompanied him to Qazwín to place him on the throne, the latter was left in Khurásán to bear the brunt of the Uzbek attack, to which, after a defence of nine months, he fell a victim. 'Abbás, suspecting Murshid-qulí Khán of deliberately withholding help from his rival, caused him to be murdered one night in camp at Sháhrúd, thus freeing himself from an irksome tutelage, and becoming a sovereign ruler in fact as well as in name. Realizing that he could not possibly wage successful war simultaneously with the Turks and the Uzbeks, he determined, with far-sighted prudence, to make peace, even on unfavourable terms, with the former in order to check the encroachments of the latter and to devise some mechanism to control the disorderly rivalries of the Qizil-básh nobles, whereby his authority and the efficiency of his military force were paralysed. The terms of the treaty with Turkey included the surrender of the towns and districts in Ádharbáyján and Georgia conquered by the Ottoman troops during a war which had lasted more than twelve years (985-998/1577-1590), such as Tabríz, Ganja, Qárs, Nakhjuwán, Shakí, Shamákhí and Tiflis, as well as part of Luristán; the abandonment of the cursing of the first three Caliphs, Abú Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthmán; and the sending as a hostage to Constantinople of Sháh 'Abbás's nephew Haydar Mírzá, who departed with the Turkish general Farhád Páshá for the Ottoman capital, where he died two years later.

Conclusion of Peace with Turkey.

Sháh 'Abbás next proceeded to subdue Shíráz, Kirmán, Gílán and Khurram-ábád in Luristán, and to inflict condign punishment on Ya'qúb Khán Dhu'l-Qadar and other rebels. Meanwhile 'Abdu'l-Mú'mín Khán and his Uzbeks were again ravaging Khurásán, and the Uzbek invasion.

Shah, advancing to attack them, was stricken down by fever at Tíhrán. While he lay sick and unable to move, the holy city of Mashhad was taken and sacked by the savage Uzbeks and many of its inhabitants slain. Sabzawár¹ suffered a similar fate in 1002/1593-4, but three or four years later² 'Abdu'lláh Khán, the Uzbek sovereign, died, and his son, the above-mentioned 'Abdu'l-Mu'mín Khán, was killed by his own people. It was at this juncture (April, 1598) that Sháh 'Abbás was at length able to attack the Uzbeks in force and drive them out of Khurásán, which now at length enjoyed a period of peace and tranquillity. On his return from this victorious campaign to Qazwín in the autumn of the same year, he found awaiting him there

The Sherley
brothers

those celebrated English soldiers of fortune Sir Anthony and Sir Robert Sherley, whose romantic adventures are fully described in several excellent monographs³. These, who were accompanied by some dozen English attendants, including at least one cannon-founder, aided him greatly in the reconstruction of his army and especially in providing it with artillery, the lack of which had hitherto so

Improvement of Persian artillery

severely handicapped the Persians in their wars with the Turks, so that, as it is quaintly phrased in Purchas's Pilgrims, "the mighty Ottoman, terror of the Christian world, quaketh of a Sherley fever, and gives hopes of approaching fates. The prevailing Persian hath learned Sherleian arts of war, and he which before knew not the use of ordnance, hath now five hundred pieces of brass and sixty thousand musqueteers ; so that they, which at hand with the sword were before dreadful to the Turks, now also, in remoter blows and sulphurean arts, are grown terrible." The discipline of the Persian army had also been improved by the elimination of the more ambitious and disobedient

¹ The author of the 'Álam árâ yí 'Abbási' says that he himself saw amongst those slain at Sabzawár women with children at the breast.

² In 1006/1597-8, according to the 'Álam árâ yí 'Abbási'.

³ eg "The Sherley Brothers, an historical Memoir of the Lives of Sir Thomas Sherley, Sir Anthony Sherley, and Sir Robert Sherley, Knights, by one of the same House' (Evelyn Philip Shirley, Roxburgh Club Chiswick, 1848), "The Three Brothers, or the Travels and Adventures of Sir A., Sir R. and Sir T. Sherley in Persia, Russia, Turkey, Spain, etc., with Portraits" (Anon., London, 1825).

Qizil-básh nobles ; the creation of a composite tribal force known as Sháh-seven ("King-lovers"), united not by tribal allegiance but by personal devotion to the King ; and the formation of a regular infantry comparable in some degree to the Turkish Janissaries.

Formation of the Sháh-
seven tribe.

A year or two later circumstances were favourable for the long-projected attempt to recover the provinces wrested from Persia by the Turks during the inter-regnum which succeeded the death of Ṭahmásp. The reign of the feeble Muḥammad III was approaching its end, and Turkey was weakened by a prolonged war with Austria and by the so-called Jalálí¹ revolt in Asia Minor when Sháh 'Abbás opened his campaign in 1010/1601-2. Tabríz was retaken "with cannon, an engine of long-time by the Persians scorned as not befitting valiant men," in 1012/1603-4, and two years later the celebrated Turkish general Chighála-záda Sinán Páshá ("Cicala") was defeated near Salmás and compelled to retreat to Ván and Diyár Bakr, where he died of chagrin. Baghdád and Shírwán were recaptured by the Persians about the same time, but the former changed hands more than once during the reign of Sháh 'Abbás, and the occasion of its recapture from the Turks in A.D. 1625 gave rise to an

Successful war against the Ottoman Turks.

from Persia by the Turks during the inter-regnum which succeeded the death of Ṭahmásp.

The reign of the feeble Muḥammad III was approaching its end, and Turkey was weakened by a prolonged war with Austria and by the so-called Jalálí¹ revolt in Asia Minor when Sháh 'Abbás opened his campaign in 1010/1601-2. Tabríz was retaken "with cannon, an engine of long-time by the Persians scorned as not befitting valiant men," in 1012/1603-4, and two years later the celebrated Turkish general Chighála-záda Sinán Páshá ("Cicala") was defeated near Salmás and compelled to retreat to Ván and Diyár Bakr, where he died of chagrin. Baghdád and Shírwán were recaptured by the Persians about the same time, but the former changed hands more than once during the reign of Sháh 'Abbás, and the occasion of its recapture from the Turks in A.D. 1625 gave rise to an interchange of verses between Háfiz Páshá and Sultán Murád IV which has attained a certain celebrity in Turkish literary history¹.

¹ An account of the heretic Jalál is given by Munajjim-báshí (Şahá 'ifw'l-Akhhbár, Turkish version, ed. Constantinople, A.H. 1285, vol. iii, p. 471). He and many of his followers were killed near Síwás in 925/1519, but evidently the sect which he founded retained its vitality for the better part of a century afterwards.

No coherent and critical account of these wars between the Persians on the one hand and the Turks, Uzbeks and Georgians on the other has yet, so far as I know, been written, but the materials are ample, should any historian acquainted with Persian and Turkish desire to undertake the task. The enormous preponderance of the military element in such contemporary chronicles as the Ta'rikh-i-'Álam-árá-yi-'Abbásí makes them very dull and arduous reading to anyone not specially interested in military matters, even from the point of view of military history they are vitiated by overwhelming masses of trivial details and the absence of any breadth of view or clearness of outline. Many matters on which we should most desire information are completely ignored, and it is only here and there incidentally that we find passages throwing light on the religious and social conditions of the time. Of the recapture of the Island of Hurmuz in the Persian Gulf from the Portuguese in March, 1622, by a combined Anglo-Persian force we have naturally very detailed contemporary English accounts.

Allusion has already been made in the introductory chapter² to the splendour and prosperity of Isfahán under Sháh 'Abbás, and to the number of foreigners, diplomatists, merchants and missionaries, which his tolerant attitude towards non Muslims brought thither. These and other similar matters are very fully discussed in the first volume of the great monograph on his reign entitled Ta'rikh-i-'Álam ára-yi-'Abbásí, half of which consists of an Introduction (Muqaddama) comprising

Wearisome
accounts of these wars in Persian histories of the period.

Character and institutions of Sháh 'Abbás

See E J W Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol iii, pp 248-251, and, for the originals, vol vi, pp 190-191

¹ See E J W Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol iii, pp 248-251, and, for the originals, vol vi, pp 190-191

² Pp 24-5 supra.

twelve Discourses (Maqála). The first of these, dealing with his ancestors and predecessors, is much the longest, and in my manuscript occupies about two hundred pages; the others, though much shorter, often occupying only a page or two, are more original, and deal with such matters as the religious devotion of Sháh 'Abbás; his wise judgment and wide knowledge; his worthiness to be regarded as a Şáhib-Qirán, or "Lord of a fortunate Conjunction"; his miraculous preservation on several occasions from imminent peril; his wise administration and care for public security; his inflexible severity; his pious foundations and charitable bequests; his wars and victories; his birth and childhood; and an account of the most eminent nobles, divines, ministers, physicians, calligraphers, painters, illuminators, poets and minstrels of his reign. Speaking of his severity.

His inflexible

severity (Maqála vi) the author, Iskandar Munshí, says that no one dared to delay one moment in the execution of any order given him by the King: "for instance, should he command a father to kill his son, the sentence would be carried out immediately, even as the decree of destiny; or should the father, moved by parental tenderness, make any delay, the command would be reversed; and should the son then temporize, another would slay both. By such awful severity the execution of his commands attained the supreme degree of efficiency, and none dared hesitate for an instant in the fulfilment of the sentence inevitable as fate." He also

Attendance at executions made compulsory.

compelled his officers, on pain of death, to be present at all executions; held each provincial governor and local magistrate responsible for the security of the roads in his district; and punished falsehood with such severity that it was generally believed that if anyone ventured to lie to him, he was informed of it from the Spirit World. Yet at other times he would be very friendly and unassuming in his intercourse with his courtiers and attendants, careful of their rights and just claims, and ready to overlook accidental and involuntary shortcomings. Though not averse from the banquet and the wine-bout, he was greatly concerned to be correctly informed as to the circumstances of the neighbouring kings and countries, and devoted much attention to the development of his Intelligence Department. He was also something of a linguist, and not only appreciated but occasionally composed poetry

شاه 'الد
مجلسه بسیار
بسیار

Amongst the towns and districts which benefited most from his munificence were, besides his capital Isfahān, Mashhad and its holy shrine of the eighth Imām 'Alī Ridā, which, as we have seen, he rescued from the savage and fanatical Uzbeks and raised to a position of the greatest glory and honour, Ardabil, the original home of his family, Qazvin, the earlier capital of the Sāfiwīs, Kāshān, near which he constructed the celebrated dam known as the Bānd-i-Qūhrud¹, Astarābād, Tabriz, Hamadān, and the province of Māzandarān, one of his favourite resorts, which he adorned with several splendid palaces and the great causeway extending from Astarābād to Ashraf, of which full particulars are given in Lord Curzon's great work on Persia². As regards his conquests, his armies reached Merv, Nisī, Abiward, Andakhud and even Balkh in the north-east, and Nakhjuwān, Erivan, Ganja, Tiflis, Darband and Bākū in the north west.

Towns specially favoured by him.

His conquests.

No useful purpose would be served by enumerating here all the notable persons in each class mentioned by Iskandar Munshī, who wrote, as he repeatedly mentions in the course of his work, in 1025/1616, but the most important are, amongst the divines and

Notable person
ages of his reign.

¹ See my Year amongst the Persians, pp 185-6

² Vol. 1, pp. 376-8, etc

men of learning, Mír Muḥammad Dámád and Shaykh

Calligraphists. Bahá'u'd-Dín 'Ámilí; amongst the calligraphists, Mawláná Isháq Siyáwushání, Muḥammad Ḥusayn-i-Tabrízí, Mír Mu'izz-i-Káshí, Mír Şadru'd-Dín Mu-

Artists. ḥammad, and others; amongst the artists and miniature painters, Muẓaffar 'Alí, Zaynu'l-'Ábi-ddín, Şádiq Beg, 'Abdu'l-Jabbár, and others; amongst the poets, Ḍamírí, Muḥtasham, Walí, Waḥshí,

Poets. Khwāja Ḥusayn, Mír Haydar Mu'amma'í, the brothers Tayfúr and Dá'í, Wálih and Malik of Qum, Ḥátim of Káshán, Şabrí Rúzbihání, Ḥisábí, the Qáđí Núr-i-Işfahání,

Ḥálatí, Halákí, Mazharí of Cashmere, and the Qazwíní Furúghí, Tabkhí, Sulţánu'l-Fuqará, Ká'ká and Sharmí;

and amongst the singers and minstrels¹, Ḥáfiz Musicians, etc. Aḥmad-i-Qazwíní, Ḥáfiz Jalájl-i-Bákharzí, Ḥáfiz Muẓaffar-i-Qumí, Ḥáfiz Ḥáshim-i-Qazwíní, Mírzá Mu-ḥammad Kamáncha'í, Ustád Muḥammad Mú'min, Ustád

Shahsuwár-i-Chahár-tári, Ustád Shams-i-Shaypúrghú'í-i-Warámíní, Ustád Ma'sum Kamáncha'í, Ustád Sulţán Mu-

ḥammad Tanbúra'í, Mírzá Ḥusayn Tanbúra'í, Ustád Sulţán Muḥammad-i-Changí, and the Qişsa-khwáns (story-tellers)

and Sháhnáma-khwáns (reciters of the 'Epic of Kings'), Ḥaydar, Muḥammad Khursand and Fathí, of whom the two last were brothers and natives of Işfahán. It is because the fame of the singers, minstrels and musicians who constitute this last class is in its nature so ephemeral that I have enumerated them in full, as indicating what forms of musical talent were popular at the court of Sháh 'Abbás.

That Sháh 'Abbás deserved the title of "the Great" there can be no question, and many of his severities have been palliated, if not excused, even by European historians like

¹ Of these titles, Ḥáfiz denotes a Qur'án-reciter or rhapsodist; Kamáncha'í a violinist; Chahár-tári a player on the four-stringed lute; Shaypúrghú'í a trumpeter; Tanbúra'í a drummer; and Changí a harper.

Sir John Malcolm¹; but his cruel murder of his eldest son Saff Mírzá and his blinding of another, Khudá-

The chief blot on his reign

banda Mírzá, and the tragical circumstances connected therewith², form a dark page in the records of his otherwise glorious reign, which ended with his death in the early part of A.D. 1629. He was succeeded by his grandson Sám Mírzá, who, on his accession, took the name of his unfortunate father, and mounted the throne of Persia under the title of Sháh Saff I.

There is a well-known tradition of the Muhammadans³ that Solomon died standing, supported by the staff on which he leaned, and that his death remained unknown to the Jinn, who laboured at his command in the construction of the Temple, for a year, until the wood-worm ate through the staff and the body fell to the ground. This legend may well serve as a parable of the century of Safawí rule which followed the death of Sháh 'Abbás the Great, who, by his strength and wisdom, gave to Persia a period of peace and outward prosperity which for nearly a hundred years protected his successors from the results of their incompetence.

The successors of Sháh 'Abbás the Great.

Four of his house succeeded him ere the catastrophe of the Afghán invasion in A.D. 1722 effected its downfall, to wit, his grandson Sháh

Saff above mentioned (A.D. 1629-1642); his great-grandson Sháh 'Abbás II (A.D. 1642-1666); his great-great-grandson Saff, subsequently recrowned under the name of Sulaymán (A.D. 1666-1694); and his great-great-great-grandson Sháh Husayn (A.D. 1694-1722). Of Sháh Saff, Kru-

Sháh Saff (A.D.
1629-1642), a blood thirsty tyrant.

sinski⁴ says that "'tis certain there has not been in Persia a more cruel and bloody reign than his" and describes it as "one continued series

¹ History of Persia (ed 1815), vol. i, pp. 555-6

² Ibid, pp 560-5

³ See the commentaries on Qur'án xxxiv, 13

⁴ P. 44 of the English translation (London, 1728).

of cruelties"; while Hanway¹ observes that "he interfered so little in the affairs of the government that the Persians would have scarcely perceived they had a king, had it not been for the frequent instances of barbarity which stained his reign with blood"; and that "by his own folly he lost Kandahar and Babylon [Baghdád], two of the most important places on his frontiers." Than Sháh 'Abbás II, on the other hand, according to Krusinski², "next to Ismael I and Schah-Abas the Great, Persia never had a better king of the family of the Sophics." Although, like his father and predecessor, he was "too much subject to wine, and committed some acts of cruelty, yet, abateing a few excursions, of which he might justly be reproached, he shewed himself, during the whole course of his reign, truly worthy of the crown he wore." "The farther he advanced into his reign," continues the Jesuit, "the more he was beloved by his subjects and the more feared by his neighbours. He loved justice, and had no mercy of the governors and other public officers who, abusing their authority, oppressed the people, of which several instances may be seen in Tavernier. He had a great and noble soul, was very kind to strangers, and openly protected the Christians, whom he would not have in the least molested for their religion, saying, 'That none but God was master of their consciences; that, for his own part, he was only governor of externals; and that all his subjects being equally members of the State, of what religion soever they were, he owed justice to them all alike.'" This reign, however, was the last flicker of greatness in the Şafawí dynasty, Sulaymán (A.D. 1666-1694), a cruel and debauched king.

'Abbás II (A.D. 1642-1666), a good king, save in his cups.

for Sulaymán (to quote Krusinski³ once more), "degenerated very much from the virtues of his father Schah-Abas II, and made his reign remarkable only by a thousand instances of cruelty,

¹ Revolutions of Persia (London, 1753), vol. i, p. 20.

² Op. cit., p. 49.

³ Op. cit., pp. 57-8.

SHÁH 'ABBÁS THE SECOND

the bare mention of which is shocking. When he was in wine or in wrath nobody about him was sure of life or estate. He caused hands, feet, nose and ears to be cut off, eyes to be plucked out, and lives to be sacrificed upon the least whim that took him, and the man that was most in his favour at the beginning of a debauch was generally made a sacrifice at the end of it. This is the character given us of him by Sir John Chardin, who was in part a witness of what he relates as to this matter. Persons thought their lives in such danger whenever they approached him that a great lord of his Court said, when he came from his presence, that he always felt if his head was left standing upon his shoulders. It was under this prince that Persia began to decay. He thought so little like a king that when it was represented to him what danger he was in from the Turks, who, when they had made peace with the Christians, would come and attack his finest provinces if he did not put himself in a position to repel them, he answered very indifferently that he did not care, provided they left him Isfahán."

Shah Husayn, the last Safawí king (for his nominal successors Tahmásp II and 'Abbás III were mere puppets in the hands of Nádir Sháh), was very unlike his predecessors, for his clemency was so excessive as "rendered him incapable of any severity, though never so moderate and necessary," while having one day accidentally wounded a duck with his pistol "he himself was as much terrified as if he had really committed murder, and made the same exclamation as is customary in Persia upon the shedding of human blood, by saying *Kanlu oldum*², i.e. 'I am polluted with blood', and that very instant he caused two hundred tomans to be given to the poor as an atonement for what he thought a

Sháh Husayn
(A.D. 1694 deposed 1722 killed 1729) a
"meek zealot

¹ Krusinski, op cit, pp 105-108

² Turkish 'قالو اولدم'

great sin." He was something of a scholar and theologian, much under the influence of the Mullás, and so careful of his religious duties and so much attached to the reading of the Qur'an as to earn for himself the nick-name of Mullá or "Parson H̄usayn¹." Though at first a vehement prohibitionist, he was later induced by his grandmother, instigated by wine-loving courtiers and power-seeking eunuchs, to taste the forbidden liquor, which gradually obtained such a hold on him that "he would not by any means hear the mention of business, but left it all to the discretions of his ministers and eunuchs, who governed the kingdom just as they pleased, and took the greater license because they were very sensible they had nothing to fear from a prince who was so weak as to refer the very petitions he received to them without so much as reading them²."

In such a work as this, which is concerned primarily with Persian literature and only secondarily with Persian history, and that only in broad outlines, save in the case of periods which witnessed some definite change in the national outlook, it is unnecessary to enter into a more detailed account of the later Şafawí period; the more so because several excellent accounts of the decline and fall of this remarkable dynasty, and of the state of Persia at that time, are readily accessible to the English reader. Of these the following may be especially commended.

Adam Olearius, Secretary to the Embassy sent by Frederick Duke of Holstein to Russia and Persia, was in the latter country from November, 1636 until February, 1638. His Voyages and Travels, originally written in Latin, were translated into French and thence, by John Davies, into English. I have used the English version published in 1669.

Best contemporary accounts of this period.

(1) Olearius (A.D. 1636-1638).

Olearius, or Oelschläger, to give him his original

¹ Krusinski, op. cit., p. 71.

² Ibid., p. 76.

name, was a careful observer, and seems to have had a very fair knowledge both of Persian and Turkish, and his work is one of the best accounts of Persia in the seventeenth century.

Le Pere Raphaël du Mans, Superior of the Capuchin Mission at Isfahán, was born in A D 1613, went to Persia in 1644, and died there in 1696 His Estat de la Perse en 1660 in the learned edition of M. Schefer (Paris, 1890) gives a valuable if not very lively account of Persian institutions at a somewhat later date than Olearius 1644-1696).

(2) Raphael du Mans (A.D.

The Chevalier Chardin was born in A D 1643, was twice in Persia for about six years each time (A D 1664-70 and 1671-77), and settled in London in 1681, where he died in 1713 Of the numerous editions of his Voyages en Perse I have used that of the learned Langlès (Paris, 1811) in ten volumes, of which the last contains (pp 151-244) an admirable Notice chronologique de la Perse, depuis les temps les plus recules jusqu'à ce jour by the editor, carried down to the time of Fath-'Alí Shah Qajár

(3) Chardin
A.D. 1664-1677)

Shaykh 'Alí Hazín, who traced his descent from the celebrated Shaykh Záhíd i Gílání, the spiritual director of Shaykh Safiyyu'd Dín, the ancestor of the Safawí kings, was born in A D 1692 at Isfahán, where he spent the greater part of his time until he left Persia for India, never to return, in A D 1734 He wrote his Memoirs (published in the original Persian with an English translation by F C Belfour in 1830-1) in 1741, and died at Benares at a ripe old age in 1779 Though he was himself involved in the disaster which overtook Isfahán in 1722, he gives a much less vivid and moving picture of the sufferings of its inhabitants during the siege by the Afgháns than that drawn by Krusinski and other European observers His portraits of contemporary statesmen, theo-

(4) Shaykh Ali
Hazín (A.D.
1692-1779)

logians and poets, on the other hand, lend a special value to his book

Father Krusinski, Procurator of the Jesuits at Işfahán for some eighteen or twenty years previous to A.D. 1722, compiled an admirable History of the Revolution of Persia from the beginning of the Şafawí dynasty down to A.D. 1727 in which the circumstances of the Afghán invasion and its consequences are narrated in the utmost detail.

(5) Krusinski
(A.D. 1700-1727).

Jonas Hanway, who was in Persia in A.D. 1743-4, wrote and published in 1753 in two volumes An historical account of the British Trade over the Caspian Sea, with a Journal of Travels, which he supplemented by two further volumes on the Revolution of Persia, the first containing The Reign of Shah Sultan Hussein, with the Invasion of the Afghans, and the reigns of Sultan Mir Maghmud and his successor Ashreff, and the second The History of the celebrated usurper Nadir Kouli, from his birth in 1687 till his death in 1747, to which are added some particulars of the unfortunate reign of his successor Adil Shah. For the earlier part of his history Hanway is much indebted to Krusinski, but for the later period (A.D. 1727-1750), including the whole account of Nádir Sháh, he is an independent and most valuable authority, while his narrative is throughout lively and agreeable to read.

(6) Hanway
(A.D. 1743-1750).

These are only a few of the many writers and travellers whose works throw light on this period. I have mentioned

The later Şafawí period not calculated to inspire Persian historians.

them because they are the ones I have chiefly used, but a long and serviceable account of a much larger number will be found in Schefer's Introduction to his edition of le Père Raphaël du Mans mentioned above. The European writers are here, for reasons well set forth by Sir John Malcolm¹, more instructive and illuminating than the Persian historians, for whom, as he says, "we can hardly imagine an era more unfavourable. A period of nearly a century elapsed without the occurrence of any one political event of magnitude; and yet the extraordinary calm was productive of no advantage to Persia. The princes, nobles, and high officers of that kingdom were, it is true, exempt from the dangers of foreign or internal war, but their property and their lives were the sport of a succession of weak, cruel and debauched monarchs. The lower orders were exposed to fewer evils than the higher, but they became every day more unwarlike, and what they gained by that tranquillity which the State enjoyed lost almost all its value when they ceased to be able to defend it. This period was distinguished by no glorious achievements. No characters arose on which the historian could dwell with delight. The nation may be said to have existed on the reputation which it had before acquired till all it possessed was gone, and till it became, from the slow but certain progress of a gradual and vicious decay, incapable of one effort to avert that dreadful misery and ruin in which it was involved by the invasion of a few Afghan tribes, whose conquest of Persia affixed so indelible a disgrace upon that country that we cannot be surprised that its historians have shrunk from the painful and degrading narration."

¹ History of Persia (London, 1815), vol. i, pp. 568-570.

Shaykh 'Alī Hazīn¹ takes precisely the same view. "Many ages having now elapsed," says he, "since civilization, tranquillity, and the accomplishment of all worldly blessings had attained a state of perfection in the beautiful provinces of Īrān, these were become a fit object for the affliction of the malignant eye². The indolent King and princes, and the army that sought nothing but repose and for near a hundred years had not drawn the sword from the scabbard, would not even think of quelling this disturbance¹, until Maḥmúd² with a large army marched into the provinces of Kirmán and Yazd, and, having committed much plunder and devastation, proceeded on his route to Işfahán. This happened in the early part of the year 1134/1721."

¹ P. 106 of Belfour's text = p. 116 of his translation.

² The Evil Eye is called by the Arabs 'Aynul Kamāl', "the Eye of Perfection," because anything perfect of its kind is especially exposed to its attacks.

Jonas Hanway³ speaks in a similar strain. "Persia never enjoyed," says he, "a more perfect tranquillity than in the beginning of the present [i.e. the eighteenth] century. The treaties she had concluded with her neighbours were perfectly observed and secured her against any foreign invasions; whilst the effeminacy and luxury of her inhabitants, the ordinary consequences of a long peace, left no room to apprehend any danger from the ambition of her own subjects. This monarchy, which had suffered so many revolutions in past ages, seemed to be settled on a solid foundation when the news of its subversion surprised the whole world. The authors of this amazing catastrophe were a people hardly known even to their own sovereigns, and have now acquired a reputation only by the fame of those nations which they brought under their subjection. These people...are comprised under the general denomination of Afghans⁴."

The policy of Sháh 'Abbás the Great has been described above as wise and far-sighted, but this statement needs some qualification; for, while it greatly strengthened the power of the Crown, it undoubtedly conducted in the end to the weakening of the nation

Defects of the policy of Sháh
'Abbás.

¹ The seizure of Qandahár by the revolted Afgháns led by Mír Ways.

² The son and successor of Mír Ways.

³ Revolutions of Persia, vol. i, p. 22.

⁴ The Afgháns are, however, mentioned by the Arabian historian Ibnu'l-Athír in several places, the earliest mention being under the year 366/976-7. They were very troublesome in S.E. Persia in the middle of the fourteenth century. See my Abridged Translation of the Ta'rikh-i-Guzida (E. J. W. Gibb Series, xiv, 2), pp. 161 et seqq.

and the degeneration of its rulers. Previous kings had been embarrassed chiefly by ambitious relatives, powerful tribal chiefs, and turbulent townsmen, and for all these things Sháh 'Abbás set himself to provide remedies. Instead of allowing his sons to hold high administrative posts and take a prominent part in wars, he either blinded them or put them to death, or immured them in the haram, where, as Krusinski well explains¹, they lead a life of hardship and privation rather than of luxury and pleasure, while receiving a very imperfect education, and falling under the influence of the palace eunuchs, who ended by becoming the dominant power in the State. To his destruction of the great nobles and tribal chiefs, and his creation of the Sháh-sevens as a counterpoise to the seven tribes to whom his predecessors owed their power, allusion has already been made². A more extraordinary example of his application of the maxim Divide et impera was his deliberate creation in all the large towns of two artificially antagonized parties, named according to Krusinski³, Pelenk and Felenk, who indulged at intervals in the most sanguinary faction fights, they being, as Krusinski puts it, "so opposite, and so much enemies one to the other, that people in different States, in arms against one another, do not push their aversion and enmity farther". He adds (p. 92) that "though they fought without arms, because they were not supposed to make use of anything else but stones and sticks, it was with so much fury and bloodshed that the King was obliged to employ his guards to separate them with drawn swords, and hard it was to accomplish it, even with a method so effectual, insomuch that at Ispahan in 1714 they were under a necessity, before they could separate the combatants, to put about three hundred to the sword on the spot."

¹ Op cit, pp 65-70

² See p. 106 supra

³ Op cit, p. 91. Hanway (vol. III, p. 32 ad calc., and p. 33) calls them Peleuk and Feleuk. At a later period they were known as Haydarí and Ní'maíl.

Besides the eunuchs, there grew up and attained its full development under "Mullá Húsayn," the last unhappy though well-meaning occupant of the Şafawí throne at Işfahán, another dominant class whose influence hardly made for either spiritual unity or national efficiency, namely the great ecclesiastics

Domination of the Mullás, typified by Mullá
Muhammad
Báqir-i-Majlisí.

who culminated in the redoutable Mullá Muḥammad Báqir-i-Majlisí, the persecutor of Şúfis and heretics, of whom we shall have to speak at some length in a future chapter. His admirers¹ call attention to the fact that his death, which took place in 1111/1699-1700², was followed in a short time by the troubles which culminated in the supreme disaster of 1722, and suggest that the disappearance of so saintly a personage left Persia exposed to perils which more critical minds may be inclined to ascribe in part to the narrow intolerance so largely fostered by him and his congeners.

¹ e.g. the Qişaṣu'l-'Ulamá, p. 216 of the lithographed edition of 1306/1888-9.

² The chronogram is غم وحزن.

CHAPTER IV.

AN OUTLINE OF THE HISTORY OF PERSIA DURING THE LAST TWO CENTURIES (A.D. 1722-1922).

Only after much hesitation and several tentative experiments have I decided to endeavour to compress into one chapter two centuries of Persian history. Were this book primarily intended as a political history of Persia, such an attempt would be out of the question; for this long period witnessed the Afghán invasion and its devastations; the rise, meteoric career, and sudden eclipse of that amazing conqueror Nádir Sháh; the emergence in a world of chaos and misery of Karím Khán-i-Zand, generally accounted the best ruler whom Persia ever possessed, and of his gallant but unfortunate successor Lutf-'Alí Khán; the establishment of the still reigning Qájár dynasty, and within that period the occurrence, amidst many other important events, of two remarkable phenomena (the rise and growth of the Bábí religious movement since 1844, and the political Revolution of 1906) which profoundly affected the intellectual life and literary development of Persia, each one of which might well form the subject of a lengthy monograph rather than a chapter. This book, however, is written not from the political but from the literary point of view, and the historical part of it is only ancillary, and might have been omitted entirely if a knowledge of even the general outlines of Oriental history formed part of the mental equipment of most educated Europeans. From this point of view much fuller treatment is required for periods of transition, or of great intellectual activity, than for periods of unproductive strife not so much of rival ideas and beliefs as of conflicting ambitions. To the latter category belongs the greater part of the two centuries which must now engage our attention. During this period the literary language (which, indeed, had become fixed at any rate in the fourteenth century, so that the odes of I-Háfiz, save for their incomparable beauty, might have been written but yesterday) underwent no noticeable change; few fresh forms of literary expression were developed until the middle of the nineteenth century; and few fresh ideas arose to modify the Shí'a frenzy of Şafawí times until the rise of the Bábí doctrine in A.D. 1844, of which, however, the literary effects were less considerable than those of the Revolution of 1906. Moreover excellent and detailed accounts of the Afghán invasion, of Nádír Sháh, and of the earlier Qájár period already exist in English, several of which have been mentioned at the end of the preceding chapter¹; these could hardly be bettered, and would only be marred by such abridgment as would be necessary to fit them into the framework of this book. Hence I have deemed it best to limit myself in this chapter to a brief outline of the more salient events of these last two centuries.

THE AFGHÁN INVASION (A.D. 1722-1730).

Unlike the Arabs, Mongols, Tartars and Turks, who were instrumental in effecting previous subjections of Persia by foreign arms, the Afgháns are, apparently, an Íránian and therefore a kindred race, though differing materially in character from the Persians. The Persian language is widely spoken in their wild and mountainous country, while in their own peculiar idiom, the Pushtô, James Darmesteter saw the principal survivor of the language of the Avesta, the scripture of the Zoroastrians. They are a much fiercer, hardier, and more warlike people than the Persians, less refined and ingenious, and

Character of
the Afgháns.

¹ See pp. 114-118 supra.

fanatical Sunnís, a fact sufficient in itself to explain the intense antagonism which existed between the two nations, and enabled the Afgháns to give to their invasion of Persia the colour of a religious war

In A D 1707 Qandahár, a constant bone of contention between the Safawí kings of Persia and the "Great Moghuls"

Beginn ng of the trouble at Qandahár

of Indín, was in the possession of the former, and was governed in a very autocratic manner by a Georgian noble named Gurgín Khán

Mír Ways, an Afghán chief whose influence with his fellow-countrymen made him an object of suspicion, was by his orders banished to Isfahán as a state prisoner. There, however, he seems to have enjoyed a considerable amount of liberty and to have been freely admitted to the court of Sháh Husayn. Endowed with considerable perspicacity and a great talent for intrigue, he soon formed a pretty clear idea of the factions whose rivalries were preparing the ruin of the country, and with equal caution and cunning set himself to fan the suspicions to which every great Persian general or provincial governor was exposed. This was the easier in the case of one who, being by birth a Christian and a Georgian of noble family, might, without gross improbability, be suspected of thinking more of the restoration of his own and his country's fortunes than of the maintenance of the Persian Empire, though there seems in fact no reason to suspect him of any disloyalty

Having sown this seed of suspicion and completely ingratiated himself with the Persian Court, Mir Ways sought and obtained permission to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca. While there he took another important step for the furtherance of his designs. He sought from the leading ecclesiastical authorities a fatwa, or legal opinion, as to whether the orthodox Sunní subjects of a heretical (ie Shi'a) Muslim ruler were bound to obey him, or were justified, if occasion arose, in resisting him, if necessary by force of arms. The decision, which supported the latter alternative and so accorded with his designs, he carried back with him to Iṣfahán and subsequently to Qandahár, whither he was permitted to return, with strong recommendations to Gurgín Khán, in 1709. There he soon organized a conspiracy against the latter, and, taking advantage of the temporary absence of a large part of the Persian garrison on some expedition in the neighbourhood, he and his followers fell on the remainder when they were off their guard, killed the greater number of them, including Gurgín Khán, and took possession of the city. It was at this juncture that the fatwá obtained at Mecca proved so useful to Mír Ways, for by it he was able to overcome the scruples of the more faint-hearted of his followers, who were at first inclined to shrink from a definite repudiation of Persian suzerainty, but who now united with the more hot-headed of their countrymen in electing Mír Ways "Prince of Qandahár and General of the national troops¹."

Mír Ways at Mecca.

Several half-hearted attempts to subdue the rebellious city having failed, the Persian Government despatched

Success of the rebels. Khusraw Khán, nephew of the late Gurgín Khán, with an army of 30,000 men to effect its subjugation, but in spite of an initial success, which led the Afgháns to offer to surrender on terms, his uncompromising attitude impelled them to make a fresh desperate effort, resulting in the complete defeat of the Persian army (of whom only some 700 escaped) and the death of their general. Two years later, in A.D. 1713, another Persian army commanded by Rustam Khán was also defeated by the rebels, who thus secured possession of the whole province of Qandahár.

Mír Ways, having thus in five or six years laid the foundations of the Afghán power, died in A.D. 1715, and was succeeded by his brother Mír 'Abdu'lláh, whose disposition to accept, under certain conditions, Persian suzerainty led to his murder by his nephew Mír Ways succeeded by his son Mír Mahmúd. Mír Mahmúd, son of Mír Ways, who was forthwith proclaimed king. The weakness of the Persian government thus becoming apparent, others were led to follow the example of the Afgháns of Qandahár. Amongst these were the Abd'ill Afgháns of Herát, the Uzbeks of Transoxiana, the Kurds, the Lazgís and the Arabs of Bahrayn, and though the Persian General Safl quíl Khán with 30,000 troops succeeded in defeating an Uzbek army of 12000 he was immediately afterwards defeated by the Abdálf Afgháns.

¹ Krusinski, p. 187.

In A D 1720 Mír Mahmud assumed the aggressive, crossed the deserts of Sístán, and attacked and occupied Kirmán, whence, however, he was expelled four months later by the Persian General Lutf 'Alí Khán who, after this victory, proceeded to Shíráz and began to organize "the best appointed army that had been seen in Persia for many years" with a view to crushing the Afgháns and retaking Qandahár. Unfortunately before he had accomplished this his position was undermined by one of those Court intrigues which were so rapidly destroying the Persian Empire, and he was deprived of his command and brought as a prisoner to Isfahán while the army which he had collected and disciplined with such care rapidly melted away, and the spirits of the Afgháns were proportionately revived. The capture and sack of Shamakhí by the Lazgís and the appearance of strange portents in the sky combined still further to discourage the Persians, while the ordering of public mourning and repentance by Sháh Husayn tended only to accentuate the general depression.

The fatal year 1722 began with the second siege and capture of Kirmán by Mír Maḥmúd. The most remarkable incident connected with this was that he was joined by a number of "guebres" (gabr)¹, the small remnant of the Persians who still profess the ancient religion of Zoroaster, and who exist in any number only in the cities of Kirmán and Yazd and the intervening region of Rafsinján with its chief town Bahrám-ábád. Why these people should have attached themselves to foreign Muslims to make war on their Muslim compatriots it is hard to understand, unless the fanaticism of the Shí'a divines was responsible for driving them into this extraordinary course. Still more remarkable, if true, is Hanway's statement that they provided Mír Maḥmúd with one of his best generals, who, though he bore the Muhammadan name of Naşru'lláh, was, according to the same authority², "a worshipper of fire, since there were two priests hired by the Sultan who kept the sacred flame near his tomb."

From Kirmán Mír Maḥmúd marched by way of Yazd, which he attempted but failed to take by storm, to Işfahán, having scornfully refused an offer of 15,000 Afgháns advance on Işfahán. *támáns*³ to induce him to turn back, and finally pitched his camp at Gulnábád, distant some three leagues from the Şafawí capital. After much dispute and diversity of opinions, the Persian army marched out of Işfahán to engage the Afgháns on March 7th and on the following day, largely through the treachery of the Wáll of 'Arabistán, suffered a disastrous defeat.

The battle of Gulnábád, fought between the Persians and the Afgháns on Sunday, March 8, 1722, decided the fate of the Şafawí dynasty as surely as did the battle of Qádisiyya in A.D. 635 that of the Sásánians, or the conflict between the Çaliph's troops and

Battle of Gulnábád,
March 8, 1722.

¹ Hanway's Revolution of Persia, vol. i, p. 99.

² Ibid., p. 186.

³ At that time, according to Hanway (loc. cit., p. 100), equivalent to £37,500.

the Mongols outside Baghdád in AD 1258 that of the 'Abbásids. Between these three battles, moreover, there was a remarkable point of similarity in the splendour and apparent strength of the defenders and the squalor and seeming weakness of their assailants. The similarity in this respect between the battles of Qádisiyya and Baghdád has been noticed in a well-known passage of the *Kutbu'l-Fakhr*¹, to which the following account of the battle of Gulnábád by Hanway² forms a remarkable parallel :

A curious parallel

"The sun had just appeared on the horizon when the armies began to observe each other with that curiosity so natural on these dreadful occasions. The Persian army just come out of the capital, being composed of whatever was most brilliant at court, seemed as if it had been formed rather to make a show than to fight. The riches and variety of their arms and vestments, the beauty of their horses, the gold and precious stones with which some of their harnesses were covered, and the richness of their tents contributed to render the Persian camp very pompous and magnificent.

"On the other side there was a much smaller body of soldiers, disfigured with fatigue and the scorching heat of the sun. Their clothes were so ragged and torn in so long a march that they were scarce sufficient to cover them from the weather, and, their horses being adorned with only leather and brass, there was nothing glittering about them but their spears and sabres."

These three great and decisive battles resembled one another in several respects. In each case a great historic dynasty, the extent of whose inward decay was masked by its external splendour, and apparent, because hitherto unchallenged, strength and supremacy, collapsed before the fierce onslaught of a hardy and warlike folk, hitherto hardly known, or accounted as little better than barbarians, and in each case the more or less prolonged process of degene-

The Arab Mongol and Afghan invasion of Persia
compared and contrasted.

¹ See vol. II of my List Hist, p. 462, for the translation, and pp. 97-8 of Ahlwardt's edition for the text of this passage.

² Revolutions of Persia (London, 1753), vol. I, pp. 104-5.

ration which rendered the final catastrophe not only possible but inevitable is fairly obvious to subsequent historians, even if its extent and significance were not realized until the fatal touchstone was applied. The results, however, differed widely according to the character and abilities of the assailants. The Arab invaders of the seventh century established an Empire which endured for six centuries and effected a profound and permanent change in the lands and peoples whom they brought under their sway. The Mongol conquests were even more extensive, reaching as they did from China and Thibet to Germany and Russia, but the cohesion and duration of the vast Empire which they created were far inferior. The Afghán conquest, with which we are now concerned, was little more than an extensive and destructive raid, resulting in some seventy-five years of anarchy (A.D. 1722-1795), illuminated by the meteoric career of that Napoleon of Persia, Nádír Sháh, and ending in the establishment of the actually reigning dynasty of the Qájárs. The actual domination of the Afgháns over Persia only endured for eight or nine years¹.

Seven months elapsed after the battle of Gulnábád before the final pitiful surrender, with every circumstance of humiliation, of the unhappy Sháh Húsayn. In that battle the Persians are said to have lost all their artillery, baggage and treasure, as well as some 15,000 out of a total of 50,000 men.

On March 19 Mír Maḥmúd occupied the Sháh's beloved palace and pleasure-grounds of Faraḥábád, situated only three miles from Iṣfahán, which henceforth served as his headquarters. Two days later the Afgháns, having occupied the Armenian suburb of Julfá, where they levied a tribute of money and young girls, attempted to take Iṣfahán by ¹ Maḥmúd the Afghán laid siege to Kirmán in January, 1722, and captured Iṣfahán in October of the same year. His cousin Ashraf, who succeeded him, was killed by Balúchís in 1730.

Prince Tahmásp escapes from Iṣfahán to Qazwín.

storm, but, having twice failed (on March 19 and 21), sat down to blockade the city. Three months later Prince Tahmásp Mírzá, who had been nominated to succeed his father, effected his escape from the beleaguered city to Qazwín, where he attempted, with but small success, to raise an army for the relief of the capital.

Soon after this, famine began to press heavily on the people, who clamoured to be led against the besiegers,

Famine in Isfahán.

but their desperate sortie failed owing to the renewed treachery of Wálí of 'Arabistán, who was throughout these dark days the evil genius of the unhappy king. The Persian court, indeed, seemed to have been stricken with a kind of folly which was equally ready to repose confidence in traitors and to mistrust and degrade or dismiss brave and patriotic officers like Lutf-'Alí Khan. For three or four months before the end the sufferings of the people from famine were terrible: they were finally reduced to eating dogs, cats and even the corpses of their dead, and perished in great numbers. The pitiful details may be found in the pages of Krusinski, Hanway, and the contemporary accounts written by certain agents of the Dutch East India Company then resident at Isfahán, of which the original texts have been included by H. Dunlop in his fine work on Persia (Persie, Haarlem, 1912, pp. 242-257).

At the end of September, 1722, Sháh Husayn offered to surrender himself and his capital to the Afghán invader, Surrender of Isfahán to Afgháns

Oct. 21 1722

but Mír Mahmud, in order still further to reduce by famine the numbers and spirit of the besieged, dragged out the negotiations for another three or four weeks, so that it was not until October 21 that Sháh Husayn repaired on foot to Farahabád, once his favourite residence, now the headquarters of his ruthless foe, to surrender the crown which Mír Mahmud assumed six days later. When news of his father's abdication reached Ṭahmásp Mírzá at Qazwín he caused himself to be proclaimed king, but was driven out of that city on December 20 by the Afghán general Amánu'lláh Khán, who on his way thither received the submission of Qum and Káshán.

Ṭahmásp was now reduced to the miserable expedient of invoking the help of Russia and Turkey, who had already fixed covetous eyes on the apparently moribund Persian kingdom and had occupied Gílán and Tiflis respectively. On September 23, 1723, a treaty was signed whereby, in return for the expulsion of the Afgháns and the restoration of his authority, Ṭahmásp undertook to cede to Russia the Caspian provinces of Gílán, Mázandarán and Gurgán, and the towns of Báku, Darband and their dependencies. Soon afterwards the Turks took Erivan, Nakhjuwán, Khúy and Hamadán, but were repulsed from Tabríz. On July 8, 1724, an agreement for the partition of Persia was signed between Russia and Turkey at Constantinople¹.

Meanwhile Mír Maḥmúd was continuing his cruelties at Iṣfahán. In A.D. 1723 he put to death in cold blood some three hundred of the nobles and chief citizens, and followed up this bloody deed with the murder of about two hundred children of their families. He also killed some three thousand of the deposed Sháh's body-guard, together with many other persons whose sentiments he mistrusted or whose influence he feared. In the following year (A.D. 1724) the Afghán general Zabardast Khán succeeded, where his predecessor Naṣru'lláh² had failed and fallen, in taking Shíráz; and towards the end of the year Mír Maḥmúd prepared to attack Yazd, which had hitherto remained unsubdued. The Muslim inhabitants of that town, fearing that the numerous Zoroastrians dwelling

¹ For the contents of the six articles, see Hanway's Revolutions of Persia, i, pp. 200-1.

² See p. 126 supra.

in it might follow the example of their co-religionists of Kirmán and join the Afgháns, killed a great number of them

About this time Mír Mahmud, alarmed at the increasing insubordination of his cousin Ashraf, and, we may hope,

Mír Mahmud
murders the Safawí princes
(Feb 7 1725)
and is himself slain by his cousin Ashraf
(April 22 1725)

tormented by an uneasy conscience on account of his cruelties, betook himself to a severe course of self discipline and mortification, which did but increase his melancholy and distemper, so that on February 7, 1725, he murdered all the surviving members of the royal family with the exception of the deposed Sháh Husayn and two of his younger children. Thereafter his disorder rapidly increased, until he himself was murdered on April 22 by his cousin Ashraf, who was thereupon proclaimed king. Mír Mahmud was at the time of his death only twenty seven years of age, and is described as "middle sized and clumsy, his neck was so short that his head seemed to grow to his shoulders, he had a broad face and flat nose, and his beard was thin and of a red colour, his looks were wild and his countenance austere and disagreeable, his eyes, which were blue and a little squinting, were generally downcast, like a man absorbed in deep thought

The death of Peter the Great about this period made Russia slightly less dangerous as a neighbour, but the Turks continued to press forwards and on August 3,

Death of Peter the Great and Turkish invasion
of Persia

1725, succeeded at last in capturing Tabriz. They even advanced to within three days march of Isfahán, but turned back before reaching it. They subsequently (A D 1726) took Qazwín and Marágha, but were defeated by Ashraf near Kirmán-sháh. Negotiations for peace were meanwhile in progress at Constantinople, whither Ashraf had sent an ambassador named 'Abdu'l 'Azíz Khán, whose arrogant proposal that his master should be Caliph of the East and the Ottoman Sultán Caliph of the West caused great umbrage to the Porte. The war, however, was very unpopular with the Turkish soldiers and people, who failed to see why they should fight fellow-Sunnís in order to restore a heretical Shí'a dynasty, though the 'ulamá were induced to give a fatwá in favour of this course, on the ground that a divided Caliphate was incompatible with the dignity or safety of Islám. Finally, however, a treaty of peace was concluded and signed at Hamadán in September, 1727¹.

Negotiations between Turks
and Afgháns.

This danger had hardly been averted when a far greater one, destined in a short time to prove fatal to the Afgháns, presented itself in the person of Nádir-qulí, subsequently known to fame as Nádir Sháh, one of the most remarkable and ruthless military geniuses ever produced by Persia. Hitherto, though he was now about forty years of age, little had been heard of him; but this year, issuing forth from his stronghold, that wonderful natural fastness named after him Kalát-i-Nádir², he defeated an Afghán force and took possession of Níshápúr in the name of Sháh Tahmásp II, at that time precariously established at Farahábád in Mázandarán, and supported with a certain condescending arrogance by the Qájár chief Fath-'Alí Khán. After this success Nádir paid a visit to the fugitive Sháh, and, after insinuating himself into his favour, contrived the assassination of the Qájár, against whom he had succeeded in arousing the Sháh's suspicions. On May 15 of the following year (1728) the Sháh, accompanied by Nádir (or Tahmásp-qulí, "the slave of Tahmásp," to give him the name which

Rise of Nádir.

Assassination of Fath-'Alí
Khán Qájár.

¹ For its provisions, contained in nine articles, see Hanway, op. cit., i, pp. 254-5.

² This fortress, which is jealously guarded, Lord Curzon attempted but failed to penetrate. See his Persia, vol. i, pp. 125-140, especially the bird's-eye view on p. 134.

he temporarily assumed about this time), made a solemn entry into Níshápúr, amidst the rejoicings of the inhabitants, and shortly afterwards occupied Mashhad and Herát. He also despatched an ambassador to Constantinople, whence in return a certain Sulýmín Efendi was sent as envoy to Persia.

Meanwhile Ashraf, having taken Yazd and Kirmín, marched into Khurísán with an army of thirty thousand men to give battle to Tahmásp, but he was completely defeated by Nádir on October 2 at Dámghán. Another decisive battle was fought in the following year at Murchakhur near Isfahán. The Afgháns were again defeated and evacuated Isfahán to the number of twelve thousand men, but before quitting the city he had ruined Ashraf murdered the unfortunate ex-Sháh Husayn, and carried off most of the ladies of the royal family and the King's treasure. When Tahmásp II entered Isfahán on December 9 he found only his old mother, who had escaped deportation by disguising herself as a servant, and was moved to tears at the desolation and desecration which met his eyes at every turn. Nádir, having finally induced Tahmásp to empower him to levy taxes on his own authority, marched southwards in pursuit of the retiring Afgháns, whom he overtook and again defeated near Persepolis. Ashraf fled from Shíráz towards his own country, but cold, hunger and the unrelenting hostility of the inhabitants of the regions which he had to traverse dissipated his forces and compelled him to abandon his captives and his treasure, and he was finally killed by a party of Baluch tribesmen. Thus ended the disastrous period of Afghán dominion in Persia in A.D. 1730, having lasted eight years.

Ships recovered by Persians.

Defeat of Ashraf at Dámghán.

Isfahán evacuated and Sháh Husayn murdered by Afgháns.

Defeat of Afgháns near Persepolis and death of Ashraf (A.D. 1730).

THE CAREER OF NÁDIR

UNTIL HIS ASSASSINATION IN A.D. 1747.

Although it was not until A.D. 1736 that Nádir deemed it expedient to take the title of King, he became from A.D. 1730 onwards the de facto ruler of Persia. Of his humble origin and early struggles it is unnecessary to speak here; they will be found narrated as fully as the circumstances permit in the pages of Hanway, Malcolm and other historians of Persia. Sháh Tahmásp was from the first but a roi fainéant, and his only serious attempt to achieve anything by himself, when he took the field against the Turks in A.D. 1731, resulted in a disastrous failure, for he lost both Tabríz and Hamadán, and in January, 1732, concluded a most unfavourable peace, whereby he ceded Georgia and Armenia to Turkey on condition that she should aid him to expel the Russians from Gílán, Shírwán and Darband. Nádir, greatly incensed, came to Işfahán in August, 1732, and, having by a stratagem seized and imprisoned Tahmásp, proclaimed his infant son (then only six months old) as king under the title of Sháh 'Abbás III, and at once sent a threatening letter to Aḥmad Páshá of Baghdád, which he followed up by a declaration of war in October.

Incapacity of Tahmásp.

'Abbás III proclaimed King.

In April of the following year (1733) Nádir appeared before Baghdád, having already retaken Kirmánsháh, with an army of 80,000 men, but suffered a defeat on July 18, and retired to Hamadán to recruit and recuperate his troops. Returning to the attack in the autumn he defeated the Turks on October 26 in a great battle wherein the gallant and noble-minded Topál 'Osmán ('Uthmán) was slain. Having crushed a revolt in favour of the deposed Sháh Tahmásp in Fárs, he invaded Georgia in 1734, took Tiflís, Ganja and Shamákhí,

Further successes of Nádir.

and obtained from Russia the retrocession of Gílán, Shírwán, Darband, Báku and Rasht. In the following year (1735) he again defeated the Turks near Erivan, and captured that city and Erzeroum.

On the following Nawríz, or Persian New Year's day (March 21, 1736), Nádir announced to the assembled army and deputies of the nation the death of the infant Sháh 'Abbás III and invited them to decide within three days whether they would restore his father, the deposed Sháh Tahmásp, or elect a new king. His own desire, which coincided with that of most of his officers and soldiers, was evident, and, the unwilling minority being overawed, the crown of Persia was unanimously offered to him. He agreed to accept it on three conditions, namely: (1) that it should be made hereditary in his family; (2) that there should be no talk of a restoration of the Safawís, and that no one should aid, comfort, or harbour any member of that family who might aspire to the throne; and (3) that the cursing of the first three Caliphs, the mourning for the death of the Imám Húsayn, and other distinctive practices of the Shí'a should be abandoned. This last condition was the most distasteful to the Persians, and the chief ecclesiastical authority, being asked his opinion, had the courage to denounce it as "derogatory to the welfare of the true believers"—a courage which cost him his life, for he was immediately strangled by Nádir's orders. Not content with this, Nádir, on his arrival at Qazwín, confiscated the religious endowments (awqáf) for the expenses of his army, to whom, he said, Persia owed more than to her hierarchy. Towards the end of the year he concluded a favourable treaty with Turkey, by which Persia recovered all her lost provinces; and in December he set out at the head of 100,000 men against Afghánistán and India, leaving his son Ridá-qulí as regent.

The next two years (A.D. 1737-9) witnessed Nádir Sháh's

Nádir pro-
claimed King.

greatest military achievement, the invasion of India, capture of Lahore and Delhi, and return home with the enormous spoils in money and kind which he exacted from the unfortunate Indians, and which Hanway¹ estimates at £87,500,000. Having taken Qandahár, Kábul and Peshawur in 1738, he crossed the Indus early in the following year, captured Lahore, and in February, 1739, utterly defeated the Indian army of Muḥammad Sháh, two hundred thousand strong, on the plains of Karnál. Delhi was peaceably occupied, but a few days later a riot occurred in which some of Nádir's soldiers were killed, and he avenged their blood by a general massacre of the inhabitants which lasted from 8 a.m. until 3 p.m., and in which 110,000 persons perished. He never dreamed of holding India, and, having extorted the enormous indemnity mentioned above and left the unhappy Muḥammad Sháh in possession of his throne, with a threat that he would return again if necessary, he began his homeward march in May, turning aside to chastise the predatory Uzbeks of Khiva and Bukhárá, which latter town he captured on November 28, 1739.

During the absence of Nádir Sháh his son Riḍá-qulí had put to death the unfortunate Tahmásp and most of his family at Sabzawár, and began to show signs of desiring to retain the powers with which he had been temporarily invested by his father. Being suspected of instigating an unsuccessful attempt on Nádir's life, he was deprived of his eyesight, but with this cruel act the wonderful good fortune which had hitherto accompanied Nádir began to desert him. His increasing cruelty, tyranny, avarice and extortion, but most of all, perhaps, his attempt to impose on

Nádir's Indian
campaign
(A.D. 1737-1739).

Nádir's son
Riḍá-qulí rebels and is blinded.

Nádir's views on religion.

¹ Revolutions of Persia, ii, p. 188. The loss to India he puts at one hundred and twenty million pounds and the number of those slain at 200,000 (Ibid., p. 197).

his Persian subjects the Sunnī doctrine, made him duly more detested. His innovations included the production of Persian translations of the Qur'ān and the Gospels. The latter, on which several Christians were employed, he caused to be read aloud to him at Tihrán, while he commented on it with derision, and hinted that when he found leisure he might (perhaps after the model of Akbar) produce a new religion of his own which should supplant alike Judaism, Christianity and Islām¹. His military projects, moreover, began to miscarry, his campaign against the Lazgís in A D 1741-2 did not prosper, and in the war with Turkey in which he became involved in 1743 he was unsuccessful in his attempt to take Mosul (Mawsil). Revolts which broke out in Fārs and Shīrwān were only suppressed with difficulty after much bloodshed. However he put down a rebellion of the Qájárs at Astarábád in A D 1744, defeated the Turks in a great battle near Erivan in August, 1745, and concluded a satisfactory peace with them in 1746. In the following year Nádir Sháh visited Kirmán, which suffered much from his cruelties and exactions, and thence proceeded to Mashhad, where he arrived at the end of May, 1747. Here he conceived the abominable plan of killing all his Persian officers and soldiers (the bulk of his army being Turkmans and Uzbeks and consequently Sunnís), but this project was made known by a Georgian slave to some of the Persian officers, who thereupon decided, in the picturesque Persian phrase, "to breakfast off him ere he should sup off them". A certain Sálīh Beg, aided by four trusty men, undertook the task², and, entering his tent by night, rid their country of one who, though he first appeared as its deliverer from the Afghán yoke, now bade fair to crush it beneath a yoke yet more intolerable. At the time of his death Nádír Sháh was sixty-one years of age and had reigned eleven years and three months (A.D. 1736-47). He was succeeded by his nephew 'Alí-qulí Khán, who assumed the crown under the title of 'Ádil Sháh, but was defeated and slain by his brother Ibráhím in the following year. He in turn was killed a year later (A.D. 1749) by the partisans of Nádír's grandson Sháhrukh, the son of the unfortunate Ridá-qulí and a Şafawí princess, the daughter of Sháh Husayn, who now succeeded to the throne. Youth, beauty and a character at once amiable and humane¹ did not, however, secure him against misfortune, and he was shortly after his accession deposed and blinded by a certain Sayyid Muḥammad, a grandson on the mother's side of the Şafawí Sháh Sulaymán II. He in turn soon fell a victim to the universal violence and lawlessness which now prevailed in Persia, and Sháhrukh was restored to the throne, but again deposed and again restored to exercise a nominal rule at Mashhad over the province of Khurásán, which Aḥmad Khán Abdálí (afterwards famous as Aḥmad Sháh Durrání, the founder of the modern kingdom of Afghánistán) desired, before leaving Persia, to erect into a buffer state between that country and his own. The remainder of the blind Sháhrukh's long reign was uneventful, and he survived until A.D. 1796, having reigned nearly fifty years.

¹ See Sir John Malcolm's History of Persia (ed 1815), vol II, p 104

² According to the Tārīkh-i ba'd Nádīryya (ed Oskar Mann, Leyden, 1891, pp 15 et seqq), which gives a very full account of the matter, the four chief conspirators, Muhammad Khán Qájár, Musá Beg Afshár, Qoja Beg Gunduzlu and Muhammad Sálīh Khán, were accompanied by seventy young volunteers, but only four had the courage to enter

Nádír's tent. The assassination took place on Sunday, 11 Jumáda ii, 1160 (June 20, 1747).

¹ Malcolm's History, vol. ii, p. 111.

THE ZAND DYNASTY (A D 1750-1794)

"The history of Persia," says Sir John Malcolm¹, "from the death of Nádir Sháh till the elevation of Áqá Muhammad Khán, the founder of the reigning family, presents to our attention no one striking feature except the life of Karím Khán-i-Zand. The happy reign of this excellent prince, as contrasted with those who preceded and followed him, affords to the historian of Persia that description of mixed pleasure and repose which a traveller enjoys who arrives at a beautiful and fertile valley in the midst of an arduous journey over barren and rugged wastes. It is pleasing to recount the actions of a chief who, though born in an inferior rank, obtained power without crime, and who exercised it with a moderation that was, in the times in which he lived, as singular as his humanity and justice."

Virtues of Karím
Khán i Zand

Karím Khán, however, who fixed his capital at Shíráz, which he did so much to beautify and where he is still gratefully remembered, never ruled over the whole of Persia and never assumed the title of Sháh, but remained content with that of Wakíl, or Regent. Originally he and a Bakhtiyári chief named 'Alí Mardán Khán were the joint regents of "a real or pretended grandson of Sháh Husayn²" in whose name they seized Isfahán, where they placed him on the throne. Before long they fell out, 'Alí Mardán Khán was killed, and Karím Khan became the de facto ruler of Southern Persia. His rivals were the Afghán chief Ázad in Ádharbáyján and the North west, and in the Caspian provinces Muhammad Hasan the Qajar, son of that Fath-'Alí Khan who was murdered by Nádir at the outset of his career, and father two rivals.

Karím Khán s

¹ Op cit, vol II, p 115

² R G Watson's History of Persia, p 44

of Āqá Muḥammad Khán, the actual founder of the Qájár dynasty.

Āzád was the first to be eliminated from this triangular contest. He defeated Karím Khán and compelled him to evacuate not only Isfahán but Shíráz, but, rashly pursuing him through the narrow defile of Kamárij, fell into an ambush, lost most of his followers, and finally, having sought refuge first with the Páshá of Baghdád and then with Heraclius, Prince of Georgia, "threw himself upon the generosity of Karím Khán, who received him with kindness, promoted him to the first rank among his nobles, and treated him with so generous a confidence that he soon converted this dangerous rival into an attached friend¹."

In A.D. 1757, about four years after the battle of Kamárij, Karím Khán had to face a fierce onslaught by his other rival, Muḥammad Ḥasan Khán the Qájár, who, after a striking initial success, was finally driven back into Mázandarán, where he was eventually defeated and killed in A.D. 1760 by Karím Khán's general Shaykh 'Alí Khán. From this time until his death in the spring of 1779 Karím Khán practically ruled over the whole of Persia except Khurásán, where the blind and harmless Sháhrukh exercised a nominal sovereignty. The chief military exploit of his reign was the capture of Baṣra from the Turks in 1776, effected by his brother Šádiq, who continued to administer it until Karím's death, when he relinquished it to the Turks in order to take part in the fratricidal struggle for the Persian crown².

¹ Sir John Malcolm's History of Persia, vol. ii, p. 125. The two preceding pages contain a graphic account of the battle of Kamárij, as narrated to the author on the spot by persons who had themselves taken part in it.

² See 'Alí Ridá's Ta'rikh-i-Zandiyya (ed. Ernst Beer, Leyden, 1888), p. 8.

Mirza 'Aqil

Ibrahim Khán

Mirza Mahdí Mirza Ja'far Wazir

Add. 24904 (Brit. Mus.), inside cover

Karim Khán i Zand

Ismat'il Khán

Ázid Khin Afghin

"The most important, if we consider its ultimate consequences, of all the events which occurred at the death of Karím Khán, was the flight of Áqá Muhammad Khán Qájár, who had been for many years a prisoner at large in the city of Shíráz¹." As a child he had suffered castration by the cruel command of Nádir's nephew 'Ádil Sháh², on account of which the title of Ághá or Áqa, generally given to eunuchs, was added to his name. After the defeat and death of his father Muhammad Hasan Khán the Qájár in A.D. 1757, he fell into the hands of Karím Khán, who interned him in Shíráz, but otherwise treated him kindly and even generously, so far as was compatible with his safe custody. He was even allowed to gratify his passion for the chase in the country round Shíráz on condition of re-entering the city before the gates were closed at night-fall. Returning to the city on the evening of Safar 12, 1193 (March 1, 1779), and learning through his sister, who was an inmate of the Palace, that Karím Khán lay at the point of death, he suffered a favourite hawk to escape, and made its pursuit an excuse for spending the night in the plain. Next morning, two hours after dawn³, having learned that Karím Khán had breathed his last, he took advantage of the prevailing confusion to make his escape northwards, and travelled so swiftly that he reached Isfahán on the third day⁴, and thence made his way into Mazandarán, which thenceforth became the base of those operations by which, fifteen years later, he accomplished the final overthrow of the Zand dynasty and won for his own house that supremacy over Persia which they hold to this day.

It is unnecessary to describe here the fratricidal wars

¹ Sir John Malcolm, op cit, II, p. 157

² Ibid, p. 263

³ Tarikh-i Zandiyya, p. 6, l. 1

⁴ Sir John Malcolm's History, II, p. 158 ad calc

which during the next ten years (A.D. 1779-89) sapped the power of the Zand dynasty while Aqá Muḥammad Khán, with incredible self-control and political sagacity, was uniting and consolidating the Qájár power. Within the year which witnessed Karím Khán's death four of his house had successively mounted his throne, to wit, his son Abu'l-Fath, his nephew 'Alí Murád, his son Muḥammad 'Alí, and his brother Šádiq. The last-named, together with all his sons except Ja'far, was put to death in March, 1782, by 'Alí Murád, who thus regained the throne, but died at Múrchakhúr near Iṣfahán in January, 1785, and was succeeded by Ja'far, the date of whose accession is commemorated in the following ingenious chronogram by Hájji Sulaymán of Káshán called Šabáḥí¹:

بِضْبِطِ سَالِ جُلُوسِ مَبَارِكِ مِیْمُونِ
 كه هست مبداءِ تاریخِ عشرتِ دورانِ
 نوشت كلكِ صباحی ز قصرِ سلطانی
 علی مراد برون شد نشست جعفر خانِ

"To record the year of the blessed and auspicious accession
 Which is the initial date of the mirth of the age,
 The pen of Šabáḥí wrote: 'From the Royal Palace
 'Alí Murád went forth, and Ja'far Khán sat' [in his place]."

The letters composing the words Qaṣr-i-Sultání yield the number 550; from this we subtract (355) equivalent to 'Alí Murád, which gives us 195; to this we add the number equivalent to Ja'far Khán (1004), which finally gives us the correct date A.H. 1199 (A.D. 1785).

Ja'far Khán was murdered on 25 Rabí ii, 1203 (January 23, 1789), and was succeeded by his son, the gallant and unfortunate Luṭf-'Alí Khán, of whose personality Sir Harford Jones Brydges has given so attractive an account. "The reader, I hope," he

Luṭf-'Alí Khán,
 the last of the Zand dynasty.

¹ Ta'rikh-i-Zandiyya, pp. 24-25.

KARIM KHÁN I ZAND

4938 (Brit Mus), No 1

says¹, 'will pardon me if I treat the reign and misfortunes of the noble Lutf 'Alí more in detail than usual. I received great kindness and attention from him when he filled the throne, and under a miserable tent I had the honour of sitting on the same horse cloth with him when a fugitive! His virtues endeared him to his subjects, and the bravery, constancy, courage and ability which he manifested under his misfortunes are the theme of poems and ballads which it is not improbable will last as long as the Persian language itself. He was mainly, amiable, affable under prosperity and, under calamities as great and as severe as human nature can suffer, he was dignified and cool and determined. That so noble a being that a prince the hope and pride of his country, should have been betrayed by a wretch² in whom he placed, or rather misplaced, his confidence—that his end should have been marked by indignities exercised on his person at which human nature shudders—that his little son should have suffered loss of virility—that his daughters should have been forced into marriage with the scum of the earth—that the princess his wife should have been dishonoured—are dispensations of Providence, which though we must not arraign we may permit ourselves to wonder at'

It is fortunate that we possess such disinterested appreciations of poor Lutf-'Alí Khán, the last chivalrous figure amongst the kings of Persia, for such of his compatriots as described his career necessarily wrote after the triumph of his implacable rival and deadly foe Áqá Muhammad Khán, and therefore whatever their true sentiments may have been,

Courage and valour and misfortunes of Lutf 'Alí
Khán

¹ The Dynasty of the Kajars, etc (London 1833) pp cxx-cxxi. Sir H J Brydges 'visited Shíráz for the first time in 1786'

² To wit the notorious Hájji Ibráhím—the scoundrel," as Sir H J Brydges calls him (Account of H M's Mission, etc vol 1, pp 95-96) whose mad ambition and black heart brought ruin on his confiding king and misery the most severe on his fellow citizens dared not venture to praise the fallen prince, lest they should incur the displeasure of the cruel Qájár. Short-lived as the Zand dynasty was, it began and ended nobly, for its first representative was one of the best and its last one of the bravest of all the long line of Persian monarchs.

THE REIGNING QÁJÁR DYNASTY (A.D. 1796 ONWARDS).

The full and detailed accounts of the reigning Qájár dynasty already available to the English reader render any attempt to summarize their history in this place quite unnecessary¹. Áqá Muḥammad Khán was not actually crowned until A.D. 1796, and was assassinated in the following year, so that he wore the crown of Persia for not more than fifteen months², but his reign practically began on the death of Karím Khán in A.D. 1779, though "he used to observe that he had no title even to the name of king till he was obeyed through the whole of the ancient limits of the Empire of Persia³," so that it was only after he had finally subdued Georgia that he consented to assume the title of Sháh. His appearance and character are admirably summarized by Sir John Malcolm in the following words⁴:

¹ Sir Harford Jones Brydges' Dynasty of the Kajars translated from the Original Persian Manuscript (London, 1833) opens with a valuable Introduction (Preliminary matter) filling pp. xiii—cxci. The text of the original, entitled Ma'dáthir-i-Sultáníyya, was printed at Tabriz in Rajab, 1241 (March, 1826) and comes down to that year, but Brydges' translation ends with the year 1226/1811-12, and, in the latter part especially, differs very greatly from the printed text. Sir John Malcolm's History ends with the year 1230/1814; R. G. Watson's excellent monograph with A.D. 1857-8. The latest History of Persia, by Sir Percy Molesworth Sykes (2nd edition, London, 1921), is continued down to the actual year of publication.

² Like Nádir, he was crowned by acclamation in the Plain of Múqán in the spring of 1796, and met his death on June 17, 1797.

³ Malcolm's History, ii, p. 287.

⁴ Ibid., pp. 300-302.

ÁQÁ MUḤAMMAD KHÁN QAJÁR seated, with his minister
HÁJJI IBRÁHÍM standing before him

Add. 24903 (Brit. Mus.)

To face p. 144

"Áqá Muhammad Khán was murdered in the sixty third year of his age. He had been ruler of a great part of Persia for upwards of twenty years, but had only for a short period enjoyed the undisputed sovereignty of that country. The person of that monarch was so slender that at a distance he appeared like a youth of fourteen or fifteen. His beardless and shrivelled face resembled that of an aged and wrinkled woman, and the expression of his countenance, at no times pleasant, was horrible when clouded, as it very often was, with indignation. He was sensible of this, and could not bear that anyone should look at him. This prince had suffered, in the early part of his life, the most cruel adversity, and his future conduct seems to have taken its strongest bias from the keen recollection of his misery and his wrongs. The first passion of his mind was the love of power, the second, avarice, and the third, revenge. In all these he indulged to excess, and they administered to each other but the two latter, strong as they were, gave way to the first whenever they came in collision. His knowledge of the character and feelings of others was wonderful, and it is to this knowledge, and his talent of concealing from all the secret purposes of his soul, that we must refer his extraordinary success in subduing his enemies. Against these he never employed force till art had failed, and, even in war, his policy effected more than his sword. His ablest and most confidential minister¹, when asked if Áqá Muhammad Khán was personally brave, replied, 'No doubt, but still I can hardly recollect an occasion when he had an opportunity of displaying courage. The monarch's head,' he emphatically added, 'never left work for his hand.'"

Áqá Muhammad Khán was succeeded by his nephew the uxorious and philoprogenitive² Fath-'Alí Sháh. He was

¹ The infamous traitor Hájjí Ibráhím, who personally communicated to Sir John Malcolm the opinion here recorded.

² According to the Násikh-u't-Tawárikh, the issue of Fath 'Alí Sháh during the 47 years of his mature lifetime amounted to two thousand children and grandchildren, and would, adds the historian, during the twenty-one years intervening between his death and the date of writing, probably amount to about ten thousand souls. He enumerates 57 sons and 46 daughters who survived him, 296 grandsons and 292 grand-daughters, and 158 wives who had borne children to him. R. G. Watson (History of Persia, p. 269) puts the number of his children at 159. In any case the number was so large as to justify the well known Persian avaricious and vain, being inordinately proud of his handsome face and long beard, but not by nature cruel (at any rate compared to his late uncle), and it is related that, though obliged by custom to witness the execution of malefactors, he would always avert his face so as not to behold the unhappy wretch's death-agony. He was something of a poet, and composed numerous odes under the pen-name of Kháqán. Politically the chief features of his reign were the Anglo-French rivalry typified by the missions of Malcolm and Harford Jones Brydges on the one hand, and Jaubert and General Gardanne on the other (A.D. 1800-1808); the growing menace of Russia, resulting in the successive disastrous treaties of Gulistán (A.D. 1813) and Turkmán-cháy (A.D. 1826); and the war with Turkey in A.D. 1821, concluded in 1823 by the Treaty of Erzeroum. Other notable events of this reign were the disgrace and death of the traitor Hájji Ibráhím and the almost complete extirpation of his family about A.D. 1800¹; the massacre of Grebaïodoff and the Russian Mission at Tíhrán on February 11, 1829²; and the premature death, at the age of forty-six, of the Sháh's favourite son 'Abbás Mírzá, the Crown Prince, "the noblest of the Kajar race," as Watson calls him³, in A.D. 1833. His heart-broken father only survived him about a year, and died at the age of sixty-eight on October 23, 1834, leaving fifty-seven sons and forty-six daughters to mourn his loss.

Fath-'Alí Sháh was succeeded by his grandson Muḥammad, the son of 'Abbás Mírzá, who, ere he was crowned on January 31, 1835, was confronted with two rival claimants to the throne, his uncle the Zillu's-Sulṭán and his brother the Faṛmán-farmá. These, 1835-1848).

Muḥammad
Sháh (A.D.

saying Shutur u shupush u shahzáda hama já paydá'st ("Camels, lice and princes are to be found everywhere").

¹ See R. G. Watson's History of Persia, pp. 128-129.

² Ibid., pp. 247-256.

³ Ibid., p. 269.

however, were overcome without much difficulty by Persian troops commanded by Sir Henry Lindsay Bethune, and though the new Sháh had every reason to be grateful to England and Russia for assuring his succession, the fact that these two powerful neighbours had for the first time intervened in this fashion was an ominous portent and a dangerous precedent in the history of Persia. The same year witnessed the fall and execution (on June 26, 1835) of the celebrated Qá'im-maqám Mírzá Abu'l-Qásim¹, hitherto the all-powerful minister of the King, still regarded by his countrymen as one of the finest prose stylists of modern times. He was succeeded as Prime Minister by the notorious Hájjí Mírzá Ághásí, concerning whom many ridiculous anecdotes are still current in Persia². Of the protracted but fruitless siege of Herát by the Persians in 1838 and the manifestations of Anglo-Russian rivalry for which it afforded occasion it is unnecessary to speak; nor of the withdrawal of Sir J. McNeill, the British Minister (A.D. 1838-1841), from the Persian Court; nor of the Turco-Persian boundary disputes of 1842 and the Turkish massacre of Persians at Karbalá in the early part of 1843. From our point of view none of these events, fully discussed by R. G. Watson and other historians of Persia, are equal in interest to the Isma'ílí revolt of 1840 or thereabouts, and the rise of the Bábí religion in 1844.

Of the origin and doctrines of the Isma'ílí heresy or "Sect of the Seven" (Sab'iyya), some account will be found in the first volume¹ of this work, while their destruction by Húlágú Khán the Mongol in the middle of the thirteenth century of our era is briefly described in the second². But, though their power in Persia in modern times.

¹ His father, Mírzá 'Ísá of Faráhán, bore the same title. Notices of both occur in vol. ii of the Majma'u'l-Fusahá, pp. 87 and 425. Some account of his literary achievements will be given when we come to consider the prose-writers of the Qájár period in the penultimate chapter of Part III of this volume.

² See Gobineau's Les Religions et les Philosophies dans l'Asie Centrale (2nd ed., Paris, 1866), pp. 160-166; and my Year amongst the Persians, pp. 116-117. A sketch of his character is also given by R. G. Watson, History of Persia, pp. 288-289.

The Isma'ílis

was shattered, they still continued to exist, and, from time to time, to reappear on the pages of Persian history. In the volume of the Násikhul'-Tawárikh dealing with the reigning Qájár dynasty several references to them occur. The first,

Sháh Khalílu-
'lláh killed at Yazd in 1232/
1817.

under the year 1232/1817, refers to the death of the then head of the sect Sháh Khalílu'lláh, the son of Sayyid Abu'l-Hasan Khán, at Yazd.

Under the Zand dynasty Abu'l-Hasan had been governor of Kirmán, whence on his dismissal he retired to the Mahallát of Qum. There he received tribute from his numerous followers in India and Central Asia, who, it is recorded, if unable to bring their offerings in person, used to throw them into the sea, believing that they would thus be conveyed into the hands of their Imám; but, when possible, used to visit him in his abode and deem it an honour to render him personal service, even of the most menial kind. His son, Sháh Khalílu'lláh, transferred his abode to Yazd, but after residing there two years he was killed in the course of a quarrel which had arisen between some of his followers and the Muslim citizens of Yazd, instigated by a certain Mullá Husayn. The Sháh punished the perpetrators of this outrage, gave one of his daughters in marriage to Áqá Khán, the son and successor of the late Imám of the Isma'ílis, and made him governor of Qum and the surrounding districts (Mahallát).

We next hear of this Áqá Khán in 1255/1839 or 1256/1840³, when, apparently in consequence of the arrogant

¹ Lit. Hist. of Persia, i, pp. 391-415, etc.

² Ibid., ii, pp. 190-211; 453-460.

³ R. G. Watson in his History of Persia gives a fairly full account of the insurrection (pp. 331-334).

behaviour of Hájjí 'Abdu'l-Muhammád-i-Mahallátí, instigated by the minister Hájjí Mírzá Áqásí, he rebelled against Muhammad Sháh and occupied the citadel of Bám, but was obliged to surrender to Fírúz Mírzá, then governor of Kirmán, who pardoned him and sent him to Tíhrán. Here he was well received by Hájjí Mírzá Áqásí and was presently allowed to return to his former government in the district of Qum. Having sent his family and possessions to Karbalá by way of Baghdád, so as to leave himself free and unencumbered, he began to buy swift and strong horses and to recruit brave and devoted soldiers, and when his preparations were completed he set out across the deserts and open country towards Kirmán, pretending that he was proceeding to Mecca by way of Bandar-i-'Abbás, and that the government of Kirmán had been conferred upon him. Prince Bahman Mírzá Baha'u'd-Dawla, being apprised of his intentions, pursued and overtook him as he was making for Shahr-i-Bábak and Sírfán, and a skirmish took place between the two parties in which eight of the Prince's soldiers and sixteen of the Áqá Khán's men were killed. After a second and fiercer battle the Áqá Khán was defeated and fled to Lár, whence he ultimately escaped to India, where his descendant, the present Áqá Khán¹, lives a wealthy and spacious life at Bombay when not engaged in his frequent and extensive travels.

Revolt of the Áqá Khán in
A.D. 1839 or 1840.

He is defeated by Bahman Mírzá
and flees by way of Lár to India.

The rise of the Bábí sect or religion, which began in the later years of Muhammad Sháh's reign, was an event of the most far-reaching significance and importance, and forms

¹ Sulṭán Muḥammad Sháh, G C I E, etc, born in 1875. See Who's Who, s v "Aga Khan," and the conclusion of Stanislas Guyard's entertaining article Un Grand Maître des Assassins au temps de Saladin in the Journal Asiatique for 1877.

the subject of an extensive literature¹, not only in Persian and Arabic, but in English, French, German, Russian and other European languages. Since it would be impossible to give an adequate account of its eventful history and extensive developments in this volume, and since ample materials for its study are already available even in English (indeed, thanks to the success attained by its missionaries in America, especially in English), no attempt at recapitulation will be made here. Sayyid 'Alí Muḥammad the Báb has himself (in the Persian Bayán) fixed the date of his "Manifestation" (Zuhúr) as May 23, 1844 (5 Jumáda i, 1260), just a thousand years after the disappearance or "Occultation" (Ghaybat) of the Twelfth Imám, or Imám Mahdí, to whom he claimed to be the "Gate" (Báb). Neither the idea nor the expression was new: the Imám Mahdí had four successive "Gates" (Ab-wáb) by means of whom, during the "Lesser Occultation" (Ghaybat-i-Ṣughrá), he maintained communication with his followers; and the "Perfect Shí'a" (Shí'a-i-Kámil) of the Shaykhí School, in which the Báb pursued his theological studies, connoted much the same idea of an Intermediary (Wásīṭa), or Channel of Grace, between the Concealed Imám and his faithful people. Later the Báb "went higher" (bálá-tar raft), to use the expression of his followers, and claimed to be first the "Supreme Point" (Nuqṭa-i-A'lá), or "Point of Explanation" (Nuqṭa-i-Bayán), then the Qá'im ("He who is to arise" of the House of the Prophet), then the Inaugurator of a new Dispensation, and lastly an actual Divine Manifestation or Incarnation. Some of his followers went even further, calling themselves Gods and him a

The Bábí movement.

¹ For a bibliography of the literature to 1889 see my Traveller's Narrative written to illustrate the Episode of the Báb (Cambridge, 1891), vol. ii, pp. 173-211; and for the subsequent literature, my Materials for the Study of the Bábí Religion (Cambridge, 1918), pp. 175-243.

"Creator of Gods" (Khudd-ádfartu) while one of them went so far as to write of Bahá'u'lláh¹:

خلق گویند خدائی و من اندر غضب آیم²

برده بر داشته میسند بحود ننگِ خدائی³

"Men say Thou art God, and I am moved to anger Raise the veil, and submit no longer to the shame of Godhead!"

Although the Bábí movement led to much bloodshed, this took place almost entirely after the death of Muhammad Sháh, which happened on September 5, 1848, though already the Báb was a prisoner in the fortress of Máku in the extreme N.W. of Persia, while in Khurásán, Mázandarán and elsewhere armed bands of his followers roamed the country proclaiming the Advent of the expected Mahdí and the inauguration of the Reign of the Saints, and threatening those sanguinary encounters between themselves and their opponents which were at once precipitated by the King's death and the ensuing dislocation and confusion.

Dark indeed were the horizons at the beginning of the new reign. The Walt'-ahd, or Crown Prince, Násiru'd-Dín, was absent at Tabriz, the seat of his government, at the time of his father's death, and until he could reach Tihrán his mother, the Mahd-i-Ulyá, assumed control of affairs. Hájjí Mírzá Áqásí, whose unpopularity was extreme, not only ceased to act as Prime Minister, but had to flee for his life, and took refuge in the Shrine of Sháh 'Abdu'l-'Azím⁴. Disturbances broke out in the capital itself, and more serious revolts in Burújird, Kirmánsháh, Kurdistán, Shíráz, Kirmán, Yazd and Khurásán. The young Sháh, then only seventeen years of age⁵, finally 1848-1896).

Násiru'd-Dín
Sháh (A.D.

¹ Cited in the Hasht Bihasht, f. 244^a of my MS. The verse is ascribed to Nabíl of Zarand, who killed himself at 'Akká on Bahá'u'lláh's death on May 28, 1892.

² See R. G. Watson's History of Persia, pp. 357-8.

³ He was born on July 17, 1831.

reached the capital on October 20, 1848, was crowned the same night, and immediately appointed as his Prime Minister

Mírzá Taqí Khán, better known as the Amír-i-Nizám, who, notwithstanding his lowly origin

Mírzá Taqí Khán
Amír-i-Nizám.

(his father was originally cook to the Qā'im-maqām)¹, was one of the greatest men and most honest, capable and intelligent ministers produced by Persia in modern times. "The race of modern Persians," exclaims Watson² enthusiastically, "cannot be said to be altogether effete, since so recently it has been able to produce a man such as was the Amír-i-Nizám"; and the Hon. Robert Curzon, in his Armenia and Erzeroum, has described him as "beyond all comparison the most interesting personage amongst the commissioners of Turkey, Persia, Russia and Great Britain who were then assembled at Erzeroum." In the brief period of three years during which he held the high office of Prime Minister he did much for Persia, but the bright promise of his career was too soon darkened by the envy and malice of his rivals. The tragic circumstances

Tragic death of Mírzá Taqí
Khán, Jan. 9, 1852.

of his violent and cruel death in his exile at the beautiful palace of Fín near Káshán are too well known to need repetition³, but the admirable fidelity of his wife, the Sháh's only sister, cannot be passed over in silence. "No princess educated in a Christian court," says Watson⁴, "and accustomed to the contemplation of the brightest example of conjugal virtues that the history of the world has recorded could have shown more tenderness and devotion than did the sister of the Sháh of Persia towards her unfortunate husband." Her untiring vigilance was, however, finally tricked and out-

¹ Some account of the two celebrated men, father and son, who bore this title will be found in the account of modern prose-writers of note in Part iii of this volume. See p. 147 supra, ad calc.

² See Watson's History, p. 264.

³ Ibid., pp. 398-406.

⁴ Ibid., p. 403.

witted by the infamous Hájji 'Alí Khán Hájibū'd-Dawla, who owed so much to the minister whose life he succeeded in bringing to an end on January 9, 1852.

The Bábís, however, had no cause to love Mírzá Taqí Khán, whose death they had already striven to compass, and whose ultimate fate was regarded by them as a signal instance of Divine retribution, since, apart from other measures which he had taken

Bábí risings
of 1847-1850

against them, he was responsible for the execution of the Báb himself at Tabríz on July 9, 1850. The Báb indeed, helpless prisoner that he was, had kindled a flame which proved inextinguishable, and which especially illumines with a lurid glow the first four years of Násiru'd-Dín Shah's reign. The story of the almost incredible martial achievements of the Bábís at Shaykh Tabarsí in Mázandarán, at Zanján, Yazd, Nayríz and elsewhere during the years 1849-

Gobineau

1850 will never be more graphically told than by the Comte de Gobineau, who in his incomparable book Les Religions et les Philosophes dans l'Asie Centrale combines wit, sympathy and insight in an extraordinary degree. I personally owe more to this book than to any other book about Persia, since to it, not less than to an equally fortunate and fortuitous meeting in Isfahán, I am indebted for that unravelling of Bábí doctrine and history which first won for me a reputation in Oriental scholarship. Gobineau was for some time a "prophet without honour in his own country," but, while France long neglected him, Germany produced a "Gobineau Vereinigung"¹ and several important works² on his life and writings. The militant phase of Bábíism culminated in the attempted assassination of Náṣiru'd-Dín Sháh by three members of the sect on August 15, 1852, and the frightful persecution which followed, wherein twenty-eight more or less prominent Bábís, including the beautiful and talented poetess Qurratu'l-'Ayn, suffered death with horrible tortures¹. Most of the leading Bábís who survived emigrated or were exiled to Baghdád, and thenceforth, though the sect continued to increase in Persia, the centre of its activity, whether at Baghdád, Adrianople, Cyprus or Acre, lay beyond the frontiers of Persia.

¹ Founded in 1894

² I possess two by Ludwig Schemann, Eine Biographie und Quellen und Untersuchungen (Strassburg, 1913 and 1914). The monthly review Europe for October, 1923 (No. 7), has published a very important Numéro consacré au Comte de Gobineau, which contains (pp. 116-126) an excellent article by M. Vladimir Minorsky entitled Gobineau et la Perse, followed (pp. 127-141) by a list of his published and unpublished

It is unnecessary here to discuss the causes and course of the short Anglo-Persian War of 1856-7, brought about by the seizure of Herát by the Persians. It began with the occupation by the British of the island of Khárák in the Persian Gulf on December 4, 1856, and was officially terminated by the Treaty of Peace signed at Paris on March 4, 1857, by Lord Cowley and Farrukh Khán, though, owing to the slowness of communications at that time, hostilities actually continued for another month. They did not end a moment too soon for Great Britain, for almost before the ratifications were exchanged the Indian Mutiny broke out. The need then experienced for better communications between England and India led in 1864 to the introduction into Persia of the telegraph, to which further extension was given in 1870 and 1872, and this, as pointed out by Sir Percy Molesworth Sykes (whose *History of Persia*² is almost the only book which gives a continuous works, a biography, and an account of Le mouvement Gobiniste en Allemagne et en France.

¹ See my Traveller's Narrative, vol. ii, pp. 326-334, and Materials for the Study of the Bábí Religion, pp. 265-271.

² I refer to the second and enlarged edition, published in 1921, in which (on p. 526 of vol. ii) March of that year is mentioned as the current date at the time of writing.

and coherent narrative of events from 1857 to 1921), had far-reaching reactions¹, and was one of the factors in the modernization of Persia. Others were the extension of the Press (first introduced into Tabriz by 'Abbás Mírzá about A.D. 1816) and consequent wider diffusion of literature, the slow growth of journalism since 1851² down to its enormous expansion during the Revolution of 1906-1911 and again after the Russian collapse; the foundation of the Dáru'l-Funún, or Polytechnic College, at Tíhrán in 1851, and the introduction of European science and instruction, and, in a lesser degree, the Sháh's three journeys to Europe in 1873, 1878 and 1889, though it is doubtful whether he or his attendants derived more advantage from what they saw in the course of their peregrinations than Persian literature did from his accounts of his experiences.

Násiru'd-Dín Sháh was only a little over seventeen years of age when he was crowned on the 24th of Dhu'l-Qa'da, 1264 (20 October, 1848), and would have entered upon the fiftieth year of his reign on the same date of the Muhammadan year A H 1313, corresponding to May 5, 1896. Four days earlier, however, when all the preparations for the celebration of his Jubilee were completed, he was shot dead by Mírzá Ridá of Kírmán, a disciple of that turbulent spirit Sayyid Jamálu'd-Dín al-Afghán, in the Shrine of Sháh 'Abdu'l-'Azím a few miles south of Tíhrán. Of the events which led up to this catastrophe and their significance I have treated fully in my History of the Persian Revolution of 1905-1909, and will not attempt to epitomize here matters which are fully discussed there, and which it would be a waste of space to

Assassination of
Násiru'd-Dín
Sháh on the eve of his Jubilee,
May 1 1896

¹ Op cit, II, p 369

² See p 10 of my Press and Poetry in Modern Persia, where the whole subject is fully discussed recapitulate. The seeds of the Revolution were sown, and even began to germinate, about the time of the Sháh's third and last visit to Europe, fruitful in ill-advised concessions, which (especially the Tobacco concession of 1890) were a potent factor in stimulating the political discontents which found their first open expression in the Tobacco-riots of 1891 and culminated in the Revolution of 1905. If we ignore the external relations of Persia with foreign Powers, especially England and Russia, which form the principal topic of such political histories as that of Sir Percy Molesworth Sykes, we may say, broadly speaking, that of the long reign of Násiru'd-Dín Sháh the first four years (A.D. 1848-52) were notable for the religious fermentation caused by the Bábís, and the last six years (A.D. 1890-6) for the political fermentation which brought about the Revolution in the following reign; while the intervening period was, outwardly at any rate, one of comparative peace and tranquillity. It was my good fortune to visit Persia in 1887-8 towards the end of this period, and, while enjoying the remarkable security which then prevailed in the country, to see almost the last of what may fairly be called mediaeval Persia. To this security I hardly did justice in the narrative of my travels¹ which I wrote soon after my return, for I hardly realized then how few and short were the periods, either before or after my visit, when a young foreigner, without any official position or protection, could traverse the country from North-West to South-East and from North to South, attended only by his Persian servant and his muleteers, not only without danger, but practically without the occurrence of a single disagreeable incident. And if this

Germ of the Revolution.

Momentous years at the beginning and end of Násiru'd-Dín
Sháh's reign.

Persia in 1887-8.

¹ A Year amongst the Persians (London: A. & C. Black, 1893). This book has long been out of print and is now very scarce.

remarkable security, which compared favourably with that of many European countries, had originally been brought about by frightful exemplary punishments of robbers and ill-doers, these were no longer in evidence, and during the whole of my time in Persia I not only never witnessed an execution or a bastinado, but never heard of a specific case of either in any place where I stayed, though the ghastly pillars of mortar with protruding human bones outside the gates of Shíráz still bore witness to the stern rule of the Sháh's uncle Farhád Mírzá, Mu'tamadü'd-Dawla, whom I met only in the capacity of a courtly and learned bibliophile. Yet withal the atmosphere was, as I have said, mediaeval: politics and progress were hardly mentioned, and the talk turned mostly on mysticism, metaphysics and religion; the most burning political questions were those connected with the successors of the Prophet Muḥammad in the seventh century of our era; only a languid interest in external affairs was aroused by the occasional appearance of the official journals Írán and Ittilâ, or the more exciting Akhbar published in Constantinople; while at Kirmán one post a week maintained communication with the outer world. How remote does all this seem from the turmoil of 1891, the raging storms of 1905-11, the deadly paralysis of the Russian terror which began on Christmas Day in the year last mentioned, and then the Great War, when Persia became the cockpit of three foreign armies and the field of endless intrigues. The downfall of Russian Imperialism freed her from the nightmare of a century, and seemed to her to avenge the desecration of the holy shrine of Mashhad in April, 1912, while the collapse of the Anglo-Persian Agreement and consequent withdrawal of British troops and advisers has left her for the time being to her own devices, to make or mar her future as she can and will.

Stormy later years (1891 onwards).

Since Náṣiru'd-Dín fell a victim to the assassin's pistol the throne of Persia has been occupied by his son Muẓaffaru'd-Dín (1896-1907), who granted the Constitution; his grandson

Náṣiru'd-Dín
Sháh's successors.

Muḥammad 'Alí, who endeavoured to destroy it; who was deposed by the victorious Nationalists on July 16, 1909, and who is still living in retirement in the neighbourhood of Constantinople; and his great-grandson Sulṭán Aḥmad Sháh the reigning monarch. It would be premature to discuss the reign and character of the last, while the very dissimilar characters of his father and grandfather I have endeavoured to depict in my History of the Persian Revolution. But since the death of Náṣiru'd-Dín Sháh twenty-seven years ago it may truly be said that the centre of interest has shifted from the king to the people of Persia, nor, so far as we can foresee the future, is it likely that we shall see another Isma'íl, another Nádir, or (which God forbid!) another Áqá Muḥammad Khán.

PART II.

PERSIAN VERSE
DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES

CHAPTER V.

SOME GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS ON THE LATER AND ESPECIALLY THE RELIGIOUS POETRY OF THE PERSIANS

Four hundred years ago the Persian language (or at any rate the written language, for no doubt fresh colloquialisms and slang may have arisen during this period) was to all intents and purposes the same as it is to day, while such new literary forms as exist go no further back, as a rule, than the middle of the nineteenth century, that is to say than the accession of Násiru'd-Dín Sháh, whose reign (A.D. 1848-1896) might not inappropriately be called the Persian Victorian¹ Era. In the three previous volumes of this book each historical chapter has been immediately followed by a chapter dealing with the literature of that period, but in this volume, for the reason just given, it appeared unnecessary to break the sequence of events in this way, and to be preferable to devote the first part of the volume to a brief historical sketch of the whole period, and the second and third parts to a consideration of the literature in verse and prose, arranged according to categories.

How to arrange these categories is a problem which has cost me a good deal of thought. Nearly all those who have written on Persian literature have paid an amount of attention which I regard as excessive and disproportionate to poetry and belles-lettres, and have almost entirely ignored the plainer but more positive fields of history, biography, theology, philosophy and the ancient sciences. If we understand literature in the narrower sense as denoting those writings only, whether poetry or prose, which have artistic form, there is, no doubt, some justification for this view; but not if we take it in the wider sense of the manifestation in writing of a nation's mind and intellectual activities. Still, in deference to the prevalent view, we may begin this general survey of the recent literature of Persia with some consideration of its poetry.

¹ Násiru'd-Dín, indeed, approximately means "Victor" or "Defender of the Faith."

Here we have to distinguish some half-dozen categories of verse, namely (1) the classical poetry; (2) occasional or topical verse; (3) religious and devotional verse, from the formal marthiyas, or threnodies, of great poets like Muḥtasham of Káshán to the simple popular poems on the sufferings of the Imáms recited at the Ta'ziyas, or mournings, of the month of Muḥarram; (4) the scanty but sometimes very spirited verses composed by the Bábis since about 1850, which should be regarded as a special subdivision of the class last mentioned; (5) the ballads or tasnifs sung by professional minstrels, of which it is hard to trace the origin or antiquity; (6) the quite modern political verse which has arisen since the Revolution of 1906, and which I have already discussed in some detail in another work¹. In this chapter I shall deal chiefly with the religious verse, leaving the consideration of the secular poetry to the two succeeding chapters.

Categories of
Persian verse.

(1) The Classical Poetry.

Alike in form and matter the classical poetry of Persia has been stereotyped for at least five or six centuries, so that, except for such references to events or persons as may indicate the date of composition, it is hardly possible, after reading a qaṣída (elegy), ghazal (ode), or rubá'í (quatrain), to guess whether it was composed by a contemporary of Jámí (d. A.H. 1492)

Later poetry of the classical type.

¹ The Press and Poetry of Modern Persia (Cambridge, 1914).

or by some quite recent poet, such as Qíání. Of the extremely conventional character of this poetry I have spoken in a previous volume¹, and of Ibn Khaldun's doctrine "that the Art of composing in verse or prose is concerned only with words, not with ideas". Hence, even in the most recent poetry of this type, we very seldom find any allusion to such modern inventions as tea drinking, tobacco smoking, railways, telegraphs or newspapers², indeed several of the greatest modern poets, such as Qíání, Díwari and the like, have chiefly shown their originality by reviving certain forms of verse like the *musannat*³ which had fallen into disuse since the eleventh or twelfth century.

Perhaps the statement with which the above paragraph opens is too sweeping and requires some qualification, for in some of the later Persian poets Indian and Turkish critics do profess to discover a certain originality (idza gúf) marking an epoch in the development of the art, and the rise of a new school. The Persians themselves are not addicted to literary criticism, perhaps because, just as people only discuss their health when they are beginning to lose it, so those only indulge in meticulous literary criticism who are no longer able, or have never been able to produce good literature. According to Gibb⁴, Jámí and Mír 'Alí Shír Nawái 'Urfí of Shíráz (d. 999/1590-1) and the Indian Faydí (Feyzí, d. 1004/1595-6) and lastly Sá'ib of Isfahán (d. 1080/1669-70) were successively the chief foreign influences on the development of Ottoman Turkish poetry, and a great deal has been written about them by the Turkish critics. The best and fullest

Literary criticism
neglected by the Persians.

¹ List Hist of Persia II, pp. 83-9

² Cf Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. IV, p. 4. Such allusions will, however, be found in the poem by Na'ím quoted in the latter part of this chapter, though in general it follows the orthodox qasída form.

³ List Hist of Persia, II, pp. 41-2

⁴ History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. III pp. 247-48

critical estimate of the leading Persian poets from the earliest times down to the latter part of the seventeenth century is, however, so far as I can judge, a work written (most unfortunately) in the Urdú or Hindustání language, the Shi'ru'l-'Ajam ("Poetry of the Persians") of that eminent scholar Shibli Nu'mání. The third volume of this work, composed in 1324-5/1906-7, deals with seven Persian poets of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries of our era, namely Fighání (d. 925/1519), Faydí (d. 1004/1595-6), 'Urfí (d. 999/1590-1), Nazírí (d. 1021/1612-3), Tálíb-i-Ámulí (d. 1036/1626-7), Şá'ib (d. 1080/1669-1670), and Abú Tálíb Kalím (d. 1061/1651). All these were Persians, attracted to India by the liberal patronage of the Moghul Court, except Faydí, whom Shibli regards as the only Indian poet except Amír Khusraw who could produce Persian verse which might pass for that of a born Persian. 'Urfí and Şá'ib were the most notable of these seven, but even they enjoy a greater repute in India and Turkey than in their own country¹. The explanation of this fact offered by some Persians of my acquaintance is that they are easily understood and therefore popular with foreigners, who often find the more subtle poetry admired in Persia beyond their powers of comprehension. I must confess with shame that in this case my taste agrees with the foreigners, and that I find Şá'ib especially attractive, both on account of his simplicity of style and his skill in the figures entitled husn-i-ta'líl or "poetical aetiology," and irsálu'l-mathal or "proverbial commission²." Nearly forty years ago (in 1885) I read through the Persian portion of that volume of the great trilingual anthology entitled *Kharábat*³ which deals with the lyrical

¹ Ridá-qulí Khán explicitly says of both of them that their style is not approved by modern Persians.

² See Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. i, pp. 113-14.

³ Compiled by Ziyá (Diyá) Pasha, and published in three volumes at Constantinople in 1291-2/1874-5.

verse of the Arabs, Turks and Persians, both odes and isolated verses, and copied into a note-book which now lies before me those which pleased me most, irrespective of authorship; and, though many of the 443 fragments and isolated verses which I selected are anonymous, more than one-tenth of the total (45) are by Šá'ib.

India, at all events, thanks to the generous patronage of Humáyún, Akbar, and their successors down to that gloomy zealot Awrangzib, and of their great nobles, such as Bayram Khán-Khánán and his son 'Abdu'r-Rahím, who succeeded to the title after his father's assassination about A.D. 1561, continued during the greater part of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries to attract a great number of the most talented Persian poets, who found there an appreciation which was withheld from them in their own country. Badá'uní¹ enumerates about one hundred and seventy, most of whom were of Persian descent though some of them were born in India. Shiblí² gives a list of fifty-one who came to India from Persia in Akbar's time and were received at court, and a long list is also given by Sprenger³. Shiblí quotes numerous verses showing how widely diffused amongst Persian poets was the desire to try their fortune in India⁴.

Thus Šá'ib says -

همچو عزمِ سفرِ هند که در هر دل هست

رقصِ سودای تو در هیچ سری نیست که نیست

"There is no head wherein desire for thee danceth not,
Even as the determination to visit India is in every heart"

¹ Muntakhabu't-Tawárikh (Calcutta, 1869), vol. III, pp. 170-390

² Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, vol. III, p. 5

³ Catalogue of the Library of the King of Oude, vol. I, pp. 55-65

⁴ Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, vol. III, p. 10

And Abú Tálíb Kalím says :

اسیرِ هندم و زین رفتنِ بیجا پشیمانم
 کجا خواهد رساندن پُرفشانی مُرغِ بملِ را
 بایران میرود نالانِ کلیم از شوقِ همراهان
 بپای دیگران همچون جرس طی کرده منزل را
 ز شوقِ هند زان سان چشمِ حسرت بر قفا دارم
 که رو همِ گر براه آرم نمی بینم مقابل را

"I am the captive of India, and I regret this misplaced journey :
 Whither can the feather-flutterings of the dying bird¹ convey it?
 Kalím goes lamenting to Persia [dragged thither] by the eagerness of his fellow-travellers,
 Like the camel-bell which traverses the stage on the feet of others.
 Through longing for India I turn my regretful eyes backwards in such fashion
 That, even if I set my face to the road, I do not see what confronts me."

So also 'Alí-qulí Salím says :

نیست در ایران زمین سامانِ تحصیلِ کمال
 تا نیامد سوی هندستان حنا رنگین نشد
 "There exist not in Persia the means of acquiring perfection :
 Henna does not develop its colour until it comes to India."

The Persian dervish-poet Rasmi, commemorating the Khán-Khánán's liberal patronage of poets, says²:

ز یمنِ مدح تو آن نکته سنج شیرازی
 رسید صیت کمالش بروم ز خاور
 بطرز تازه ز مدح تو آشنا گردید
 چو روی خوب که یابد ز ماشطه زیور

¹ When a Muslim kills a bird for food by cutting its throat, he must pronounce the formula Bismi'lláh ("In the Name of God") over it. Such a bird, in its dying struggles on the ground, is called Murgh-i-Bismil, or Nim-bismil.

² Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, vol. iii, p. 13.

ز لُفْضِ نامِ تو فِیصی کُرفت چوں حَسرو،
 بتبع همدی اقلیمِ سعده را یَکسر،
 ز روبرو چینی حواست نظیری شاعر،
 رسیده است نحاشی که شاعران دگر،
 کسند بهر مدحش قصیده اشا،
 که حوین رشک چکد از دلِ سخن پرور،
 سوادِ شعرِ شکیبی چو کُحلِ صفاهان،
 تحفه سوی حراسان برد اهلِ نظر،
 و مدحتِ تو حیاتی حیاتِ دیگر یافت،
 بلی مقوی طبعِ عرص بود جوهر،
 حدیثِ نوعی و کفوی باں چه سازمَن،
 چو زنده اند بهدج تو تا دمِ محشر،
 ر نعمتِ تو نه نوعی رسید آن مایه، که یافت میر معزی ز نعمتِ سحر،

"Through auspicious praise of thee the fame of the perfection of that subtle singer of Shíráz¹ reached from the East to Rum²

In praising thee he became conversant with a new style, like the fair face which gains adornment from the tire woman

By the grace (fayá) of thy name Faydí, like [his predecessor]
 Khusraw³, annexed the Seven Climes from end to end with the Indian sword

By gathering crumbs from thy table Nazírf the poet hath attained a rank such that other poets

Compose such elegies in his praise that blood drips in envy from the heart of the singer

Men of discernment carry as a gift to Khurásán, like the collyrium of Isfahán copies of Shakíbf's verses

By praising thee Hayátí found fresh life (hayát) yea, the substance must needs strengthen the nature of the accident

¹ I.e. 'Urfi as Shiblí notes

² I.e. Turkey See above, p 80, n 5

³ Cf p 164 supra

How can I tell the tale of Naw'í and Kufwí, since by their praise of thee they will live until the Resurrection Dawn?

Such measure of thy favour accrued to Naw'í as Amír Mu'izzí received from the favour of Sanjar."

These poets of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries produced what the late Professor Ethé has happily termed the "Indian summer" of Persian poetry, and they had of course a host of Indian imitators and successors so long as Persian continued to be the polite language of India. These last, who were at best skilful manipulators of a foreign idiom, I do not propose to notice; and even of the genuine Persian poets, whether sojourners in India or residents in their own country, only a limited number of the most eminent can be discussed in these pages. The eighteenth century of our era, especially the troubled period intervening between the fall of the Şafawí and the rise of the Qájár dynasties (A.D. 1722-1795), was the poorest in literary achievement; after that there is a notable revival, and several poets of the nineteenth century, Qá'ání, Yaghmá, Furúghí and Wişál and his family, can challenge comparison with any save the very greatest of their predecessors.

The eighteenth century a barren period.

(2) Occasional or Topical Verse.

Some of the most interesting pieces of poetry are those composed, not necessarily by professional poets, for some special purpose or some particular occasion. These are not so often to be found in the regular díwáns of verse as in the pages of contemporary histories. The following from the unpublished Aḥsanu't-Tawárikh may serve as specimens.

Examples of occasional or topical verse.

In the year 961/1553-4 died three Indian kings, Maḥmúd III of Gujerát, Islám Sháh son of Shír Sháh the Afghán of Dihlí, and Nizámu'l-Mulk of the Deccan. This coincidence, with the date, is commemorated in the following verses:

سه خسروا قران آمد بیک سال

که هند ار عدلش دار آلاماں بود

یکی محمود شاهشاه گجرات

که همچون دولت خود نو حواں بود

دوم اسلام شه سلطان دهلی

که در هندوستان صاحب قران بود

سیم آمد نظام الملک بحری

که در ملک دکن خسرو نشان بود

ز من تاریخ فوت آن سه خسرو

چه میپرسی روال خسرواں بود

"In one year the [fatal] conjunction came to three princes by whose justice India was the Abode of Security

One was Mahmūd¹, the monarch of Gujerāt, who was youthful as his own fortune

The second was Islām Shāh², King of Dīhlī, who was in India the lord of a fortunate conjunction

The third was the Nizām al-Mulk³ i Bahrf, who ruled in royal state in the kingdom of the Deccan

Why dost thou ask of me the date of the death of these three Kings?

It was 'the decline of the kings' (961=زوال خسرواں)"

The following verses by Mawlānā Qāsim commemorate the death of Humāyūn in the succeeding year (962/1554-5)

همایون پادشاه ملک معنی

ندارد کس چو او شاهشهی یاد

ز نام قصر خود افتاد ناگاه

وزو عمر گرامی رفت بر باد

پی تاریخ او قاسم رقم رد

همایون پادشاه ار نام افتاد

"Humāyun, king of the realm of the Ideal, none can recall a monarch like him

¹ See S Lane Poole's Mohammadan Dynasties, p 313

² Ibid, pp 300 and 303

³ Ibid, p 320 I doubt if Bahrf is a correct reading it should perhaps be Burhān, the proper name of the second of the Nizām Shāhs of Ahmadnagar, who reigned from 914 to 961 A H (1508-1553 A D)

Suddenly he fell from the roof of his palace; precious life departed from him on the winds.

Qásim¹ thus ciphered the date of his death: 'King Humáyún fell from the roof'."

The next piece, denouncing the people of Qazwín, is by the poet Ḥayratí, who died from a fall at Káshán in 961/1553-4:

وقتِ آن آمد که آساید سپهرِ بی مدار،
 چون زمین در سایهات ای سایه پروردگار،
 پادشاهان مدّت نه ماه شد کین نا توان،
 مانده در قزوین خراب و خسته و مجروح و زار،
 یاقتم رسمِ تسنّن در وضع و در شریف،
 دیدم آثارِ تخرّج در صغار و در کبار،
 در مقابرِ پای شُسته از فقیر و از غنی،
 در مساجد دست بسته از یمین و از یسار،
 در زمانِ چون تو شاهی دست بستن در نماز،
 هست کاری دست بسته ای شهِ عالی تبار،
 قاضی این ملک نسلِ خالد بن الولید،
 مفتی این شهر فرزندِ سعیدِ نابکار،
 کشته گردیده ز تیغِ شاهِ غازی هر دورا،
 هم برادر هم پدر هم یار هم خویش و تبار،
 خود بفرما ای شهِ دانا که اکنون این گروه،
 داعیِ خصمند یا مولای شاهِ کامکار،
 قتل عامی گر نباشد قتلِ خاصی میتوان،
 خاصه از بهرِ رضای حضرت پروردگار،

¹ My text has gáhi, which I have ventured to emend to Qásim. For the particulars of Humáyún's death, see Erskine's History of India under the first two sovereigns of the House of Taimúr, Baber and Humáyún (London, 1854), vol. ii, pp. 527-8. The chronogram is unusually natural, simple and appropriate.

یستند ایها رعایائی که باشد قتلشان

موجب تحفیع مال و ماسع حرج دیار

بلکه هر يك ملعی از مال دیوان میخورید

سر بسر صاحب سوزگالد هم ادرار دار

"The time has come when the pivotless sphere, like the earth, should rest under thy shadow, O Shadow of God"

O King! It is a period of nine months that this helpless one hath remained in Qazwín ruined, weary, wounded and wretched

I found the practices of the Sunnis in humble and noble alike I saw the signs of schism in small and great

Poor and rich with washed feet at the Tombs hands clasped in the mosques to right and to left.

In the time of a King like thee to clasp the hands in prayer is an underhand action, O King of lofty lineage!

The Judge of this Kingdom is of the race of Khálid ibnu'l Walíd, the Mufti of this city is the son of the worthless Sa'íd

By the sword of the victorious King the brother, father, friend, kinsman and family of both have been slain together

Say thyself, O wise King, whether now this group are the propagandists of the enemy, or the clients of the victorious King

If there cannot be a public massacre one might [at least contrive] a private massacre for the special satisfaction of the Divine Majesty

These are not subjects whose slaughter would cause a reduction of the revenue or would check the spending power of the country,

Nay, rather each one of them consumes a quantity of the wealth of the exchequer, for they are all fief holders and pensioners"

The worst of these "occasional verses" is that we seldom know enough of the circumstances under which they were composed to enable us fully to understand all the allusions contained in them. What, for example, had the people of Qazwín done to the author of the above verses to arouse in him such bitter anger? Who were the Qádí and the Mufti whom he particularly denounces? How did their relatives come to be slain by the King, and of what enemy were they the propagandists? The fact that we do not know at what date the verses were composed, and whether in the reign of Sháh Ṭahmásp or of his father and predecessor Sháh Isma'íl, makes it harder to discover the answers to these questions, but it is interesting to learn how prevalent were the Sunní doctrines in Qazwín at the time when they were written. Of course in the case of the modern topical verses which abounded in the newspapers of the Revolutionary Period (A.D. 1906-1911 especially) the allusions can be much more easily understood.

(3) Religious and Devotional Verse.

Of the numerous poets of the Ṣafawí period who devoted their talents to the celebration of the virtues and sufferings of the Imáms, Muḥtasham of Káshán (died 996/1588) is the most eminent. In his youth he wrote erotic verse, but in later life he seems to have consecrated his genius almost entirely to the service of religion. Riḍá-qulí Khán in his Majma'u'l-Fuṣahá (vol. ii, pp. 36-8) gives specimens of both styles, of which we are here concerned only with the second. The author of the *Ta'ríkh-i-'Álam-árá-yi-'Abbásí*¹ in his account of the chief poets of Sháh Ṭahmásp's reign states that though in earlier life that king enjoyed and cultivated the society of poets, in his later years his increasing austerity and deference to the views of the theologians led him to regard them with disfavour as latitudinarians (wast'u'l-mashráb), so that when Muḥtasham, hoping for a suitable reward, sent him two eloquent panegyrics, one in his praise and the other in praise of the Princess Parí-Khán Khánúm, he received nothing, the Sháh remarking that poetry written in praise of kings and princes was sure to consist largely of lies and exaggerations, according to the

Religious poetry
of Muḥtasham
and his imitators.

Indifference of the Ṣafawí kings to panegyric.

¹ ff. 138^a-139^b of my MS. marked H. 13. Unfortunately this very important history has never been published.

well-known Arabic saying, "The best poetry is that which contains most falsehoods," but that, since it was impossible to exaggerate the virtues of the Prophet and the Imáms, the poet could safely exert his talents to the full, and in addition would have the satisfaction of looking for a heavenly instead of an earthly reward. Thereupon Muhtasham composed his celebrated haft-band, or poem of seven-verse strophes, in praise of the Imáms, and this time was duly and amply rewarded, whereupon many other poets followed his example, so that in a comparatively short time some fifty or sixty such haft bands were produced. This poem is cited in most of the anthologies which include Muhtasham, but most fully in the *Kharabat*¹ of Diyá (Ziyá) Pasha (vol II, pp 197-200). In this fullest form it comprises twelve strophes each consisting of seven verses, and each concluding with an additional verse in a different rhyme, thus comprising in all ninety-six verses. The language is extraordinarily simple and direct, devoid of those rhetorical artifices and verbal conceits which many Europeans find so irritating, and shows true pathos and religious feeling. I wish that space were available to quote the whole poem, the prototype of so many others of a similar character, but I must content myself with citing three of the twelve strophes (the fourth, fifth and sixth)

Muhtasham's celebrated
Haft band

بر حوائِ عمر چو عالمیای را صلا ردید،
اَوَّل صلا سلسلهٔ اِسا ردید،

بوت ناولیا چو رسید آسمان طمید،

ر آن صریتی که بر سر شیر خدا ردید،

پس آتشی را حگِرِ الماس رِرها،

افروختند و بر حسن محتمل ردید،

¹ This excellent anthology of Arabic, Persian and Turkish poetry was printed in three volumes in Constantinople in A H 1291-2 (A D 1874-5). See p 164, n 3 supra

و آنکه سرادقیکه مَلَك محرمش نبود،
کنندند از مدینه و در کربلا زدند،
وز تیشه ستیزه در آن دشت کوفیان،
بس نخلها ز گلشنِ آلِ عبا زدند،
بس ضربتی گزان جگرِ مصطفی درید،
بر حلقِ تشنه خلف مرتضی زدند،
اهلِ حرم دریده گریبان کشاده موی،
فریاد بر درِ حرمِ کبریا زدند،
روح الامین نهاده بزانو سرِ حجاب،
تاریک شد ز دیدن او چشم آفتاب،
چون خونِ حلقِ تشنه او بر زمین رسید،
جوش از زمین بذروه عرشِ برین رسید،
نزدیک شد که خانه ایمان شود خراب،
از بس شکستها که بارکانِ دین رسید،
نخلِ بلند او چو خسان بر زمین زدند،
طوفان بر آسمان ز غبارِ زمین رسید،
باد آن غبار را بمزارِ نبی رساند،
گرد از مدینه بر فلکِ هفتمین رسید،
یکباره جامه در خُمِ گردون بنیل زد،
چون این خبر بعیسی گردون نشین رسید،
پر شد فلک ز غلغله چون نوبتِ خروش،
از انبیا بحضرتِ روح الامین رسید،
کرد این خیال وهمِ غلط کار کین غبار،
تا دامنِ جلالِ جهان آفرین رسید،
هست از ملال گرچه بری ذاتِ ذو الجلال،
او در دلست و هیچ دلی نیست بیملال،

ترسم حزای قاتلِ او چون رقم زنند،
 یکباره بر حریده، رحمت قلم زنند،
 ترسم گزین گناه شفیعیانِ روزِ حشر،
 دارند شرم کز گُنه خَلقِ دم زنند،
 دستِ عتابِ حق بدر آید ز آستین،
 چون اهلِ بیت دست بر اهلِ ستم زنند،
 آه از دمیکه با کفنِ حونچکانِ ر خاک،
 آلِ علی چو شعله، آتشِ علم زنند،
 فریاد از آن زمانکه حوانانِ اهلِ بیت،
 گلگون کفنِ بعصره، محشر بهر زنند،
 جمعی که زد بهم صفشان شورِ کربلا،
 در حشر صفِ زنان صفِ محشر بهر زنند،
 از صاحبِ حرم چه توقع کنند باز،
 آن نا کسان که تیغِ بصیدِ حرم زنند،
 پس بر سنان کنند سربِرا که حرئیل،
 شوید عمارِ گیسویش از آبِ سلسمیل،

"When they summoned mankind to the table of sorrow, they first issued the summons to the hierarchy of the Prophets.

When it came to the turn of the Saints, Heaven trembled at the blow which they smote on the head of the Lion of God¹

Then they kindled a fire from sparks of diamond dust and cast it on Hasan² the Chosen one

Then they tore up from Madína and pitched at Karbalá those pavilions to which even the angels were denied entrance

¹ I.e. 'Alí ibn Abí Tálíb, the Prophet's cousin and son in law and the first of the Twelve Imáms

² 'Alí's eldest son, the second Imám, said to have been poisoned at the instigation of Mu'áwiya.

Many tall palm-trees from the grove of the 'Family of the Cloak'¹ did the people of Kúfa fell in that plain with the axe of malice.
 Many a blow whereby the heart of Muṣṭafá [Muḥammad] was rent did they inflict on the thirsty throat of Murtaḍá 'Alí's successor², While his women, with collars torn and hair unloosed, raised their laments to the Sanctuary of the Divine Majesty,
 And the Trusted Spirit [Gabriel] laid his head in shame on his knees, and the eye of the sun was darkened at the sight.

When the blood of his thirsty throat fell on the ground, turmoil arose from the earth to the summit of God's high Throne.

The Temple of Faith came nigh to ruin through the many fractures inflicted on the Pillars of Religion.

They cast to the ground his tall palm-tree³ even as the thorn-bush;
 a deluge arose from the dust of the earth to heaven.

The breeze carried that dust to the Prophet's Tomb: dust arose from Madína to the seventh heaven.

When tidings of this reached Jesus dwelling in the heavenly sphere, he forthwith plunged his garments in indigo⁴ in the vat of heaven.

Heaven was filled with murmuring when the turn to cry out passed from the Prophets to the presence of the Trusted Spirit.

Mistaken imagination fancied that this dust⁵ had [even] reached the skirts of the Creator's glory,

For although the Essence of the All-glorious is exempt from vexation,
 He dwells in the heart, and no heart remains unvexed.

I am afraid that when they record the punishment of his murderer, they may forthwith strike the pen through the Book of Mercy.

I am afraid that the Intercessors on the Resurrection Day may be ashamed, by reason of this sin, to speak of the sins of mankind.

When the People of the House shall lay hands on the People of Tyranny, the hand of God's reproach shall come forth from its sleeve.

Alas for the moment when the House of 'Alí, with blood dripping from their winding-sheets, shall raise their standards from the dust like a flame of fire!

¹ The Prophet, his daughter Fáṭima and her husband 'Alí and their sons Ḥasan and Ḥusayn once sheltered under one cloak, whence these five most holy beings are often collectively called by this title.

² I.e. his younger son Ḥusayn, the third Imám and "Martyr of Karbalá."

³ I.e. stature, as in the fifth verse.

The colour of mourning in Persia.

⁵ I.e. sorrow and vexation.

Alas for that time when the youths of that Holy House shall dash together their crimson shrouds on the Resurrection Plain¹

That company, whose ranks were broken by the strife of Karbalá, at the Resurrection in serried ranks will break the ranks of the uprisen

What hopes from the Lord of the Sanctuary² can those worthless ones entertain who wounded with their swords the quarry³ of the Sanctuary?

Then [finally] they raise on a spear point that Head³ from whose locks Gabriel washes the dust with the water of Salsabíl⁴

Whether or no this be accounted good poetry (and of course it loses much of its beauty in a bald prose translation encumbered with notes on expressions familiar to every Persian though strange to a foreigner and a non-Muslim) it at least reveals something of that deep emotion which the memory of the unforgettable tragedy of Karbalá never fails to arouse in the breast of even the least devout and serious minded Persian. It has, like the poetry of Násir-i Khusraw, who lived nearly five centuries before Muhtasham, the great merit of sincerity, and consequently has a claim to be regarded as genuine poetry which we seek in vain in the elaborately artificial and rhetorical compositions of many Persian poets who enjoy in their own country a far higher reputation

One other marthiya, or elegy on the death of the Imam Husayn, I cannot refrain from quoting, both on account of the originality of its form and the generally irreligious character of its author, the poet Qá'aní (died A D 1853), one of the greatest and the least moral of the modern poets of Persia

Qá'aní's elegy
on the death
of the Imám Husayn

¹ God or His Prophet

² No game or wild animal or bird may be slain within a certain radius of Mecca

³ I.e. the head of the Imám Husayn

⁴ One of the rivers of Paradise

The text is taken from a lithographed collection of such poems published, without title or indication of place or date, in Persia, containing 220 unnumbered pages, and comprising the work of six poets, namely Wiṣál, Wiqár, Muḥtashám, Qá'ání, Ṣabáhlí and Bídíl.

بارد چه ؟ خون ! كه ؟ دیده ، چسان ؟ روز و شب ، چرا ؟
 از غم ، کدام غم ؟ غمِ سلطانِ كربلا ،
 نامش چه بود ؟ حسین ، ز نژادِ كه ؟ از علی ،
 مامش كه بود ؟ فاطمه ، جدش كه ؟ مصطفی ،
 چون شد ؟ شهید شد ، بكجا ؟ دشتِ ماریه ،
 كی ؟ عاشِرِ محَرَّمْ ، پنهان ؟ نه بر ملا ،
 شب كشته شد ؟ نه روز ، چه هنگام ؟ وقتِ ظهر ،
 شد از گلو بُریده سرش ؟ نی نی از قفا ،
 سیراب كُشته شد ؟ نه ، كس آبش نداد ؟ داد ،
 كه ؟ شَهرْ ، از چه چشمه ؟ ز سرچشمهء فنا ،
 مظلوم شد شهید ؟ بلی ، جُرم داشت ؟ نه ،
 كارش چه بُد ؟ هدایه ، و یارش كه بُد ؟ خدا ،
 این ظلم را كه كرد ؟ یزید ، این یزید کیست ؟
 ز اولادِ هند ، از چه كس ؟ از نطفهء زنا ،
 خود كرد این عمل ؟ نه ، فرستاد نامهء ،
 نزدِ كه ؟ نزدِ زادهءِ مرجانهءِ دغا ،
 ابن زیاد زادهءِ مرجانهءِ بُد ؟ نعم ،
 از گفتهءِ یزید تخلف نكرد ؟ لا ،
 این نابكار كُشت حسین را بدستِ خویش ؟
 نه او روانه كرد سپه سوی كربلا ،
 میرِ سپه كه بُد ؟ عَمِرِ سعد ، او بُرید ،
 خلقِ عزیزِ فاطمه ؟ نه شمرِ بی حیا ،

حـمـر نـرید حـمـر او را نـکرد شـرم؟
 کرد، از چه پس نرید؟ بدیرفت ارو قصا،
 بهر چه؟ بهر آنکه شود حلق را شمع،
 شرط شفاعتش چه بود؟ بوحه و بکا،
 کس گشته شد هم ار پسرانش؟ بلی دو تن،
 دیگر که؟ نه برادر، و دیگر که؟ اقربا،
 دیگر پسر داشت؟ چرا داشت، آن که بود؟
 سحّاد، چون بُد او؟ نعم و ربح متلا،
 ماند او بکربلای پدر؟ بی بشام رفت،
 با عتر و احتشام؟ نه نا ذلت و عا،
 تنها؟ نه با ربای حرم، نامشای چه بود،
 ریسب سکینه فاطمه کلثوم بی نوا،
 بر تن لباس داشت؟ بلی گرد رهگذار،
 بر سر عمامه داشت؟ بلی چوب اشقیا،
 بیمار بُد؟ بلی! چه دوا داشت؟ اشک چشم،
 بعد از دوا غداش چه بُد؟ حوں دل عدا،
 کس بود مهرش؟ بلی اطفال بی پدر،
 دیگر که بود؟ تب که نمی گشت ارو خدا،
 از ریتِ ربای چه بجا مانده بود؟ دو چیز،
 طوقِ ستم بگردن و حلحالِ غم بها،
 گزاین ستم کند؟ نه، محوس و یهود؟ نه،
 هندو؟ نه، بُت پرست؟ نه، درباد اربس حفا،
 قآانی است قابلِ این شعرها؟ بلی،
 خواهد چه؟ رحمت، از که؟ ر حق، کی؟ صِبِ حرا،

"What rains down? Blood! Who? The Eye! How? Day and Night!
Why?

From grief! What grief? The grief of the Monarch of Karbalá!
What was his name? Ḥusayn! Of whose race? 'Alí's!
Who was his mother? Fátima! Who was his grandsire? Muṣṭafá!
How was it with him? He fell a martyr! Where? In the Plain of Máriya!

When? On the tenth of Muḥarram! Secretly? No, in public!
Was he slain by night? No, by day! At what time? At noontide!
Was his head severed from the throat? No, from the nape of the neck!

Was he slain unthirsting? No! Did none give him to drink? They did!

Who? Shimr! From what source? From the source of Death!
Was he an innocent martyr? Yes! Had he committed any fault?
No!

What was his work? Guidance! Who was his friend? God!
Who wrought this wrong? Yazíd! Who is this Yazíd?
One of the children of Hind! By whom? By bastard origin!¹
Did he himself do this deed? No, he sent a letter!
To whom? To the false son of Marjána!

Was Ibn Ziyád the son of Marjána? Yes!
Did he not withstand the words of Yazíd? No!
Did this wretch slay Ḥusayn with his own hand?
No, he despatched an army to Karbalá!

Who was the chief of the army? 'Umar ibn Sa'd!
Did he cut down Fátima's dear folk? No, shameless Shimr!
Was not the dagger ashamed to cut his throat?
It was! Why then did it do so? Destiny would not excuse it!
Wherefore? In order that he might become an intercessor for mankind!

What is the condition of his intercession? Lamentation and weeping!
Were any of his sons also slain? Yes, two!
Who else? Nine brothers! Who else? Kinsmen!
Had he no other son? Yes, he had! Who was that?

¹ Yazíd was the son of Mu'áwiya, the rival of 'Alí and the founder of the Umayyad dynasty, who was the son of Abú Sufyán and Hind "the liver-eater" (Ákilatu'l-akbád). The term "bastard origin" should refer to Ibn Ziyád, not to Yazíd. See the Kitábu'l-Fakhr, ed. Ahlwardt, pp. 133-5.

'The Worshipper' (Sajjād)¹! How fared he? Overwhelmed with grief and sorrow!

Did he remain at his father's Karbalá? No, he went to Syria!

In glory and honour? No, in abasement and distress!

Alone? No, with the women of the household! What were their names?

Zaynab, Sakína, Fátimá, and poor portionless Kulthum!

Had he garments on his body? Yea, the dust of the road!

Had he a turban on his head? Yea, the staves of the wicked ones!

Was he sick? Yes! What medicine had he? The tears of his eyes!

What was his food after medicine? His food was heart's blood!

Did any bear him company? Yes, the fatherless children!

Who else was there? The fever which never left him!

What was left of the women's ornaments? Two things,

The collar of tyranny on their necks, and the anklet of grief on their feet!

Would a pagan (gabr) practise such cruelty? No! A Magian or a Jew? No!

A Hindoo? No! An idolater? No! Alas for this harshness!

Is Qā'ānī capable of such verses? Yes!

What seeks he? Mercy! From whom? From God! When? In the ranks of recompense!"

Besides these marāthit (singular marthiya) or threnodies of the classical type, the contemplation of the sufferings and misfortunes of the Imáms has inspired a copious literature, both in verse and prose, of a more popular kind. The mourning proper to the month of Muharram finds expression not only in the actual dramatic representations of this cycle of tragedies, of which there are at least forty (a few of which, however, are connected with prophets and holy men antecedent to Islám), but in recitations of these melancholy events known as Rawda [Rawza] Khwānī. These latter are said to derive this name from one of the earliest and best known books of this kind, the Rawdatu [Rawzatu]'sh-Shuhada ("Garden

More popular
religious poetry

¹ 'Alī ibn Husayn, commonly called Zayn al-'Abidīn ("the Ornament of the Worshippers"), who, on the death of his father at Karbalá, succeeded him as the Fourth Imám

of the Martyrs") of Ḥusayn Wá'iz-i-Káshif¹, so that these functions are called "Rawṣa-readings," whether the readings be taken from this or from some similar work, such as the Ṭifánu'l-Buká ("Deluge of Weeping") or the Asrdrú'sh-Shahádat ("Mysteries of Martyrdom"). Such entertainments are commonly given in the month of Muḥarram by rich notables, nobles, statesmen or merchants, who provide an adequate number of professional rhapsodists or reciters of this class, called Rawṣa-Khwáns, and a more or less sumptuous supper to follow. I possess a copy of a curious little poem entitled Kitábu's-Sufra fí dhammi-r-Riyá ("the Book of the Table, censuring hypocrisy")² in which the ostentation of the host and the greed of the guests is satirized with some pungency. The following lines describe how the word is passed round as to whose entertainment is likely to prove most satisfactory to the guests:

A satire on the Muḥarram
mournings.

کنون بشنو از من یکی داستان
 که رنگین ترست از لیل بوستان
 کسانی که گیرند عزای حسین
 بمجلس نشینند با شور و شین
 بُرای جگرگوشه فاطمه
 سیه پوش گردند یکسر همه
 نمایند بر پا عزای خانه‌ها
 بگیرند عزای شه کربلا
 بهر گوشه بزمی مهیا کنند
 یکی مجلس نغم بر پا کنند

¹ He died in 910/1504-5. See my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, pp. 441 and 503-4.

² The author's name is given as Turkí of Shíráz, and the little book (48 pp.) was lithographed at Bombay in 1309/1891-2.

مغرّش نمایند صحن و اُطاق،
 منقّش نمایند طاق و رواق،
 همه گسترانند فرش لطیف،
 بچینند اسبابهای طریف،
 گروهی ز مردان اشکر پرست،
 ز حام طمع حمله بیخویش و مست،
 نایشان طمع کرده ز آسان اثر،
 که مانده سگه بر روی زر،
 بهپیشانی خویش بهباده داغ،
 نمایند ازین گونه مجلس سُراغ،
 یکی رآن میان گوید ای همرهان،
 پسمدیده یاران کار آگهان،
 من و حاجی عباس رفتیم دوش،
 سوی بریم آن شخص سزی فروش،
 نمود اندر آن مجلسِ مختصر،
 بحر چاهی و قهوه چیزِی دگر،
 ندیدیم آنجا کس از مردمان،
 بحر بانی و یک دو تن روصه حوان،
 نشستن در آن بزمِ سود روا،
 که بی قند و چاهی ندارد صفا،
 خداوند از آن سده خورند بیست،
 که در مجلس شربت قند بیست،
 و لیکن سروری ده اس و حان،
 فلان حاست بزمی چو بزمِ شاهان،
 عجب مجلسِ خوب و راحت فراست،
 یقین دامن آن مجلس بپریاست،

در آن بزم چاهى بنود آق پیر،
 همش قنبد یزیدی بجای شکر،
 ز نی پیچ قلیانهای بلور،
 که یابد دل از قلقل وی سرور،
 رود عطر تنباکویش چند میل،
 درخشد بسر آتشش چو سهیل،
 نخواهد در آنجا شود آب صرف،
 بجز شربت قنبد و لیمو و برف،
 نموده است بانی عالی جناب،
 ز هر کشوری ذاکری انتخاب،
 يك از ذاکران میرزا کاشی است،
 که گویند او روضه خوان باشی است،
 دگر زآن کسان ذاکر رشتی است،
 که دریای آواز را کشتی است،
 ز کرمان و از یزد و کرمانشهان،
 ز شیراز و از شوشتر و اصفهان،
 همه موسیقی دان و خوش صوت و نغز،
 بود دیگران قشر و ایشان چو مغز،
 حقیقت عجب مجلس بیراست،
 بجان شما رفتن آنجا بجاست،
 چو یاران کنند این سخن استماع،
 بدان بزم یکسر کنند اجتماع،

"Now hear from me a story which is more brightly coloured than a garden flower,
 Of those who make mourning for Ḥusayn and sit in assemblies in frenzied excitement.

All wear black for Fátimá's darling¹,
Establish houses of mourning and make lament for the King of Karbalá²

In every corner they prepare a feast and arrange a pleasant assembly,
They carpet court yard and chamber, they bedeck with inscriptions arch and alcove,

They spread fur carpets they set out graceful furnishings,
A host of gluttonous men, all beside themselves and intoxicated with the cup of greed

On whom greed has produced such an effect that, like the stamp on the gold³,

It has set its mark on their foreheads make enquiry about such assemblies.

One of them says, 'O comrades, well approved friends, versed in affairs,

'I and Hájji 'Abbás went yesterday to the entertainment of that green grocer fellow

'In that modest entertainment there was nothing but tea and coffee,

'And we saw no one there except the host and one or two raw-a
*khawáns*⁴

'To sit in such an assembly is not meet for without sugar and tea
it has no charm

'God is not pleased with that servant in whose entertainment is neither sherbet nor sugar

'But, by Him who gives men and jinn their daily bread, in such and such a place is an entertainment worthy of kings,

'A wonderfully pleasant and comfortable entertainment, which, I am sure, is devoid of hypocrisy

'There is white tea and sugar loaf of Yázd in place of sugar,

'And crystal qalyáns with flexible tubes, at the gargle of which the heart rejoices

'The fragrance of their tobacco spreads for miles and the fire gleams on their heads like [the star] Canopus

'No water will be drunk there, but draughts of lemon, sugar and snow

¹ I.e. her son the Imám Husayn Jigar gusha (lit "corner of the liver") is an expression very similar to the Irish cúirtle mo époiré

² Again Husayn, "the martyr of Karbalá."

³ I.e. its trace is ineffaceably stamped upon them

⁴ The professional reciters or rhapsodists employed on these occasions

‘One of the reciters is Mírzá Káshí, who, they say, is the chief of rawza-khwáns.

‘Another of them is the rhapsodist of Rasht, who is like a boat in the ocean of song.

‘From Kirmán, Yazd and Kirmánsháh, from Shíráz, Shushtar and Isfahán,

‘All are skilled musicians of melodious and charming voices : they are like the kernel and others like the shell.

‘In truth it is a wonderful entertainment, devoid of hypocrisy : by your life it is right to attend it !’

When the friends hear this speech with one accord they assemble at that banquet.”

On the whole, however, the emotion evoked by these Muḥarram mournings, whether dramatic representations or recitations, is deep and genuine, and even Europeans testify to the true pathos of the Muḥarram mournings. foreigners and non-Muslims confess themselves affected by them. “If the success of a drama,” says Sir Lewis Pelly in the Preface to his translation of thirty-seven scenes from the *Ta’ziyas*¹, “is to be measured by the effects which it produces upon the people for whom it is composed, or upon the audiences before whom it is represented, no play has ever surpassed the tragedy known in the Mussulman world as that of Ḥasan and Husain. Mr Matthew Arnold, in his ‘Essays on Criticism,’ elegantly sketches the story and effects of this ‘Persian Passion Play,’ while Macaulay’s Essay on Lord Clive has encircled the ‘Mystery’ with a halo of immortality.” Even the critical and sceptical Gibbon says²: “In a distant age and climate the tragic scene of the death of Hosein will awaken the sympathy of the coldest reader.” Sayyidu’sh-Shuhadá (“the Chief of the Martyrs”) the Persians call their favourite hero, who is, indeed, in their eyes more even than this, since his intercession will be accepted by God for his sinful followers even when the intercession of the

¹ The Miracle Play of Hasan and Husain (2 vols., London, 1879).

² Professor J. B. Bury’s edition of the Decline and Fall in seven volumes (London, 1898), vol. v, p. 391.

Prophet has failed. "Go thou," says the latter to him on the Resurrection Day, "and deliver from the flames every one who has in his life-time shed but a single tear for thee, every one who has in any way helped thee, every one who has performed a pilgrimage to thy shrine, or mourned for thee, and every one who has written tragic verse for thee Bear each and all with thee to Paradise!" To the Persian Shí'a, therefore, Husayn occupies the same position that Jesus Christ does to the devout Christian, notwithstanding

Persian doctrine of the Atonement.

the fact that the doctrine of the Atonement is utterly foreign to the original spirit of Islám

To us no Persian verse could well appear more exaggerated in its deification of a human being than this¹:

مرد گوید حدائی و من اندر غصب آیم²

پرده بر داشته میسند بخود ننگِ حدائی

"Men say Thou art God, and I am moved to anger raise the veil, and submit no longer to the shame of Godhead!"

But I am not sure whether the following verse, ascribed to the Bábí poet Nabíl³, would not more greatly shock the Persian Shí'a.

شهادی طلعتِ سارِ من بدوید سوی دیارِ من سر و جان کیدِ نثارِ من که مهرِ شهنشه کربلا

"O witnesses of my aspect of fire, haste ye towards my home;
Make head and life my offering, for I am the Monarch of Karbalá!"

¹ Sir Lewis Pelly's Miracle Play, vol. II, p. 347

² By an Azalí controversialist it is said to have been written of Bahá'u'lláh by one of his followers, but I have been told that it, or a very similar verse, was really composed in honour of Husayn

³ Nabíl is a Bábí substitute for Muhammad, the numerical values of both names being equivalent to 92. The poet Nabíl at one time after the Báb's death advanced a claim on his own behalf, and the verse here cited appears to have been composed at this period. Later he became one of the most devoted adherents of Bahá'u'lláh, on whose death in 1892 he drowned himself at 'Akká.

It would be an interesting study, but beyond the capacity of this volume, to trace the growth of the Ḥusayn-Legend from its comparatively meagre historical basis, as given by Ṭabarī and the earlier Arab historians, to the elaborate romance into which it has finally developed in the ta'ziyas and rawṣa-khwāns. But the romantic element appears early, even in the narrative of Abú Mikhnaf Lúṭ ibn Yahyá, who flourished in the first half of the second century of the hijra (circa A.D. 750)¹, and it has even been suggested that Ḥusayn has been indued with the attributes of some far more ancient prototype like Adonis. At any rate no one at the present day can see anything more like the performances of the priests of Baal than the ghastly ceremonies of the 'Áshúrá or Rúz-i-Qatl which take place on the tenth of Muḥarram (the anniversary of Ḥusayn's death at Karbalá) wherever there is a considerable Persian colony, but especially, of course, in Persia itself.

Growth of the Ḥusayn-Legend.

Sanguinary celebration of the 'Áshúrá or Rúz-i-Qatl.

Certain episodes in the Ḥusayn-Legend would almost seem to indicate an unconscious sense of solidarity with the Christians on the part of the Shí'a Persians arising from their participation in the doctrine of the Atonement. The best-known example of this is the conversion and martyrdom of the "Firangí ambassador" at the Court of Yazíd², a very favourite scene in the ta'ziyas, and considered especially appropriate when European visitors are included in the audience. Another instance occurs in the Asráru'sh-Shahádat, or "Mysteries of Martyrdom," of Isma'íl Khán "Sarbáz³," when Ibn Sa'd invites certain Christians to aid

¹ See Wüstenfeld's Die Geschichtschreiber der Araber, No. 19 (pp. 5-6), and his translation of this work under the title of Der Tod des Husein ben 'Alí und die Rache: ein historischer Roman aus dem Arabischen (Göttingen, 1883).

² See Pelly's Miracle Play, vol. ii, pp. 222-240.

³ Lithographed with crude illustrations at Tíhrán in 1274/1857-58.

him in killing the Imám Husayn, but when the eyes of their leader fell upon him—

كربلا را دید عرشِ كمریا،

عرش را تر دید از خونِ خدا،

نقش بست اندر دل از كلكِ حیا،

كیست خدا باشد بدین قر و حلال،

گر خدا نبود یقین عیسی بود،

آفتابِ عرشِ دینِ ما بود،

"He saw Karbalá as the Throne of Divine Majesty, he saw that Throne wet with God's blood¹,

By the pen of imagination an impression grew in his heart, 'Surely this is God in such glory and splendour'

'If he be not God, then surely he is Jesus, the Sun of the Throne of our Faith'

Thereupon, being convinced of the truth of Islám and the sanctity of Husayn—

خواست اذیِ حگ با صد شور و شس،

رفت و جان نمود قربانِ حسین،

"With a hundred frenzied enthusiasms he sought permission to engage in the battle, and departed to offer his life as a sacrifice for Husayn'

Since, however, we also find stories of the conversion of an Indian king (presumably a pagan) and even of a lion, the object may be to emphasize the cruelty and hard-heartedness of the professing Muslims who compassed the death of Husayn and his fellow-martyrs by depicting the sympathy evoked by their sufferings even in the hearts of unbelievers and savage animals

The librettos giving the words actually spoken by the

¹ This expression in the mouth of a professing Muslim is extraordinary actors in the ta'siyas are not often met with, though lithographed copies exist, of which, by the kindness of my friend the late George Grahame, formerly Consul in different parts of Persia, I possess half a dozen. As an example of their style I shall here cite a passage from the "Martyrdom of Hurr ibn Yazid ar-Riyáhi¹," wherein an Arab from Kúfa brings to the Imám Husayn the news of the execution of his cousin Muslim ibn 'Aql.

آمدن مرد عرب از کوفه و خبر آوردن از شهادت مسلم بن عقیل
 (عرب) منکه بینی که بصد شور و نوا میآیم
 هدمدم نزد سلیمان ز سبا میآیم
 آیم از کوفه و دارم خبر از مسلم زار
 چون نسیم سحری روح فزا میآیم
 بر سرم شوق لقای پسر فاطمه است
 که بدرد دل مجروح دوا میآیم
 (عباس) این دربرا که بود خاکِ سرایش کافور
 سُرْمه چشمِ ملک باشد و خدامش حور
 هست این در بخدا قبله ارباب وفا
 دردمندانِ بلارا بود این دار شفا
 (عرب) سلام من بتو ای مقتدای عالمیان
 ز کوفه میرسم ای پیشوای اهلِ جنان
 خدایرا کجا میروی تو ای سُرور
 بیان نما تو بحقِ خدای جن و بشر
 (امام) علیک من بتو ای قاصدِ نکو منظر
 روم بکوفه من ایندم بحالتِ مضطر

¹ This constitutes a separate scene in Sir L. Pelly's Miracle Plays, vol. i, pp. 171-189.

نوشته‌اند بمن نامه‌های اشتیاق
 فَلَکْ کشیده عنانم بسوی مُلْکِ عراق
 بمن بگو تو ز مسلم اگر خبر داری
 کسی بکوفه باو کرد از وفا یاری
 (عرب) مپرس از حالتِ مسلم فدایت
 بیّا آقا بموسم دست و پایت
 مَرُو در کوفه ای سلطانِ ابرار
 که میترسم شوی محزون و بی یار
 مَرُو در کوفه ای سَرُوَر امان است
 بکن رحمی علی اکبر جوان است
 مَرُو در کوفه زینب خوار گردد
 اسیرِ کوچه و بازار گردد
 (امام) عرب از حالتِ مسلم بیان کن
 (عرب) برای مسلم محزون فغان کن
 (امام) بگو در کوفه چون شد حالِ مسلم
 (عرب) بدان برگشته شد اقبالِ مسلم
 (امام) مگر کوفی تنش در خون کشیدند
 (عرب) سرِ پاکش ز ملک تن بُریدند
 (امام) مگر کردند جسمش پاره پاره
 (عرب) زدند جسم شریفش بر قناره
 (امام) دگر بر گو چه کردند قومِ اشرار
 (عرب) کشیدندش میانِ شهر و بازار
 (امام) بگو از حالتِ طفلانِ مسلم
 (عرب) شدند اندر جنانِ مهمانِ مسلم
 (امام) که بر آن کودکان ظلم و جفا کرد
 (عرب) سرِ ایشان ز تن هارث جدا کرد

(امام) فغان از دیده گریان مسلم
 (عرب) بود این جامه طفلان مسلم
 ایوای که مسلم وفا دار
 کشته شده از جفای اشرار

"How the Arab comes from Kúfa bringing news of the martyrdom of Muslim ibn 'Aqil.

(Arab) 'I whom thou seest coming with an hundred passionate strains

Am the hoopoe coming from Sheba into the presence of Solomon.

I come from Kúfa, having tidings of poor Muslim,
 I come enlarging the spirit like the morning breeze.
 In my head is a longing to meet the son of Fátima¹,
 I come as the remedy for the pain of a wounded heart.'

(Abbás) 'To this gate, of whose pavilion the dust is camphor
 And collyrium for the angels' eyes, and its servants the Húris².

By God, this gate is the *qibla*³ of all faithful folk,
 And a house of healing to those stricken with sorrow !'

(Arab) 'My salutation to thee, O exemplar of mankind ;
 I come from Kúfa, O leader of the people of Paradise !
 For God's sake whither goest thou, O my lord ?
 Explain to me [I conjure thee] by the God of Jinn and men !'

(The Imám) 'And on thee [be my salutation], O messenger of comely face !

Even now I am going to Kúfa in an agitated condition.
 They have written to me letters of longing :
 Heaven draws my reins towards the land of 'Iráq.
 Tell me, therefore, if thou hast news of Muslim :
 Has any one in Kúfa loyally aided him ?'

¹ I.e. the Imám Husayn, son of 'Alí and Fátima the Prophet's daughter.

² The Húru'l-'Ayn, or black-eyed damsels of Paradise.

³ The point to which the worshipper turns in prayer in order to face Mecca-wards.

(Arab) 'May I be thy sacrifice! Ask not of Muslim's case!
 Come, master, let me kiss thy hands and feet!
 Go not to Kufa, O King of the righteous!
 For I fear that thou may'st become sorrowful and friendless Go not to Kufa, O Lord! It were a pity!
 Be merciful! 'Alī Akbar¹ is so young!
 Go not to Kufa! Zaynab² will be humiliated,
 And will be led captive through the streets and markets!'

(Together)

(Imām) 'O Arab, make known Muslim's condition!'
 (Arab) 'Lament for grief stricken Muslim!'
 (Imām) 'Tell me, how fared it with Muslim in Kúfa?'
 (Arab) 'Know that Muslim's fortune failed.'
 (Imām) 'Did the Kufans drag his body through blood?'
 (Arab) 'They severed his innocent head from the kingdom of his body'
 (Imām) 'Did they cut his body in pieces?'
 (Arab) 'They stuck his noble body on the headsman's hook.'
 (Imām) 'Tell me, what further did these wicked people do?'
 (Arab) 'They dragged him through the city and market.'
 (Imām) 'Tell me, how fares it with Muslim's children?'
 (Arab) 'They have become the guests of Muslim in Paradise.'
 (Imām) 'Who wrought cruelty and wrong on those children?'
 (Arab) 'Hārth severed their heads from their bodies.'
 (Imām) 'Alas for Muslim's weeping eyes!
 (Arab) 'These are the garments of Muslim's children.'
 (Both)³ 'Alas that faithful Muslim has been slain by the cruelty of wicked men!'

It has only been possible here to touch the fringe of this vast literature of what is commonly and not inappropriately termed the Persian Passion Play, and I have had to content myself with a few specimens of the main types in which it is manifested, namely the classical threnody or elegy (marthuya) of Muhtasham and his imitators, the more ¹ The eldest son of the Imām Husayn. His death forms the subject of Scene xvii of Pelly's Miracle Play (vol. 1, pp. 287-303).

² The daughter of 'Alī and sister of Hasan and Husayn.

³ It is not clear from the text whether this verse is uttered by one or both of the speakers.

popular presentations of these legends in verse, prose, or mixed verse and prose, contained in innumerable and obscure lithographed books, of which I have chosen the Asráru'sh-Shahádat as a type, not because it enjoys any supreme excellence, but simply because it is one of those of which I happen to possess a copy; and lastly the actual librettos of the dramatized ta'ziyas, to be seen at their best at the Royal Takya of Tíhrán during the first ten days of the month of Muḥarram. Manuscript note-books for the use of rawza-khwáns on such occasions are commonly met with in collections of Persian books, and the full description of one such (Add. 423) will be found in my *Catalogue of the Persian MSS. in the Cambridge University Library*¹. Most of these pieces are anonymous, but amongst the poets named are Muqbil, Mukhlis, Mawzún, Nasím, Shaff'í and Lawhí, of none of whom can I find any biographical notice.

(4) Bábt Poetry.

One of my young Persian friends who, like so many of the rising generation, deplores the influence of the mullás and rawza-khwáns and the religious atmosphere created by them, especially in connection with the Muḥarram celebrations, admitted to me that at least the work has been done so thoroughly that even the most ignorant women and illiterate peasants are perfectly familiar with all the details of these legends of martyrdom, however little they may know of the authentic history of the events portrayed or the persons represented. Even the greatest mujtahids, like Mullá Muḥammad Báqir-i-Majlisí, however little they might approve the exaggerations and even blasphemies which characterized the Passion Plays in their final popular developments, were at great pains to supply their compatriots with popular and easily

¹ No. LXVI, pp. 122-142. On this last page are given references to descriptions of other similar collections.

Immense influence of the Husayn-Legend on Persian mentality.

intelligible religious treatises in Persian, so that a knowledge of these matters might not be confined to Arabic scholars or professed theologians

One effect of the ta'ziyas has been to create amongst the Persians a widely diffused enthusiasm for martyrdom of which sufficient account is not taken by those who, misled by the one sided portrait, or rather caricature, presented by Morier in his famous

Haji Baba deem them an essentially timid and even cowardly folk. The English missionaries in Persia, who in sympathy for and understanding of the people amongst whom they work seem to me greatly superior to those whose labours lie in other fields, know better, and no one has done fuller justice to the courage and steadfastness of the Bábí and Bahá'í martyrs than the Reverend Napier Malcolm in his valuable book Five Years in a Persian Town (Yazd). Another told me an interesting story from his own experience in Isfahán. One of the chief mujtahids of that city had condemned some Bábís to death as apostates, and my informant, who was on friendly terms with this ecclesiastic, ventured to intercede for them. The mujtahid was at first inclined to take his intervention very ill but finally the missionary said to him "Do you suppose that the extraordinary progress made by this sect is due to the superiority of their doctrines? Is it not simply due to the indomitable courage of those whom you and your colleagues condemn to die for their faith? But for the cruel persecutions to which the Bábís have from the first been subjected and which they have endured with such unflinching courage, would they now be more numerous or important than a hundred obscure heresies in Persia of which no one takes any notice and which are devoid of all significance? It is you and such as you who have made the Babís so numerous and so formidable, for in place of each one whom you kill a pass on for martyrdom

The Persian

The prestige of the Bábís and Bahá'ís is chiefly due to the courage of the numerous martyrs.

hundred converts arise." The mujtahid reflected for a while and then replied, "You are right, and I will spare the lives of these people¹."

Many of these martyrs died with verses of poetry on their lips. Sulaymán Khán, with wicks flaming in his mangled body, sang:

يك دست جامِ باده و يك دست زلف يار رقصی چنين ميانه ميدانم آرزوست

"In one hand the wine-cup, in the other the tresses of the Friend,
Such a dance in the midst of the market-place is my desire."

One of the "Seven Martyrs" exclaimed, when the headsmen's sword, missing its stroke, dashed his turban to the ground:

ای خوش آن عاشقِ سرمست که در پای حبيب
سر و دستار نداند که کدام اندازد

"Happy that intoxicated lover who at the feet of the Friend Knows not whether it be head or turban which he casts."

Of the ancient Arabs Wilfrid Blunt well says²: "Their courage was of a different quality, perhaps, from that admired among ourselves. It was the valour of a nervous, excitable people who required encouragement from onlookers and from their own voices to do their best..." and the same holds good to some extent of the Persians. Poetry is called "Lawful Magic" (Sihr-i-Halál) because, in the words of the author of the *Chahár Maqála*³, it is "that art whereby the poet... can make a little thing appear great and a great thing small, or cause good to appear in the garb of evil and evil in the form of good... in such a way that by his suggestion

Characteristics of Arabian and Persian courage.

¹ A good instance of that sense of justice (inṣāf) which my talented friend and former pupil Mr W. A. Smart of the Consular Service regards as one of the most admirable attributes of the Persians.

² The Seven Golden Odes of Pagan Arabia (London, 1903), p. xii.

³ E. J. W. Gibb Memorial Series, vol. xi, 1 (Text), p. 26; vol xi, 2 (Translation), p. 27.

men's temperaments become affected with depression or exaltation; whereby he conduces to the accomplishment of great things in the order of the world."

The Karbalá legend is a potent factor in producing in these martyrs the psychological state which makes them not only endure with fortitude but glory in their sufferings. In one of the two celebrated poems ascribed to the Bábí heroine Qurratu'l-'Ayn¹, who was one of the victims of the great persecution of August, 1852, occurs the verse²:

من و عشقِ آن مهِ حوبرو که چو شد صلاى بلا برو
بنشاط و قهقهه شد فرو که انا الشَّهِيد بکربلا

"For me the love of that fair-faced Moon who, when the call of affliction came to him, Went down with exultation and laughter, crying, 'I am the Martyr at Karbalá!'"

In its original and primitive form Bábism was Shí'ism of the most exaggerated type, and the Báb himself the 'Gate' to the unseen Imám or Mahdí. Gradually he came to regard himself as actually the Imám; then he became the 'Point' (Nuqta), an actual Manifestation of the Supreme Being, and his chief disciples became re-incarnations, or rather "returns" or "recurrences" of the Imáms, and the whole tragedy of Karbalá was re-enacted "in a new horizon" at Shaykh Tabarsí in Mázandarán. The nineteen chapters constituting the first "Unity" (Wáhid) of the Persian Bayán (the most intelligible and systematic of the Báb's writings) are entirely devoted to the thesis that all the protagonists of the Islamic Cycle have returned³ in this cycle to the life of the world, and Hájji Mírzá Jání, the earliest Bábí historian and himself a victim of the persecution of 1852, gives a long comparison between Karbalá and Shaykh Ṭabarsí, greatly in favour of the latter¹.

¹ Both are given in full, with versified translations, in my Materials for the Study of the Bábí Religion, pp 347-51.

² Compare the initial verse of the poem cited on p 173 supra

³ Concerning this typical doctrine of "Return" (Raj'at) see my Materials etc., pp 330, 335 and 338, and my translation of the New History, pp 334 et seqq.

In the eleventh and last section of my Materials for the Study of the Bábí Religion (pp. 341-58) I published a selection of Bábí and Bahá'í poems, and here

 Mírzá Na'im, the Bahá'í poet of Si-dih. I will only add to these a qaṣida comprising 133 verses composed in the spring of 1885 by Mírzá Na'im² of Si-dih near Isfahán, an ardent Bahá'í, whose son, as I lately heard from a friend in the British Legation at Ṭihrán, is still resident there. Mírzá Na'im sent me an autograph copy of this poem in the summer of 1902 through my late friend George Grahame, and in the concluding colophon he states that he was born at Si-dih in 1272/1855-6 and came to Ṭihrán in 1304/1886-7. The poem is so long that I originally intended only to give extracts from it, but, finding that this could not be done without injury to the sequence of ideas, I have decided to print it in full as a typical Bahá'í utterance having the authority of an autograph.

هو الله تعالى شانه

مرا بود دل و چشمی ز گردشِ گردون

یکی چو دجله آب و یکی چو لجه خون

چرا ننالم سخت و چرا نگریمر زار

که از مضیق جهان ره نمیرم بیرون

درون دایره مقصود خود نمی یابم

مرا نه پای برون باشد و نه جای درون

¹ Nuqtatu'l-Káf (Gibb Series, vol. xv), pp. 204-5.

² He is referred to in my Year amongst the Persians (p. 519), where he is wrongly described as a native of Ábáda.

- مرا چه فایده از حاه اگر شور قارن'
 مرا چه عایده از مال اگر شور قارون'
 • چو می نهر چه ثمر میدهد ضیاع و عُقار'
 چو بگذرم چه اثر میکند بنات و بنون'
 مرا چه فخر که نوشم عُقار یا حَلّال'
 مرا چه فضل که پوشم حریر یا اکون'
 چو ملك و مال نماید چه محتشم چه فقیر'
 چو روزگار نباید چه شاد و چه محزون'
 بعقل نازم و هر حانور از آن مهلو'
 بروح باله و هر حایگه از آن مشحون'
 مرا از این چه که گویم چه کرد اسکندر'
 مرا بدین چه که دانم که بود ناپلیون'
 ۱۰ مرا چه کار که مه شد هلال و بدر از آنك'
 بقدر تابش خور بر وی هست چهره نمون'
 چه فایده است کسوف و خسوف را دانم'
 که خور ز ماه و مه از ظلّ ارض نیلی کون'
 چه لازم است که گویم ثوابت و سیّار'
 همه شمس و کُراتند در غیرِ کودون'
 مرا از این چه که دانم کُرات کرد شمس'
 معتقد و روان وز دو حذب اند زبون'
 مرا چه کار که ناد آن هوا که موج زند'
 خفیف خشك بغوق و ثقیل تر سوی دون'
 ۱۱ چه گویم آنکه قمر بر زمین زمین بر شمس'
 هر او بشمی دگر میچمد به پیرامون'
 چه گویم این رملی سالر است یا محدوف'
 چه گویم این رجز مطوی است یا منخون'

ز صرف و نحو و حروف و قرائت و تجوید
 ز وقف کوفیّین و ز وصلِ بصریّون
 ز اشتقاق و بدیع و معانی و انشاء
 بیان و خط و عروض و قریض شعر و فنون
 رجال و فقه و اصول و جدال و استنباط
 حدیث و حجّت و تفسیر و سنّت و قانون
 ۲۰ ز رسم و هیأت و جبر و مناظر و تاریخ
 حساب و هندسه جغرافی از جمیع شئون
 سیاستِ مدن و شرع و زرع و کان و لغات
 حقوقِ ملت و خرج و خراج و قرض و قشون
 طب و علائم و تشریح و نبض و قاروره
 خواصّ جملہ ادویہ مفرد و معجون
 طلسم و دعوت و تعبیر و کیمیا و حیل
 نجوم و طالع و اعداد و رمل و جفر و فسون
 علومِ فلسفه و منطق از قدیم و جدید
 تحاشیاتِ حواشی تَسْفُطَاتِ متون
 ۲۰ بدین علوم هلا نقدِ عمر خویش مده
 گزین معامله گشتند عالمی مغبون
 از این علوم سوی علمِ دینِ حق بگرای
 که غیر معرفتِ حق همه فریب و فسون
 فسونِ فلسفه مشنو که سر بسر سفه است
 فنونِ دهری و کلبی تمام جهل و جنون
 چرا ظنونِ طبیعی شمرده تو علوم
 چرا علومِ الهی گرفته تو ظنون
 مقالِ این حکما چیست جملگی مشکوک
 کلامِ این جهلا چیست سر بسر مظنون

- ۲۰ علومشان پی دفع حیا و صدق و صفا
 فنونشان پی فسق و فساد و مکرو مجنون
 همه اباحه^۱ ارض است و اشتراك حظوظ^۲
 همه اشاعه^۳ فسق است و امتلاء^۴ بطون^۵
 خیالشان همه کوتاه و چشمشان همه تنگ^۶
 فنونشان همه وهم و شئونشان همه دون^۷
 نبود سدّ شریعت اگر بر این یاجوج^۸
 نبود هیچ کس از عرض و مال و جان مأمون^۹
 بحق حق سخنی این گروه ظاهرین^{۱۰}
 بحسب ملت و ملک است بدترین طاعون^{۱۱}
 ۲۰ شوی ز علم الهی سلاله^{۱۲} کوئین^{۱۳}
 شوی ز حکمت کلبی نبیره^{۱۴} میمون^{۱۵}
 هر آنچه گفت نبی این زمان ببین مشهود^{۱۶}
 هر آنچه گفت حکیم این زمان ببین مطعون^{۱۷}
 علومشان همه از انبیا ولی ناقص^{۱۸}
 فنونشان همه از اولیا ولی ملحون^{۱۹}
 و لیکن از در انصاف در جهان انسان^{۲۰}
 بعلم و دانش ممتاز باشد از ما دون^{۲۱}
 بعلم و حکمت ره میبرد بذات قدیم^{۲۲}
 بعقل و فکر برد ره بحضرت بیچون^{۲۳}
 ۱۰ تعلّم است که فرموده افضل الاعمال^{۲۴}
 تفکر است کز او ساعتی به از سبعون^{۲۵}
 مُقَرَّر ذات قدیمش حکیمهای بزرگ^{۲۶}
 چو سقراط چو بقراط ارسطو و زینون^{۲۷}
 چو بو علی و چو اقلیدس و چو بطلمیوس^{۲۸}
 چو طالاس و چو فلاطون چو هرمس و شیلون^{۲۹}

یَقْدَسُونَ لَهُ بِالْعَشَى وَ الْإِشْرَاقِ
 یَسْتَبَحُونَ إِذَا یُصْبِحُونَ إِذَا یُمْسُونَ
 جهان سری که حکیم اندرو بجای خرد
 زمان تنی که علوم اندر او بجای عیون
 ۹۰ ولی تو نُست عنان توسن فنون سرکش
 ولی تو خام ضعیف اُبْرش علوم حرون
 نخوانده سطری ریب آوری برَبّ قدیم
 زهی مزاج که قبض آورد ز انتیمون
 ز مهد تا بلحد علم جو وَ لَوْ بِالْأَصِینِ
 ز علم حق که بر آنست اعتماد و رکون
 حقایقِ حکمش را حکیمها مبهوت
 جوامع کلمش را ادیبها مرهون
 طبایع اند چو اجسام در ظهور و بروز
 حقایق اند چو ارواح در خفا و کمون
 ۹۰ ز تنگ ظرفی درین فضای نا محدود
 بود عوالم بیحد بیکدگر مدفون
 امور عادیه را عام دید و خاصه خاص
 بِقَدْرِ خُود وَ هُوَ أَعْلَمُ بِمَا یَصِفُونَ
 بگنّه پست‌ترین صنع حادثش نرسد
 چه جای ذاتِ قدیمش هزار افلاطون
 بحکیم حقّ متحرّک بود سپهر و نجوم
 بلی ز جان متأثر بود عیون و جفون
 ز امر نیست پس از کیست جنبش اجرام
 ز آب نیست پس از چیست گردش طاحون
 ۹۰ یکی بحشیر تأمل ز روی عقل ببین
 درین سراچه که ربّعی از آن بود مسکون

بهریکی ز حماد و نسات و از حیوان
 هزار عالم با دیده طاهر و مکنون
 ورای عقل تو عقل دگر بود غالب
 درون حان تو حان دگر بود مکنون
 بین بدانه که آن داله با ازل همدوش
 بین به بیضه که آن بیضه با ابد مقرون
 نهان و طاهر از این صد جهان طیور و فروع
 قدیر و حادث از آن صد چمن ثمار و غصون
 ۱۰ کجا نکوی حقیقت گذر توانی کرد
 تو کنز سرای طبیعت نیروی بیرون
 چنانکه بیسی فیض حیات از این عالم
 بطفیل از مدد مام میرسد سطون
 ر ما ورای طبیعت اگر مدد نرسد
 بدین جهان بحدای این جهان شود وارون
 ر ما ورای طبیعت در این مضیق جهان
 عوالمی است حدارا ز حد و عد افزون
 گروهی از عقلا بر خلاف عادت کل
 بطوع و طمع بین غوطه میزند بحون
 ۱۰ خلاف طمع گروهی بدرد و غم حوشود
 خلاف طمع فرقی ز حور کین ممنون
 تمیل طمع بین جمعی از جهان بیزار
 بطیب نفس نگر قومی از وطن سرگون
 بین بشوق و شمع فرقه همه مقتول
 بین بذوق و طرب زمره همه مسحون
 بطوع سلسله در عذاب رنگارنگ
 بطمع طائفه در بلای گوناگون

- جميع مست و غزلخوان ولی نه از باده،
 تمام محو و پریشان ولی نه از افیون،
 ۷۰ چگونه داد خبر دانیال از امروز،
 چگونه کرد اثر قول اشعیا اکنون،
 چگونه گشت وفا وعده، جميع کتب،
 بطبق مصحف و تورات و صحف و انگلیون،
 گهی بدارِ سلام و گهی باورِ شلیم،
 گهی بکرمل و گاهی ادوم و گه صیون،
 معین آمده ارض مقدس مسعود،
 مؤرخ آمده یوم مبارک میمون،
 وَ كَيْفَ جَاءَ لَنَا الْحَقُّ كَمَا أَشَارَ لَنَا،
 نَبِئْنَا الْعَرَبِيَّ وَ الْأَئِمَّةُ الْهَادُونَ،
 ۷۰ چسان بوعده جمالِ قدم نمود جمال،
 از آن جمالِ مبارک زمانه یافت شگون،
 چگونه گشت عیان حق بوادی و آلتین،
 چگونه گشت پدید او بکوه و الزیتون،
 چگونه بی سپه او قاهر است و کلّ مقهور،
 چگونه یکتنه او غالب است و خلق زیون،
 سروده بی سبب علمِ خوشترین آیات،
 نهاده بی مدد غیر بهترین قانون،
 چرا ندیده باو صد هزار جان قربان،
 چرا ندیده باو صد هزار دل مفتون،
 ۸۰ ز جنبشِ قلمش جنبشِ قلوب و صدور،
 ز رامشِ نظرش رامشِ ظهور و بطون،
 عائمِ علما مشعلش نکرد خاموش،
 کتائبِ امرا رایتش نکرد نگون،

بین رود سخش در جهان چو در تن حاش
 بین همد اثرش در روان چو در رگ خون
 حصومتِ حصما آب سوده در هاون
 رقابتِ رقما ساد بوده بر هامون
 ثبوتِ حکمش در قلب با روان همد
 دوامِ امرش در دهر با قرون مقرون
 ۸۰ چگونه آتشی اخروخته است در دلها
 که هیچ آب نیارد نشاندن این کانون
 گرفته حکمش روی زمین و زیر زمین
 گذشته صیتش از چین و هند و از ژاپون
 نیک نظر نکشوده دو صد بلاد و بلوک
 نیک قلم بستانده صد قلام و حصون
 چگونه کرد بها محفلی بدعوتِ دین
 که تا بحشر نگردند منهی از ناهون
 پی بای شریعت و کس بحواست مدد
 ملی بداشت بها آسمان حدا بستون
 ۹ بغض و رحمتش اقرار کی نمائی کی
 بعلم و قدرتش انکار چون نمائی چون
 تو خود که بطم نیک حابواده نتوانی
 مکن معارضه با ناظمِ حمیع قرون
 تو خود که مصلحتِ کارِ خود بهیدانی
 مکن لحاح سلطانِ ملکِ کُنْ فَيَكُونْ
 تو با پدر بستیری نیک پشیر صر
 دهد در ره او مال و جان و زو مهمون
 هراس حیف که دارم در سن قواشی تسک
 هراس نکته که توان نمودش موزون

- ۹۰ سخن ز دست شد و دردِ دل تمام نشد،
 روم دو باره کنون بر سرِ همان مضمون،
 مرا دلیست در این روزگار بو قلمون،
 فریب خورده، بازِ پیچه‌های گوناگون،
 زمانه جلوه کند رنگِ رنگ چون طاوس،
 سپهر عثوه دهد گونه گون چو بو قلمون،
 بس است تابشت ای مهر شد دلبر بریان،
 بس است کردشت ای چرخ شد تنرمطحون،
 مرا سربست چه سازد باین همه سودا،
 مرا دلیست چه سازد باینهمه افسون،
 ۱۰۰ بجز بجانان جان را کجاست تاب و شکیب،
 بجز بدلبر دل را کجاست صبر و سکون،
 گهی بخویش بگویم که الکمال و بال،
 گهی بخویش بخندم که الجنون فنون،
 دود خیالم گاهی بدشت چون ماشین،
 پرد هوایم گاهی بچرخ چون بالون،
 ز تن گسته‌ام و جان نمی‌رود از تن،
 ز جان گذشته‌ام و دل نمیشود مأمون،
 دلم گرفت ز ویران سرای فضل و هنر،
 خوشا ممالک عشق و خوشا دیار جنون،
 ۱۰۰ ز پای بُختی بختم عقالِ عقل گسیخت،
 کجاست لیلی من ای خدا شدم مجنون،
 بجز ارادهٔ رحمانی از در قدرت،
 که میتواند از این ورطه‌ام برد بیرون،
 هلا ارادهٔ حق مَن ارَادَهُ اَللّٰهُ است،
 که شد ارادهٔ حق با اراده‌اش مقرون،

یگانه عهد بها آنکه از اراده حق،
 إِذَا أَرَادَ لِشَيْءٍ يَقُولُ كُنْ فَيَكُونُ،
 شئی که مارا حق سوی اوست راه بها،
 مهی که مارا سوی حق اوست راه نمون،
 ۱۱. حسته گوهر بحر وصال سر الله،
 که اوست در صدق علم حق در مکنون،
 سر فصلش فضل است فاقد الافصال،
 بزد خودش معن است مانع الماعون،
 عدوی اوست بحود حصر و یار ازو بیزار،
 مطیع اوست ز خود امن و خلق ازو مأمون،
 بوصف طلعت من طاف حوله الأسما،
 سرودمی سخن از بودمی از او مأذون،
 مدح ذاتش میگفتم آنچه گفته حدای،
 نه شعر الشعراء يتشعبر العاؤون،
 ۱۲. تو ای حلیفه رحمان و ای سفیه نوح،
 غمین مشو که حقیقت رقص شد موهون،
 بعهد حضرت آدم بحور و کین قابیل،
 بدون حرّم و که ریحتم از برادر خون،
 بعهد نوح چو کعبان شکست عهد پدر،
 بدل بغی سب شد عریق بحر الهون،
 بعهد حضرت یعقوب یوسف صدیق،
 ز کید احوان در قید سدگی مسهون،
 بعهد حضرت موسی ر سط اسرائیل،
 یکی چو حضرت هارون و دیگری قارون،
 ۱۳. بعهد حضرت روح الله از حواریین،
 يك از حفا چو یهودا يك از صفا شمعون،

بعهدِ حضرتِ ختمی مآب از اُمتِ
 یکی بصدق ابو ذر یکی ابو شعیون
 بعهدِ حضرتِ اعلیٰ دو تن وحید شدند
 یکی شجاعِ امین و یکی جبانِ خئون
 بعهدِ طلعتِ ابهی هم اینچنین باید
 یکیست ثابتِ عهد و یکیست ناقضِ دون
 بلعن لب نکشایم ولی خدا گوید
 هر آنکه میشکند عهدِ من بود ملعون
 ۱۲۰ ز حق بعهد مر این فرقه چشم میپوشند
 که حق ز باطل پیداست در جمیع شئون
 قسم بروی تو ای مقتدای کَلِ اُمَرِ
 قسم بموی تو ای پیشوای کَلِ قرون
 قسم باصلِ تو یعنی بحضرتِ مطلق
 قسم بحقِ تو یعنی حقیقتِ بیچون
 قسم بوجهِ تو یعنی بوجهِ المشرق
 قسم بسرِ تو یعنی بسرِ المخزون
 بخاکِ پای تو یعنی بکیمیای مراد
 بگردِ راهِ تو یعنی بتوتیای عیون
 ۱۳۰ بموطأِ قدیمِ تو بموطنِ وَالَّتینِ
 بسجده گاهِ خلائیقِ بزیبِ وَالزیتون
 که بی ثنای توام مطمئن نگردد دل
 سرِ فراغِ بیالینِ نمی نهد مدیون
 ولی نعیمِ کجا مدحِ تو تواند کرد
 نیازموده نهاده است پای در جیحون
 مطیعِ امرِ تو از کیدِ نفسِ بادِ ایمن
 اسیرِ بندِ تو از شیدِ دهرِ بادِ مصون

"HE IS GOD, EXALTED IS HIS STATE !

"Through the revolution of the Sphere I have a heart and an eye, the one like the Tigris in flood, the other like a gulf of blood
 Why should I not mourn heavily, and why should I not weep bitterly, since I cannot make my way out of the narrows of the world?
 Within the circle I find not my object, I have neither foot to fare forth nor place within What profiteth me if I be as Qâren¹ in rink? What gain to me if I be as Qîrun² in wealth?
 What fruit do farms and estates yield, since I must lay them aside?
 What effect have daughters and sons, since I must pass away? 5
 What pride have I in drinking wine or rose water? What virtue have
 I in wearing silk or black brocade³?
 Since dominion and wealth remain not, what difference between wealthy and poor? Since time endureth not, what difference between the glad and the sorrowful?
 I take pride in my understanding while every animal is full of it,
 I glory in spirit when every place overflows with it.
 What is it to me that I should say what Alexander did? What is it to me that I should know who Napoleon was?
 What affair is it of mine that the moon becomes crescent or full because it shows its face in proportion to the shining of the sun upon it? 10
 What advantage is it that I should know about the eclipses of the sun and moon, or that the sun is darkened⁴ through the moon, and the moon through the shadow of the earth?
 What need is there for me to say that the fixed stars and planets are all suns and spheres in the vault of heaven?

¹ One of the seven great noble houses of ancient Persia. See Noldeke's Sasaniden, especially pp 437 et seqq. These seven families constituted the Bar bîdân of the Pahlawî inscriptions, the Ahlul-Buyûdt of the Arab historians.

² See Qur'ân, xxviii, 76 and commentary thereon in Sale's translation and elsewhere. He is identified with Korah of the Old Testament, and amongst the Muslims is proverbial for wealth as is Croesus with us.

³ A short note on aksun, "a black brocade worn by the rich for ostentation," will be found on p 108 of my translation of the Chahâr Magâla (Gibb Series, xi, 2).

⁴ Literally, made the colour of indigo.

What do I gain by knowing that these spheres are poised and revolving round suns, and are subject to two attractions?

What affair is it of mine that the wind, that undulating air, is light and dry above, and dense and moist below?

What have I to say to this, that the moon marches round the earth, the earth round the sun, and the sun in turn round another sun? 15

What should I say as to this ramal-metre being 'sound' or 'apocopated,' or this rajas-metre maṣwi or *makhbūn*¹?

Or [of] accident, syntax, the letters, the correct and solemn intonation [of the Qur'ān], or of the pauses of the Kúfans or the junctions of the Baṣra school²?

Or of etymology, rhetoric, eloquence, style, expression, calligraphy, prosody or the varieties of poetical criticism?

Or of biography³, jurisprudence, principles [of Law], controversy, deduction, tradition, proof, exegesis, the Code and the Law?

Or of drawing, geometry, algebra, observations, chronology, arithmetic, mathematics and geography in all their aspects? 20

Or of Politics, the Religious Law, agriculture, mining, philology, National Rights, expenditure, taxation, loans and armies?

Or of medicine, symptoms, anatomy, the pulse and the stools, the properties of all the drugs, whether simple or compound?

Or of talismans, incantations, interpretation of dreams, alchemy, mechanics, astrology, ascendants, [magic] numbers, geomancy, cyphers and spells?

Or of the philosophical sciences, and logic, ancient and modern, or of cautionary glosses and the sophistries of texts?

O waste not the coin of your life on such sciences, for a whole world of men have suffered disappointment through such transactions! 25

Turn from these sciences to knowledge of the Religion of the Truth⁴, for, save knowledge of the Truth⁴, all is deceit and vanity.

¹ The full explanation of these terms will be found in Blochmann's Persian Prosody, or in any book treating of the metrical systems of the Arabs and Persians.

² The two great rival philological schools of early Islām.

³ 'Ilmū'r-Rijāl ("the science of notable men") means particularly the biography and authority of the transmitters of religious traditions.

⁴ Or God, which is the usual meaning of Ḥaqq amongst the Persians. Gibb (Ottoman Poetry, vol. i, p. 60, ad calc.) gives "the Fact" as a translation suggested by one of his Muslim friends.

Hearken not to the spells of Philosophy, which from end to end is folly¹, the themes of the materialist and the cynic are all ignorance and madness

Why dost thou consider the fancies of the naturalist as sciences?
Why dost thou assume the Divine sciences to be mere fancies?

What is the talk of these philosophers? All doubtful! What is the speech of these ignorant men? All conjecture!

Their sciences are [designed] to dispose of modesty, sincerity and purity, their arts are for [the promotion of] sin, mischief, guile and wantonness! 30

Their whole [idea] is the socialization of the earth and the communizing² of property, their whole [aim] is the diffusion of sin and the filling of their bellies!

Their ideas are all short sighted and their outlook narrow, their arts are all phantasy, and their conditions vile!

Had it not been for the barrier of the Holy Law against this Gog³, no one would have been secure of honour, property, or life

By God's Truth, the talk of this gang of materialists is the worst pestilence in the body of the Nation and the Kingdom!

By the Divine Knowledge thou wilt become the choicest product of the two worlds, by the cynic's philosophy thou wilt become the grandchild of an ape⁴! 35

Behold manifest today whatever the Prophet hath said, but whatever the philosopher hath said behold at this time discredited!

All their sciences are [derived] from the Prophets, but imperfectly, all their arts are from the Saints, but garbled

But, regarded fairly, man in this world is distinguished by science and knowledge from all beside.

¹ There is a word play here, of the kind called tajnis : zā'id, between falsafah (philosophy) and safah (folly)

² The early Bábís were often accused of holding communistic views like the ancient Persian heresiarch Mazdak. Such views are here explicitly repudiated

³ Alexander the Great is supposed to have built the Great Wall of China (hence called Sadd : Sikandar, "the Barrier of Alexander") to prevent the tribes of Gog and Magog (Yájuj wa Májuj) from overrunning the world

⁴ An evident allusion to the Darwinian theory

By knowledge and learning he finds his way to the Eternal Essence; by understanding and thought he attains to the Presence of the Why-less¹.

It is Study of which He says 'It is the most excellent of actions';
it is Thought whereof an hour 'is better than seventy [years].'

The great sages, such as Socrates, Hippocrates, Aristotle and Zeno, confess His Eternal Essence, 41

And so also Abú 'Alí [Avicenna], Euclid, Ptolemy, Thales, Plato, Hermes and Solon².

These sanctify Him at dusk and at dawn; these glorify Him in the morning and in the evening.

The world is a head wherein the sage is the intelligence; time is a body wherein the sciences are in place of the eyes.

But thou ridest with a slack rein, and the steed of the arts is restive; thou art weak and inexperienced, and the dappled charger of the sciences is vicious. 45

Not having read a line thou hast doubts as to the Eternal Lord:
wonderful the constitution in which antimony produces constipation!

'Seek learning from the cradle to the grave, even in China³,' from the knowledge of God, whereon trust and reliance may be placed.

Sages are dumbfounded at His wise aphorisms; men of letters are indebted to His pregnant sayings.

Natural laws are like bodies in manifestation and emergence;
Divine Truths are like spirits in occultation and latency.

In this illimitable expanse for lack of space illimitable worlds are buried in one another. 50

Common people see ordinary things, and distinguished people special things, according to their own measure: and He 'knows best what they describe⁴.'

A thousand Platos cannot fathom the essence of His humblest temporal work; how much less His own Eternal Essence?

The sphere and the stars move by the command of God: yea, the eyes and eyelids are affected by the soul.

¹ God is so called (Bí-chín) because none may question Him as to the reason of His actions.

² Doubtful. The original has Shílún, an evident error.

³ A well-known tradition of the Prophet.

⁴ Cf. Qur'án, xxiii, 98.

Through whom, if not by His command, is the movement of bodies?

By what, if not by the water, does the mill revolve?

For once in the way of wisdom look with the eye of reflection on this abode whereof but one quarter is habitable¹ 55

In each one of the mineral, vegetable and animal kingdoms are a thousand unseen worlds, manifest and hidden

Beyond thy intelligence is another over ruling Intelligence, within thy soul is another soul concealed

Behold the grain, which stands shoulder to shoulder with past Eternity behold the egg which is conjoined with Eternity to come¹

Hidden yet manifest in this latter are a hundred worlds of fowls and chickens, eternal yet temporal in that former are a hundred groves of fruit and branches

How canst thou pass through the street of Truth, thou, who comest not forth from the mansion of Nature? 60

Even as thou seest how the flow of life from this world reaches the child's inward parts through its mother's aid,

So, if aid come not from the Supernatural to this world, by God,
this world will be ruined¹

For within the narrow straits of this world God hath worlds from the Supernatural beyond limit or computation.

Contrary to universal custom, behold a group of intelligent men voluntarily and naturally plunging into blood²,

Contrary to nature, a company content with pain and grief, contrary to nature, a party gladly enduring the cruelty of spite 65

Behold a community renouncing the world by natural inclination, see a people contentedly suffering exile from their native land!

Behold a party all slain eagerly and joyfully, behold a throng all imprisoned with alacrity and delight,

A whole series [of victims] voluntarily enduring various torments, a whole class by natural inclination [involved] in afflictions of every kind,

All intoxicated and singing songs³, but not from wine, all self effaced and dissipated, but not from opium¹

¹ I.e. the world, whereof but one quarter is supposed to be capable of sustaining human life

² This and the following verses refer to the readiness with which the Bábís suffer martyrdom

³ Like Sulaymán Khán, for instance See p 196 supra, and my Year amongst the Persians, p 102

How hath Daniel given news of today ! How hath the word of Isaiah taken effect now¹ ! 70

How hath the promise of all the Scriptures been fulfilled, precisely in conformity with the Qur'án, the Pentateuch, the Books of the Prophets and the Gospels !

Now in the Abode of Peace [Baghdád], now in Jerusalem, now in Mount Carmel, now in Edom, and now in Sion,

The Holy and Fortunate Land hath been determined, the Blessed and Auspicious Day hath been fixed.

'How came the Truth [God] to us ? Even as our Arabian Prophet and our guides the Imáms indicated to us².

How according to promise did the Eternal Beauty³ reveal His beauty, from whose Blessed Beauty the whole world augured well ? 75

How did God become apparent in the Valley of 'the Fig' ? How did He become visible in the Mount of 'the Olive⁴' ?

How does He conquer without an army while all [others] are conquered ? How does He triumph unaided while mankind are helpless [before Him] ?

Without the aid of learning He intones the sweetest verses⁵ ; without the help of others He lays down the Best Law.

Why should we not see a hundred thousand souls His sacrifice ?
Why should we not see a hundred thousand hearts bewitched
by Him ?

By the movement of His Pen [men's] hearts and breasts are moved ;
by the calmness of His Glance cometh Peace without and within. 80

¹ The fulfilment of these prophecies is especially discussed in a Bábí work entitled Istidláliyá addressed to the Jews, and in English by Ibráhím Khayru'lláh in Bahá'u'lláh, the Splendour of God. To give only one instance, "a time and times and half a time" is explained as three years and a half of 360 days each = 1260. Now A.H. 1260 (A.D. 1844) was the year of the Báb's "Manifestation."

² This verse is entirely in Arabic.

³ I.e. Bahá'u'lláh, who was most commonly entitled by his followers Jamál-i-Mubárak, "the Blessed Beauty," or "Perfection."

⁴ The reference is to Súra xcv of the Qur'án, entitled "the Fig."

⁵ Not, of course, verses of poetry (abyát), but the revealed "signs" (áyát) which constitute His credentials.

The turbans of the doctors¹ did not extinguish His Torch, the hosts of the captains did not overthrow His Standard

Behold how His Word permeates the world as the soul the body, behold how His Influence throbs in the spirit like the blood in the veins!

The hostility of His foes does but [attempt to] crush water in a mortar, the enmity of His rivals is but as wind in the desert

The duration of His command in the heart keeps company with the Spirit², the continuance of His authority in the world is coeval with the ages

What a fire hath He kindled in [men's] hearts, such that no water can quench this furnace! 85

His authority comprehendeth the terrestrial and the subterranean regions, His fame hath passed beyond China, India and Japan

With one glance He hath conquered two hundred countries and districts, with one [stroke of His] Pen He hath taken a hundred castles and fortresses

How by His summons to the Faith hath He established a Church against whom until the Resurrection no opponent shall prevail!

He sought help from none to found His Law, yea, God did not raise up the heavens on pillars³

When, when wilt thou admit His Grace and Mercy? How, how canst thou deny His Knowledge and Power? 90

Thou, who canst not order the affairs of a single household, do not contend with Him who orders all the ages!

Thou, who knowest not what is expedient in thine own affairs, do not obstinately strive with the Lord of the Kingdom of 'Be and it is'⁴

Thou dost dispute with thy father about a farthing's damage these⁵ surrender life and wealth for His sake, and deem them selves favoured

Alas a thousandfold that I have a thousand thoughts which I cannot harmonize with these restricted rhymes!

Words have escaped my control, yet [the tale of] my heart's pain is incomplete, now I return again to the same refrain 95

¹ I.e. of Law and Religion It is, I think, misleading to translate
'Ulamá as "clergy"

² I.e. lasts as long as life endures

³ See Qur'án, xiii, 2 and xxxi, 9

⁴ Ibid., ii, 111, iii, 42, etc

⁵ I.e. the followers of Bahá'u'lláh

In this chameleon-like¹ age I have a heart led astray by all kinds of trifles.

The time preens itself like a peacock in varied hues ; the sphere displays its blandishments like a chameleon in divers colours.

Sufficient is thy burning, O Sun, for my heart is roasted ! sufficient is thy turning, O Heaven, for my body is ground to powder !

I have a head, but what can it do with all this passion ? I have a heart, but what can it do with all this trickery ?

Where can the soul find endurance and steadfastness except in the Beloved ? Where can the heart find patience and rest save in the Heart's Desire ?

100

At one time I say to myself, 'Perfection is a disaster'²: at another I laugh to myself, 'Madness is of many kinds.'

At one time my fancy rushes through the plain like an engine ; at another my desire soars in the air like a balloon.

I have broken away from the body, but life will not leave the body ; I have abandoned life, yet the heart is not tranquil.

My heart is wearied of this ruined mansion of merit and talent : welcome the kingdoms of Love ! welcome the realms of Madness³ !

The hobble of understanding hath snapped on the leg of the dromedary of my luck⁴ : O God, where is my Laylá, for I have become Majnún (mad) ?

105

Save the Divine Will [exercised] through the channel of Omnipotence, who can drag me forth from this whirlpool ?

Behold, the Will of God is 'He whom God willeth⁵, with whose will the Will of God is conjoined ;

¹ I.e. ever changing, inconstant.

² Perfection exposes the owner to special risks, and the Evil Eye is called by the Arabs 'Aynul-Kamál' because it especially menaces whatever is perfect of its kind. Cf. p. 117, n. 2 supra.

³ So Ḥáfiz: "If the understanding knew how happy the heart is under the locks of the Beloved, the intelligent would go mad for the sake of our chains." (Ed. Rosenzweig-Schwannau, vol. i, p. 28, ll. 7-8.)

⁴ It is impossible to render the word-plays between 'aql' (understanding) and 'iqál' (hobble, tether, shackle fastened round a camel's knee to keep it from straying), and 'bakhtí' (dromedary) and 'bakht' (fortune). Even when treating of the most solemn themes few Persian poets can resist such echolalia.

⁵ This is one of the titles given by the followers of Bahá'u'lláh to his

The unique Servant of Bahá'í ('Abdu'l-Bahá), made such by the Will of God, Who 'When He willeth aught, saith "Be!" and it is!'; A King to whom God shows us the way, a Moon who guides us towards God;

'God's Secret,' the fortunate Pearl of the Ocean of Union, who is the Pearl concealed in the shell of God's Knowledge; 110

Beside his excellence, excellence lacks its excellency; beside his bounty Ma'n² is a withholder of benefits

His enemy is a foe unto himself whom even his friends renounce, he who obeys him is secure of himself and trusted by mankind

In praise of the countenance of Him round whom the [Divine] Names revolve I would sing psalms, were I granted permission by Him

I continued to utter in praise of His Essence what God [Himself] hath said, not the verse of 'the poets whom the erring follow'³.

O Vice gerent [Khalifa] of the All merciful, O Ark of Noah, be not grieved because the Truth hath been weakened by violation [of the Covenant] 115

In the Dispensation of Adam, Qábil [Cain] cruelly and despitely shed his brother's blood without fault or sin [on his part]

In the Dispensation of Noah, when Canaan⁴ broke his father's Covenant, by the disgrace of a repudiated affiliation he was drowned in the Sea of Shame

In the Dispensation of Jacob, Joseph the faithful was imprisoned in the bonds of servitude by the wiles of his brethren

In the Dispensation of Moses from amongst the children of Israel one was such as Aaron and another such as Qárun⁵

In the Dispensation of the Spirit of God [Jesus Christ] from amongst son 'Abbás Efendí, also called Sirr-i'lláh ("God's Secret"), and after his father's death 'Abdu'l-Bahá.

¹ See the note on verse 92 above (p 215, n 4)

² Ma'n ibn Zayd is proverbial for his courage, virtue and generosity. For an account of him, see Zotenberg's Chronique de Tabari (1874), vol iv, pp 373 et seqq. This verse affords another instance of echolalia (Ma'n, mánu', má'un)

³ Qur'án, xxvi, 224, on account of which the whole Súra is entitled the "Chapter of the Poets"

⁴ According to Muhammadan tradition, he was a son or grandson of Noah, who, on account of his unbelief, was not saved in the Ark, but perished in the Flood. See Qur'án, xi, 42, and commentary thereon

⁵ See the note on verse 4 of this poem (p 209, n 2 supra)

the Disciples one in cruelty became like Judas [Iscaiot] and one in sincerity like Simon [Peter]. 120

In the Dispensation of His Holiness the Seal of the Prophets [Muḥammad] one of his people was in faithfulness Abú Dharr and another Abú Sha'yún¹.

In the Dispensation of His Holiness the Supreme [the Báḅ] two persons were [entitled] Waḥíd²; one was faithful and brave, the other a cowardly traitor.

In the Dispensation of the Most Splendid Countenance [Bahá'u'lláh] it must likewise needs be so, one faithful to the Covenant, the other a vile violator thereof³.

I will not open my lips to curse, but God says, 'Whosoever breaketh my Covenant is accursed.'

This people wilfully shut their eyes to the Truth, for the Truth is apparent from the False in all circumstances. 125

I swear by Thy Face, O Exemplar of all peoples! I swear by Thy Hair, O Leader of all the ages!

I swear by Thy Substance, to wit the Majesty of the Absolute! I swear by Thy Truth, to wit the Reality of the Why-less⁴!

I swear by Thy Countenance, to wit His [God's] dawning Countenance! I swear by thy Secret, to wit His Treasured Secret!

By the earth at Thy Feet, to wit the Alchemy of Desire! By the dust on Thy Road, to wit the tutty of [our] eyes!

¹ I can find no mention of such a person, and suspect that the reading is corrupt.

² The title Waḥíd ("Unique") appears to have been taken by the early Báḅís as numerically equivalent to Yaḥyá, but this equivalency can only be obtained by writing the letter yá (ی) in the latter name only twice instead of three times (یحیی for يحيى). Thus misspelt, it, like وحید, would yield the number 28. At any rate, as we learn from Mírzá Jání's Nuqtatu'l-Káf (Gibb Series, vol. xv, pp. 243, 250, 257, 259) the title was first given to Sayyid Yaḥyá of Dáráb, the leader of the Nayríz rebellion, and on his death was transferred to Mírzá Yaḥyá Ṣubḥ-i-Azal, the half-brother and rival of Bahá'u'lláh, who is therefore called "the Second Waḥíd" (وحید ثانی). It is, of course, to him that Na'im applies the term "cowardly traitor."

³ The allusion here is to Bahá'u'lláh's sons (half-brothers) 'Abbás Efendí 'Abdu'l-Bahá and Muḥammad 'Alí, between whom arose the same dispute about succession as arose in the previous generation between their father and his half-brother Ṣubḥ-i-Azal.

⁴ See p. 212, n. 1 supra.

By the spot pressed by Thy foot in the Land of 'the Fig'! By the place of adoration of mankind adorned by 'the Olive'¹! 130

[By all these I swear] that my heart cannot remain tranquil without praising Thee, for the debtor cannot lay his head tranquilly on the pillow

Yet how can Na'im utter Thy praises? [He is as one] unproved who steps into the Oxus.

May he who obeys Thy command be secure from the deceits of the Flesh! May he who is the captive of Thy thralls be protected from the delusions of the time!¹ 133

Some apology is needed for quoting and translating in full so long a poem by an author so modern, so little known outside the circle of his own coreligionists and, as he himself admits (verse 94), so comparatively unskilful in the manipulation of rhyme and metre. On the other hand the Bábí and the subsequent and consequent Bahá'í movement constitutes one of the most important and typical manifestations of the Persian spirit in our own time, and this poem, wherein an ardent enthusiasm struggles with a somewhat uncouth terminology, does on the whole faithfully represent the Bahá'í Weltanschauung. The following brief analysis may help the reader better to understand the line of thought which it pursues

Analysis of the above poem of Na'im and reasons for including it in this book

Analysis of Na'im's poem

Dissatisfaction of the author with the ordinary pursuits of life, and recognition of the vanity of worldly wealth, pomp and learning (verses 1-25)

True religion celebrated as the only thing which can satisfy the human soul, and materialism, socialism and communism condemned (verses 26-37)

True wisdom and its seekers and expounders including the ancient Greek philosophers, praised (verses 38-48)

¹ See p 214, n 4 supra

The wonder of the Universe, which is permeated throughout by God's Spirit (verses 49-60).

Man's need of Divine Revelation, which is as the need of a little child for its mother's milk (verses 61-63).

Eagerness of the followers of the Báb and Bahá'u'lláh for suffering and martyrdom (verses 64-69).

Fulfilment of former prophecies in this Dispensation (verses 70-74).

Proofs of the truth of Bahá'u'lláh's claim (verses 75-94).

The poet resumes his theme with a new maṭla', or initial verse (95), and first speaks of himself and his own condition (verses 95-105). He next passes to the praise of Bahá'u'lláh's son 'Abbás Efendí, better known after his father's death (on May 28, 1892) as 'Abdu'l-Bahá (verses 106-114), and offers consolation for the antagonism of his half-brother and the Náqizín, or "Covenant-breakers," who supported him, by numerous analogies drawn from previous Dispensations (verses 115-125). The last eight verses (126-133) constitute the peroration. The understanding of the poem, of course, presupposes a fairly complete knowledge of the history, doctrines and spiritual outlook of the Bábís and Bahá'ís, and to render it intelligible I have had to annotate the translation to an extent which I regret. It is, so far as my knowledge goes, the most ambitious attempt to expound this doctrine and point of view in verse.

It might be expected that I should include in this section some account of the later mystical poetry of the Šúfis, but, though such poetry continues to be produced down to the present day, I have met with none which attains the level of Saná'í, 'Aṭṭár, Jalálu'd-Dín Rúmí, Maḥmúd Shabistarí, Jámí, and the other great mystics discussed in the previous volumes of this work. There was, perhaps, little new to be said, and little that could be better expressed than it had been already, while Little novelty or advance in later

Šúfí poetry.

under the Safawís at any rate circumstances were particularly unfavourable to the expression of this class of ideas. The beautiful Tarjít-band of Hátíf of Isfáhán, which will be given at the end of the next chapter, is the only masterpiece of Suff poetry produced in the eighteenth century with which I am acquainted.

(5) The Tasníf or Ballad

This class of verse, ephemeral as our own topical and comic songs, leaves far fewer and slighter traces in literature than its actual importance would lead us to expect. A tasníf about the Sálub Dfuan beginning

The Tasníf or popular topical ballad

دلگشارا ساحت زیر نرسرک
دلگشارا ساحت با چوب و فلک
حب دلگشا حیف دلگشا

("He made [the garden of] Dil gushá under 'the Slide',
He made Dil gushá with the sticks and the stocks Alas for Dil gushá! Alas for Dil gushá!") was the most popular ballad when I was in Shíráz in the spring of 1888¹, but it is probably now as little remembered as an almost contemporary ribald English satire on a certain well-known Member of Parliament who "upset the milk in bringing it home from Chelsea." I have no doubt that the Probable antiquity of the tasníf

tasníf or ballad sung by the troubadour and wandering minstrel existed in Persia from very early—perhaps even from pre-Islamic—times.

Bárbad and Sakísá may have sung such topical songs to Khusraw Parwíz the Sásanian thirteen hundred years ago, as Rudagí almost certainly did four centuries later to the Sámánid prince who was his patron², and a fragment of a typical taṣnīf (called by the curious name of ḥarāra) sung in Iṣfahān on the occasion of the capture and execution of the heretic and assassin Aḥmad ibn 'Aṭṭāsh', is recorded in the history of the Saljūqs composed by Abū Bakr Najmu'd-Dīn Muḥammad ar-Rāwandī early in the thirteenth century of our era, under the title of Rāḥatū's-Ṣudūr wa Āyatū's-Surūr.

¹ See my Year amongst the Persians, p. 283.

² Cf. vol. 1 of my List Hist. of Persia, pp. 14-18.

The authorship of these taṣnīfs is seldom known, and they are hardly ever committed to writing, though my friend the late George Grahame, when Consul at Shīrāz in 1905, very kindly caused a small selection of two score of those most popular at the time in that city and in Tīhrān, Iṣfahān, Rasht, Tabriz, and elsewhere, to be written down for me; and a selection, adapted as far as possible to the

An English rendering of twelve taṣnīfs. piano, was published in or about 1904 under the title of Twelve Persian Folk-Songs collected and arranged for voice and pianoforte by Blair Fairchild: English version of the words by Alma Strettell (Novello & Co., London and New York). In this excellent little book the songs are well set, well rendered into English, and intelligibly if not ideally transliterated, and the following sentence from the short prefatory note shows how sensible the compiler was to the indescribable charm of Persian minstrelsy:

"But one needs the setting of the Orient to realize what these songs are: the warm, clear Persian night; the lamps and lanterns shining on the glowing colours of native dresses; the surrounding darkness where dusky shadows hover; the strange sounds of music; voices, sometimes so beautiful, rising and falling in persistent monotony—all this is untranslatable, but the impression left on one is so vivid and so full of enchantment that one longs to preserve it in some form."

Most of these taṣnīfs are very simple love-songs, in which lines from Ḥāfiz and other popular poets are sometimes incorporated, the topical, polemical and satirical class is much smaller, though in some ways more interesting as well as more ephemeral. A parody or parallel of such a tasnif may be produced to accord with fresh circumstances, as happens nearer home with the Irish an t-Sean Bean Bocto and the Welsh mochyn du. An instance of such an adaptation is afforded by the second poem cited in my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia (pp 174-9). Of course in the tasnif the air is at least as important as the words, and a proper study of them would require a knowledge of Persian music, which, unhappily, I do not possess. Indeed I should think that few Europeans had mastered it both in practice and theory, or could even enumerate the twelve maqáms and their twenty-four derivatives (shu'ba)¹

¹ Lit. Hist. of Persia, vol. ii, pp. 313-16; and Rāḥatū's-Ṣudūr (E. J. W. Gibb Memorial, New Series, vol. ii), pp. 161 and 497-8 (note on ḥarāra).

(6) Modern political verse

Of this I have treated so fully in my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia (Cambridge, 1914) that it is unnecessary to enlarge further on it in this place. It is a product of the Revolution of 1905 and the succeeding years, and in my opinion shows real originality, merit and humour. Should space permit, I may perhaps add a few further specimens when I come to speak of the modern journalism with which it is so closely associated, and which, indeed, alone rendered it possible. The most notable authors of this class of verse include 'Árif and Dakhaw of Qazwín, Ashraf of Gílán, and Bahár of Mashhad, all of whom, so far as I know, are still living, while the two first named are comparatively young men. Portraits of all of them, and some particulars of their lives, will be found in my book above mentioned.

¹ One of the clearest and most concise treatises on this subject which I have seen is contained in a manuscript from the library of the late Sir A. Houtum Schindler (now in my possession) entitled Bahjat ur Rawdy.

CHAPTER VI.

POETS OF THE CLASSICAL TRADITION. PRE-QÁJÁR PERIOD (A.D. 1500-1800).

Almost any educated Persian can compose tolerable verses, and the great majority do so, while the number of those who habitually indulge in this pastime on a considerable scale and have produced diwáns of poetry has been at all times fairly large.

Widespread poetical talent
in Persia.

Moreover this poetry is as a rule so conventional, and the language in which it is written so unchanged during the period under discussion, that if a hundred ghazals, or odes, by a hundred different poets who flourished during the last four centuries were selected, avoiding those which contained any reference to current events, and omitting the concluding verse of each, wherein the poet generally inserts his takhalluṣ, or nom de guerre, it is extremely doubtful whether any critic could, from their style, arrange them even approximately in chronological order, or distinguish the work of a poet contemporary with Sháh Isma‘íl the Ṣafawí from

Difficulty of discrimination between noteworthy and mediocre poets.

one who flourished in the reign of Násiru’d-Dín Sháh Qájár. Nor do the tadhkiras, or Memoirs of Poets, give us much help in making a selection, for when discussing contemporaries the author is very apt to make mention of his personal friends, and to ignore those whom he dislikes or of whom he disapproves. Thus influential or amiable rhymsters of mediocre ability are often included, while heretics, satirists and persons distasteful or indifferent to the author, though of greater talent, are often omitted. When Riḍá-qulí Khán “Hidáyat,” author of that great modern anthology entitled

Majma'u'l-Fusahá ('the Concourse of the Eloquent')¹, comes to speak of his contemporaries, we constantly come across such expressions as

با مش ارتباطی خاص بود و مرا بحبابش اخلاص

"He had a special connection with me, and I a sincere regard for him", "I saw him in Shíráz", "I repeatedly called on him and he used to open the gates of conversation before my face", "I sometimes get a talk with him", "for a while he established himself in Fárs, where at that time the writer also was living, I used constantly to have the honour of conversing with him, for he used to open the gates of gladness before the faces of his friends", and so forth. How many of the 359 "contemporary poets" mentioned in this work² were included on such personal grounds rather than on account of any conspicuous merit? I once went through the list with my excellent old friend Hájji Mírzá Yahyá Dawlatábídí, a man of wide culture and possessing a most extensive knowledge of Persian poetry, of which he must know by heart many thousands of verses, and asked him which of them he considered really notable. Out of the whole 359 he indicated five (Sarbá of Káshán, Furúghí of Bistám, Qá'ání of Shíráz, Mijmar of Isfahán, and Nashát of Isfahán) as of the first class, two (Wisál of Shíráz, and the author himself, Hidayat) as of the second, and two (Surúsh of Isfahán and Wiqár of Shíráz) as of the third,

¹ Composed in 1283/1867-8 and lithographed in 2 vols at Tíhrán in 1295/1878

² Vol II, p 64, s v Ághá : Shíráz

³ Ibid, p 67, s v Ázád

⁴ Ibid, p 68, s v Mírzá Abu'l Qásim : Shíráz

⁵ Ibid, s v Ummíd of Kirmínsháh

⁶ Ibid, p 72, s v Ulfat of Káshán

⁷ They occupy pp 58-679 of vol. II, but were not all strictly contemporary, a few being as early as the first half of the eighteenth century that is, he regarded about one out of every forty mentioned as having a claim to real distinction.

In any case, therefore, a very rigorous selection must be made, the more so when it is a question of poets whose beauty does not depend solely on form, and can, therefore, be preserved in some degree in translation. In making this selection I have included selection.

Criterion of

such poets as enjoy any considerable fame in their own country, and any others whom I happen to have come across in the course of my reading (a mere fraction of the total number)-who make any special appeal to myself. It is doubtful how far a foreigner is competent to criticize; he may say that he personally admires or dislikes a particular poet, but I doubt if he should go so far as to class him definitely on

Divergence of foreign from native taste.

this ground as good or bad. The taste of even the Turks and Indians, who are more familiar with Persian poetry than we can easily become, differs very considerably from that of the Persians themselves, who must be reckoned the most competent judges of their own literature. In this connection I should like to direct the reader's attention to a very apposite passage in P. G. Hamerton's *Intellectual Life*¹. Speaking of a Frenchman who had learned English entirely from books, without being able either to speak it, or to understand it when spoken, and "had attained what would certainly in the case of a dead language be considered a very high degree of scholarship indeed," he says: "His appreciation of our authors, especially of our poets, differed so widely from English criticism and English feeling that it was evident he did not understand them as we understand them. Two things especially proved this: he frequently mistook declamatory versification of the most mediocre quality for poetry of an elevated order; whilst, on the other hand, his ear failed to perceive the music of the musical poets, as ¹ New ed., London, Macmillan & Co., 1890, pp. 86-94.

Byron and Tennyson How could he hear their music, he to whom our English sounds were all unknown? Transform this Frenchman into an Indian or a Turk, and substitute "Persian" for "English" and 'Qa'ání" for "Byron and Tennyson," and the above remarks admirably apply to most Turkish and Indian appreciations of Persian poetry

Of the poets who died between A D 1500 and 1600 some ten or a dozen deserve at least a brief mention, of those between A D 1600 and 1700 about the same number, between A D 1700 and 1800 only one or two, between A D 1800 and 1885 about a score. Those who outlived the date last mentioned may be conveniently grouped with the moderns, who will be discussed separately. The following are the poets of whom I propose to speak briefly, arranged in chronological order of their deaths (the dates of birth are seldom recorded) in the four periods indicated above

I. Between A D 1500 and 1600 (A H 906-1009)

Several of the poets who really belong to this period have been already mentioned in my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, namely, Mír 'Alí Shír Nawá'í, d 906/1500-1 (pp 505-6), Husayn Wá'iz i Káshifí, d 910/1504-5 (pp 503-4), Banná'í, killed in the massacre at Qarshí in 918/1512-3 (p 457), and Hilálí, killed by 'Ubaydu'lláh Khán the Uzbek as a Shí'a in 936/1529-30 (p 459). Of the last named only need anything further be said here

1 Hátifí (d 927/Dec 1520 or Jan 1521)

Mawláná 'Abdu'lláh Hátifí of Kharjird in Khurásán derives his chief fame from the fact that he was the nephew of the great Jámí, who, according to the well known story¹, tested his poetical talent before allowing him to write by bidding him compose

Hát ífí
(d. 927/1520)

¹ See besides the Persian tadhkiras Sir Gore Ouseley's Biographical Notices of Persian Poets (London, 1846), pp 143-5 a "parallel" to the following verses in Firdawsī's celebrated satire¹ on Sultān Maḥmūd of Ghazna:

درختی که تلخ است وی را سرشت
 کُرش در نشانی بباغ بهشت
 و از جوی خُلدش بهنگامِ آب
 به بیخ انگبین ریزی و شهدِ ناب
 سرانجام گوهر بکار آورد
 همان میوه تلخ بار آورد

"A tree whereof the nature is bitter, even if thou plantest it in the Garden of Paradise,
 And if, at the time of watering, thou pourest on its roots nectar and fine honey from the River of Paradise²,
 It will in the end give effect to its nature, and bring forth that same bitter fruit."

Hátifī produced the following "parallel," which his uncle Jámī approved, except that he jocularly observed that the neophyte had "laid a great many eggs on the way"³:

اگر بیضه زاغ ظلمت سرشت نهی زیرِ طاوسِ باغ بهشت
 بهسنگامِ آن بیضه پروردنش ز انجیرِ جنتِ دهی ارزنش
 دهی آبش از چشمه سلسبیل بدان بیضه دم در دمد جبرئیل
 شود عاقبت بیضه زاغ زاغ برد رنچ بیهوده طاوسِ باغ

"If thou should'st place an egg of the crow compounded of darkness under the Peacock of the Garden of Paradise,
 And if at the time of nourishing that egg thou should'st give it grain from the Fig-tree of the Celestial Gardens,

¹ The satire is given at the end (pp. 63-6) of the Persian Introduction to Turner Macan's edition of the Shāh-nāma (Calcutta, 1829). These verses occur on p. 66, ll. 5-7.

² Probably the celestial river of Salsabīl is intended.

³ Majma'ul-Fuṣṣahā, vol. ii, p. 54. Hátifī's verses are given on the last page (436) of vol. iii of Ziyā Bey's Kharābāt.

And should st water it from the Fountain of Salsabil, and Gabriel should breathe his breath into that egg,
 In the end the crow's egg will become a crow, and vain will be the trouble of the Peacock of Paradise"

Hâtîfî was one of the innumerable poets who strove to compose a "Quintet" (Khamṣa) rivalling that of Nizâmî of Ganja. Two of his five subjects were the same the romances of *Layla and Majnun*¹ and of Shîrîn and Khusrâw, the Haft Manzar formed the parallel to the Haft Paykar, while the *Tîmur nâma*² formed the counterpart to the Sikandar nâma, except that, as Hâtîfî boasts³, his poem was based on historical truth instead of on fables and legends.
 He also began, but did not complete, a similar historical poem on the achievements of Shâh Isma'îl the Safawî, who paid him a surprise visit as he was returning from a campaign in Khurâsan in 917/1511-12. This poem is in the style and metre of the Shah nama of Firdawsî, and is entitled *Shah nama i Hazrat i Shâh Isma'îl*⁴.

Hâtîfî belongs essentially, like so many other representatives of Art and Letters in the early Safawî period, to the circle of Herât formed under the liberal patronage of the later Tîmurids.

2 Bâbâ Fighânî of Shîraz (d 925/1519)

Fighânî appears to be one of those poets who are much more highly esteemed in India than in their own country, for while Shiblî in his Shîru'l 'Ajam (vol III, Fighânî
 (d 925/1519) pp 27-30), like Wâlih in his *Riyadu sh Shu'ara*⁵, deems him the creator of a new style of poetry.

¹ Published at Calcutta by Sir W Jones in 1788.

² Lithographed at Lucknow in Oct 1869. It comprises about 4500 verses.

³ Rieu's British Museum Persian Catalogue, p 654.

⁴ There is another similar and homonymous poem by Qâsimî. See B M P C, pp 660-1. The Library of King's College, Cambridge, possesses a MS of this latter (Pote Collection, No 238).

⁵ See Rieu's Pers Cat, p 651.

Riḍá-qulí Khán only accords him a brief mention in his *Riyádu'l-ʿArifín*¹ and entirely omits him in his larger Majma'u'l-Fuṣahá, while the notices of him in the Ātash-kada and the Tuḥfa-i-Sámi are very brief. He was of humble origin, the son of a cutler² or a vintner according to different accounts, and seems to have lived the life of a somewhat antinomian dervish. In Khurásán, whither he went from Shíráz, he was unappreciated, even by the great Jámí, with whom he forgathered; but at Tabríz he subsequently found a more appreciative patron in Sulṭán Ya'qúb the Prince of the "White Sheep" Turkmáns. He repented in later life and retired to the Holy City of Mashhad, so that perhaps this verse of his ceased to be applicable:

آلوده شراب فغانی بخاك رفت ' آه ار ملائكش كفن تازه بو كند

"Stained with wine Fighání sank into the earth: alas if the Angels should sniff at his fresh shroud³!"

The longest extracts from his poems are given in the Majálishu'l-Mil'mínín, but these are all qaṣídas in praise of 'Alí, presumably composed towards the end of his life, and, though they may suffice to prove him a good Shí'a, they are hardly of a quality to establish his reputation as a great poet.

3. Ummídí (or Umídí) of Ṭíhrán (d. 925/1519 or 930/1523-4).

Little is known of Umídí except that his proper name was Arjásp⁴, that he was a pupil of the celebrated philosopher

¹ Lithographed at Ṭíhrán, 1305/1887-8, p. 122.

² On this account he originally wrote verse under the "pen-name" of Sakkákí.

³ Lest they should by the smell of the wine know him for the toper he was.

⁴ One is tempted to conjecture from this name that he may have been a Zoroastrian, but I have found no further evidence to support this supposition.

Jalálu'd-Dín Dawání, that his skill was in the qasída rather than the ghazal, that he was on bad terms with his fellow-townsmen, on whom he wrote many satires, and that he was finally killed in Tíhrán in a quarrel about a piece of land, at the instigation of Qiwámu'd-Dín Núr-bakhshí Námí, one of his pupils, composed the following verses and chronogram on his death

نادرِ عصرِ اُمیدی مطلوبم¹ کو با حق شهید شد ناگاه²
 شبِ بحوابِ من آمد و فرمود³ گایِ رحالِ درونِ من آگاه⁴
 سهرِ تاریخِ قتلِ من نویس⁵ آه از خونِ با حقِ من آه⁶

"The much wronged Umídí, wonder of the Age, who suddenly and contrary to right became a martyr,
 Appeared to me at night in a dream and said, 'O thou who art aware of my inward state,
 Write for the date of my murder' "Alas for my blood unjustly shed, alas!"

Reference has already been made (p 59 supra) to a qasída composed by him in praise of Najm-i-Thant, and probably his poetry consisted chiefly of panegyrics, though he also wrote a Sáql nama ("Book of the Cup-bearer") of the stereotyped form. Manuscripts of his poems are very rare, but there is one in the British Museum², comprising, however, only 17 leaves, and even these few poems were collected long after his death by command of Sháh Safí. Mention is, however, made of him in most of the tadhkiras, and the Átash kada cites 24 verses from his Sáql nama, ¹ This chronogram gives A.H. 925 (A.D. 1519), but 930/1523-4 is the date given by Sám Mírzá, and 929/1522-3 in the Ahsanú't-Tawárikh, and, by implication, in the Haft Iqlim.

² Or. 3642, ff 180-197. See Rieu's Persian Supplement, p 269. The author of the Haft Iqlim, writing more than seventy years after the death of Umídí his fellow townsman and apparently kinsman, says that in his day the well known verses of the poet consisted of 17 qasidas, 3 ghazals, a few fragments and quatrains, and the Sáql nama.

232 POETS OF THE CLASSICAL TRADITION [PT II and 70 verses from his other poems. Amongst these are the following, also given in the Majma'u'l-Fuṣṣahā (vol. ii pp. 7-8):

رواقِ مدرسه گر سرنگون شود سهل است،
 قصورِ میکردهء عشقِ را مباد قصور،
 بنای مدرسه از جنسِ عالی و سافل،
 خراب کشت و خرابات همچنان معمور،

"If the College hall should be turned upside down it matters little;
 but may no injury befall the halls of the Wine-houses of Love!
 The College buildings, high and low, were destroyed, while the taverns continued to flourish just the same."

تو ترکِ نیم مستی من مرغِ نیم بسمل،
 گارِ تو از من آسان کامِ من از تو مشکل،
 تو خوی چکانی از رخ من خون فشانم از دل،
 تو ترکِ نیم مستی من مرغِ نیم بسمل،

دنبالِ آن مسافر از ضعف و نا توانی،
 بر خیزم و نشینم چون گرد تا بمنزل،
 کو بختِ آنکه گیرم مستش ز خانهء زین،
 و آن ساعدِ بلورین در گردنم حمایل،

خنجرِ کشی و ساغرِ اهلِ وفا سراسر،
 خون خورده در برابرِ جان داده در مقابل،
 مداحیم چو شد طی بشنو حکایتِ ری،
 ویرانه ایست در وی دیوانه ایست عامل،

دیوانهء که تدبیر در وی نکرده تأثیر،
 دیوانهء که زنجیرِ او را نکرده عاقل،
 دیوانه ایست پُر فن دیرینه دشمنِ من،
 از وی مباش ایمن وز من مباش غافل،

دیوانه ایست پُر فن دیرینه دشمنِ من،
 از وی مباش ایمن وز من مباش غافل،

بر داور سجدان این نکته ایست پنهان
 'کاندیشه' پریشان سود بستم مائل
 طعم ز هر که بودی گوی سخن ربودی
 'اما اگر بودی در خانه ام محصل'

"Thou art a half-drunk Turk, I am a half slain bird¹, thy affair with me is easy, my desire of thee is difficult.

Thou settest thy foot in the field, I wash my hands of life, thou causest sweat to drip from thy cheek, I pour blood from my heart

Behind that traveller in weakness and helplessness I rise up and subside like the dust until the halting place [is reached]

When shall the luck be mine to lift him drunken from the saddle, while that crystal clear arm embraces my neck like a sword belt?

Thou bearest a dagger and a goblet the faithful with one accord drink blood beside thee and give their lives before thee

Now that my scroll of praise is rolled up, hearken to the tale of Ray it is a ruin wherein a madman is governor

A madman on whom counsel produced no effect, a madman whom chains did not render sensible

He is a madman full of craft, my old enemy, be not secure of him, and be not heedless of me

From the arbiter of eloquence this point is hidden, that a distracted mind is not disposed to verse

My genius would snatch the ball² of verse from all and sundry, if only the bailiff were not in my house !'

4 and 5 The two Ahlís

These two homonymous poets, the one of Turshíz in Khurásán (d 934/1527-8) and the other of Shíráz (d 942/1535-6), of both of whom the names are more familiar than the works, must, as Rieu has pointed out³, be carefully distinguished. Both are ignored by Ridá qulí Khán, and both belong,

Ahlí of Turshíz
 (d 934/1527)
 and Ahlí of Shíráz
 (d. 942/1535)

¹ See p 166, n 1 supra

² This common simile is derived from the game of polo

³ Persian Catalogue, pp 657-8 See also Ethé's India Office Persian Catalogue, col 785, No 1432, where a very valuable autograph MS, made in 920/1514, is described !

the former actually, the latter spiritually, to the Herát school which gathered round Sultán Husayn and Mír 'Alí Shír. This school, to which also belonged Zuhúrí (d. 1024/1615), likewise of Turshíz, seems never to have been popular in Persia, except, perhaps, in their own day in Khurásán, but enjoys a much more considerable reputation in India, where Zuhárí, whose very name is almost unknown in Persia, enjoys an extraordinary, and, as I think, quite undeserved fame, especially as a writer of extremely florid and bombastic prose. Ahlí of Shíráz excelled especially in elaborately ingenious word-plays (tajnísát) and other rhetorical devices.

6. Hilálí (killed in 935/1528-9).

Hilálí, though born in Astarábád, the chief town of the Persian Province of Gurgán, was by race a Chaghatáy

Turk, and was in his youth patronized by Mír
Hilálí
(d. 935/1528). 'Alí Shír Nawá'í. His most famous poem, entitled Sháh u Darwísh, or Sháh u Gadá ("the King and the Beggar"), has been harshly criticized by Bábur himself¹ and in later times by Sprenger², but warmly defended by Ethé, who translated it into German verse³. He composed another mathnawí poem entitled Şifátu'l-'Áshiqín ("the Attributes of Lovers") and a number of odes collected into a Díván. Ridá-qulí Khán says⁴ that in Khurásán he was regarded as a Shí'a, but in 'Iráq as a Sunní. Unhappily for him 'Ubaydu'lláh Khán, the fanatical Uzbek, took the former view, and caused him to be put to death as a "Ráfidí." It is curious, in view of this, that he is not mentioned in the Majálisu'l-Mú'mínín amongst the Shí'a poets; and perhaps, as asserted in the Haft Iqlím, the

¹ See my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, p. 459.

² Oude Catalogue, p. 427.

³ Morgenländische Studien, Leipzig, 1870, pp. 197-282.

⁴ Majma'u'l-Fuṣṣahá, vol. ii, p. 55.

envy of two of his rivals at the Uzbek Court, Baqá'í and Shamsu'd-Dín Kúhistání, rather than his religious views, may have caused his execution, which 'Ubaydu'lláh Khán is said to have subsequently regretted. The following verses, however, seem to indicate Shí'a propensities

محمد عربی آبروی هر دو سرای
 کسی که خاک درش بست خاک بر سر او
 شده ام که تکلم نمود همچو مسیح
 بدین حدیث لب لعل روح پرور او
 که من مدینه علم علی درت مرا
 عجب حسته حدیثیست من سگ در او

"Muhammad the Arabian, the honour of both worlds dust be upon the head of him who is not as dust at his Door!

I have heard that his life sustaining ruby lip uttered, like the Messiah, this tradition

'I am the City of Knowledge and 'Alí is my Door' a marvellously blessed tradition! I am the dog of his Door!¹"

7 Lisání (d 940/1533-4)

Lisání of Shíráz is the last of the twenty two Persian Shí'a poets mentioned in the Majdlisu'l Muminín and deserves mention rather on account of his devotion to that faith than by reason of his poetic talent, for, although he is said to have produced more than 100 000 verses, they are little known and seldom met with², and, though mentioned in the Átash Káda and the Haft Iqlím, he is ignored by Ridá qulí Khán. Most of his life was spent at Baghdád and Tabriz, in which latter

Lisání
(d. 940/1533)

¹ I.e. the dog of 'Alí. Kalb 'Alí is not uncommon as a name amongst the Shí'a, and, as we have seen, the Šafawí kings gloried in the title "Dogs of the Threshold of 'Alí ibn Abí Tálib." These verses are taken from the Majma'u'l Fusahá.

² There is a copy of his Díwán (Or 307) in the British Museum. See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, pp 656-7.

town he died just before it was taken by the Ottoman Sultán Sulaymán. "On account of his devotion to the Twelve Imáms," says the author of the Majális, "Lisání would never remove from his head the twelve-gored kingly crown¹ until, when Sultán Sulaymán the Turk was advancing to occupy Tabríz, it happened that news of his near approach reached Lisání when he was engaged in prayer in the great Mosque of Tabríz. On hearing this news, he raised his hands in prayer, saying, 'O God, this usurper is coming to Tabríz: I cannot remove this crown from my head, nor reconcile myself to witnessing his triumph, therefore suffer me to die, and bring me to the Court of Thy Mercy!' He then bowed his head in prayer, and in that attitude surrendered his soul to the Beloved." The following quatrain is characteristic:

گر بندِ لسانی گسلد از بندش ' در خاک شود وجودِ حاجتمندش
 بالله که ز مشرقِ دلش سر نزند ' جز مهرِ علی و یارِده فرزندش

"If the joints of Lisání break apart, and his needy body passes into the dust,

By God, from the horizon of his heart naught will appear save the love [or sun] of 'Alí and his eleven descendants!"

His poems, in the preservation of which he seems to have been very careless, were collected after his death by his pupil Sharíf of Tabríz, but so slovenly was the compilation that, according to the Átash-kada, it was known as Sahw'ul-Lisán, or "Lapsus Linguae."

8. Fuḍúlí (Fuzúlí) of Baghdád (d. 970/1562-3).

Fuḍúlí is reckoned amongst the Turkish rather than the Persian poets, and is fully discussed by Gibb in vol. iii of his monumental History of Ottoman Poetry (ch. iv, pp. 70-107). That he became an Ottoman subject was due to the fact that Baghdád,

Fuzúlí
 (d. 970/1562).

¹ Concerning this distinctive head-dress, which gave to the Persian Shí'a their name of Qizil-básh ("Red-heads"), see p. 48 supra.

where he was probably born, and where he spent nearly all his life, was taken from the Persians by the Turks in 940/1535; but, as Gibb says¹, "he composed with equal ease and elegance in Turkish, Persian, and Arabic" He is described by the same scholar² as "the earliest of those four great poets who stand pre eminent in the older literature of Turkey, men who in any age and in any nation would have taken their place amongst the Immortals" That his status in the Persian Parnassus is so much lower is due rather to the greater competition and higher standard of excellence prevailing there than to any lack of skill on his part in the use of the Persian language³ That he was of the Shí'a faith is clear from several of his verses, and from his *Hadīqatū's-Su'adā'*⁴, a Turkish martyrology modelled on the Persian Rawdatū'sh-Shuhadā' of Husayn Wá'iz-i-Kashif

As I have referred to Gibb's great work on Ottoman Poetry, I may here express a doubt as to his claim⁵ that the kind of poem entitled Shahr angiz (or "City-thriller," as he renders it) is a Turkish invention, and that "there is no similar poem in Persian literature" Sám Mírzá in his Tuhfa 1-Samt (compiled in 957/1550) mentions at least two poets, Wahídí of Qum and Harfí of Isfahán, who composed such poems, the former on Tabríz, the latter on Gílán, and though these were probably written later than Masíh's Turkish Shahr-angiz on Adrianople, there is nothing to suggest that they were regarded as a novelty or innovation in Persia Harfí's poem, called Shahr ashub ("City disturber") seems to have been bitterly satirical, for the

¹ Loc cit, p 72

² Ibid, p 71

³ He has a complete Persian Diwán, of which a MS (Add 7785) exists in the British Museum and which has been printed at Tabríz See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, p 659

⁴ See Rieu's Turkish Catalogue, pp 39-40.

⁵ Vol II, p 232

unhappy poet was deprived of his tongue in consequence, as Sám Mírzá relates :

شہر آشوبی جہت آنجا (یعنی گیلان) و مردم آنجا گفته و اورا
با مریدی مٹہم ساختہ زبانش را بُریدند اما این جائزہ اورا از
برای اشعار دیگرش میبایست نہ جہت ہجو اہل گیلان

9. Waḥshí of Báfq (d. 991/1583).

Though born at Báfq, a dependency of Kirmán, Waḥshí spent most of his life at Yazd. His poetry, especially his

Farhád u Shírín and his ghazals, are highly praised in the Ta'ríkh-i-Álam-árá-yi-Abbásí, the Átash-kada, and the Majma'u'l-Fuṣahá.¹

He also wrote panegyrics on Sháh Tahmásp and his nobles, concerning which the author of the work last-named remarks that in this branch of the poetic art none of the poets of the middle period can compare with the ancients. He did not finish the Farhád u Shírín, which was completed long afterwards (in 1265/1848-9) by Wiṣál. He wrote two other mathnawí poems, the Khuld-i-Barín ("Supreme Abode of Bliss") and Názir u Manẓúr, besides ghazals (odes) and qit'as (fragments), a large selection of which are given in the Majma'u'l-Fuṣahá and the Átash-kada (pp. 111-120)². The following murabba', or "foursome," given in both these anthologies, is rather pretty and unusual.

دوستان شرح پریشانی من گوش کنید
داستانِ غمِ پنهانی من گوش کنید
قصہ بی سر و سامانی من گوش کنید
گفتگوی من و حیرانی من گوش کنید

شرح این قصہ جانسوز نہفتن تا کی

سوختہ سوختہ این راز نگفتن تا کی

¹ Vol. ii, pp. 51-4.

² See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, pp. 663-4.

روزگاری من و دل ساکنِ کوئی بودیم
 ساکنِ کوی بُتِ عریده جوئی بودیم
 دین و دل باخته ویرانه روئی بودیم
 بسته سلسله سلسله موئی بودیم
 کس در آن سلسله غیر از من و دل بند نبود
 يك گرفتار ازین جمله که هستند نبود
 ترکس غمزه زنش این همه بیمار نداشت
 سنبلیل پر شکنش هیچ گرفتار نداشت
 این همه مشتری و گرمی بازار نداشت
 یوسفی بود ولی هیچ خریدار نداشت
 اول آن کس که خریدار شدم من بودم
 باعثِ گرمی بازار شدم من بودم
 عشقِ من شد سببِ خوبی و رعنائی او
 داد رسوائی من شهرتِ زیبائی او
 بسکه کردم همه جا شرحِ دلآرائی او
 شهر پر گشت ز غوغای تماشائی او
 این زمان عاشقِ سر گشته فراوان دارد
 کی سر و بروی منِ بیسر و سامان دارد
 چون چنین است پی کارِ دگر باشیم به
 مرغ خوش نغمه گلزار دگر باشیم به
 عندلیبِ گل رخسار دگر باشیم به
 چند روزی پی دلدار دگر باشیم به
 نو کلی گو که شوم بلبلِ دستان سازش
 سازم از تازه جوانانِ چمن ممتازش
 گرچه از خاطرِ وحشی هوسِ روی تو رفت
 وز دلش آرزوی قامتِ دلجوی تو رفت

شده دل آزرده، آزرده از کوی تو رفت،
 با دل پرگله از ناخوشی روی تو رفت،
 حاش لله که وفای تو فراموش کنم،
 سخن مصلحت آمیز کسان گوش کنم،

"O friends, hearken to the account of my distraction! Harken to the tale of my hidden sorrow! Harken to the story of my disordered state! Harken to my description of my bewilderment! How long shall I hide the account of this grievous story? I burn! I burn! How long shall I refrain from telling this secret?

For a while I and my heart dwelt in a certain street: the street of a certain quarrelsome beauty. We had staked Faith and heart on one of dissolute countenance; we were fettered in the chains of one with chain-like tresses. In that chain was none bound save me and my heart: of all that exist, not one was captive then.

Her bewitching narcissus-eyes had not then all these love-sick victims; her curling hyacinthine locks held then no prisoner; she had not then so brisk a business and so many customers; she was a Joseph [in beauty] but found no purchaser. I was the first to become a purchaser; it was I who caused the briskness of her market.

My love was the cause of her beauty and comeliness; my shame gave fame to her beauty; so widely did I everywhere describe her charms that the whole city was filled with the tumult of the spectators. Now she has many distracted lovers, how should she think or care for poor distracted me?

Since it is so, it is better that we should pursue some other aim, that we should become the sweet-voiced songsters of some other rose-bower, that we should become the nightingales of some other rose-cheeked beauty, that for a few days we should follow some other charmer. Where is some fresh young rose whose eloquent nightingale I may become, and whom I may [thus] distinguish amongst the youthful beauties of the garden?

Although the fancy for thy face hath passed away from Wahshî's mind, and the desire for thy charming figure hath departed from his heart, and one vexed in heart hath departed in vexation from thy street, and with a heart full of complaints hath departed from the displeasure of thy countenance, God forbid that I should forget thy constancy, or should listen to man's counsels of expediency!"

10 Mahmúd Qárf of Yazd (d 993/1585)

11 Muhtasham of Káshán (d 996/1587-8)

Mahmúd Qárf of Yazd, the poet of clothes who died two years after Wahshí and three years before Muhtasham, was mentioned in the preceding volume of this work¹

Mahmúd Qárf
of Yazd
(d 993/1585)
and Muhtasham of Káshán
(d 996/1587-8).

in connection with the two earlier parodists 'Ubrýd-i-Zákíní and Bushaq (Abu Isháq) of Shíráz, while the far more notable Muhtasham has been already discussed at some length in the preceding chapter² in connection with the religious poetry on which his fame chiefly rests. Of the erotic verse of his early youth and of his panegyrics on Sháh Tahmásp copious specimens are given in the Átash kada, but these are neither so distinguished nor so characteristic as his elegies (maráthí) on the martyrdom of Husayn and the other Imáms, from which the extracts given in the *Maj ma'u'l Fusahá*³ are chiefly taken.

12 'Urfí of Shíráz (d 999/1590-1) and his circle

Though less highly appreciated in his own country than in Turkey and India, 'Urfí is probably on the whole the most famous and popular poet of his century⁴

'Urfí of Shíráz
(d 999/1590-1)

Though born and brought up in Shíráz, his short life was chiefly spent in India, where he died in 999/1590-1 at the early age of thirty six, some say of dysentery, others of poison. He is one of the three poets of this century (A D 1500-1600) discussed by Shiblí Nu'mání in his *Shíru'l 'Ajam*⁵, the other two being his ¹ Persian Literature under Tartar Domunion, pp 257 and 351-3. Mahmud is not mentioned in the Átash kada, the Haft Iqlim or the Majma'u l Fusahá, no particulars of his life are known to me, and the date of his death must be regarded as uncertain.

² Pp 172-7 supra

³ Vol II pp 36-38

⁴ See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, p 667

⁵ Vol III, pp 82-133

fellow-townsmen Bábab Fighání, already mentioned¹, and Faydí (Fayzí), brother of Akbar's celebrated minister Abu'l-Faḍl (Abu'l-Faẓl), who, in Shiblí's opinion, was one of the two Indian poets who wrote Persian verse which would pass as the work of a genuine Persian². 'Abdu'l-Qádir Badá'úní says³ that 'Urfí and Thaná'í were the two most popular Persian poets in India in his time, and that manuscripts of their works were to be found in every bazaar and bookshop, while Faydí's poems, in spite of the large sums of money which he had expended in having them beautifully copied and illuminated, were little sought after. Gibb says⁴ that, after Jámí, 'Urfí and Faydí were the chief Persian influences on Turkish poetry until they were superseded by Şá'ib, and that "the novelty in this style lay, apart from the introduction of a number of fresh terms into the conventional vocabulary of poetry, in the deposition of rhetoric from the chief seat, and the enthronement of loftiness of tone and stateliness of language in its stead⁵." Ziyá (Diyá) Pasha, in that portion of his metrical Introduction to the Kharábát which discusses the Persian poets, after praising Jámí, proceeds to speak of 'Urfí and Faydí as follows :

فیضی ایله عُرفی همعناندر،	سر جمیلہ آخر الزماندر،
فیضیده بلاغت و طراوت،	عُرفیده غدوبت و حلاوت،
فیضیده مواعظ آتشیندر،	عُرفیده قصیدہ لر متیندر،
امّا آرانورسہ اولوویت،	فیضیده قالور ینہ فضیلت،
فیضی معجر ایکن سراپا،	تفسیرینہ نقطہ قونماز اصلا،
بولدی او یگانه فضیلت،	شاگردی یدی ایله شہادت،

¹ Pp. 229-230 supra.

² The other was Amír Khusraw of Dihlí.

³ Muntakhabu't-Tawárikh, vol. iii, p. 285 (Calcutta, 1869).

⁴ Hist. of Ottoman Poetry, vol. i, pp. 5, 127, 129.

⁵ Loc. cit. p. 129.

"Faydī and 'Urfī run neck and-neck, they are the leaders of the later time.

In Faydī is eloquence and freshness, in 'Urfī sweetness and fluency
In Faydī are fiery exhortations, while 'Urfī is strong in elegies
But if pre-eminence he sought, excellence still remains with Faydī
Faydī is clear throughout no dots need be added to his commentary

But that paragon of excellence suffered martyrdom at his pupil's hands."

I can find no evidence in support of the last statement, which, indeed, is at variance with Badā'unī's exultant description¹ of his painful and unpleasant death², though perhaps the swollen face and blackened lips, which his bitter enemy describes with unconcealed Schadenfreude, may have aroused suspicions of poison. The same fanatical writer gives a series of most uncomplimentary chronograms composed by the orthodox to commemorate the death of an arch-heretic, such as

فیضی بدین چو مُرد سالِ وفاتش فصیح

گفت سگی از جهان رفته بحالِ قبیح

"When infidel Faydī died, Faṣīḥ said as the date of his death, 'A dog departed from the world in a foul fashion'"

The simplest of them all are "Faydī was a heretic" (بود فیضی ملحدی), "he died like a dog-worshipper" (چه سگ پرستی مرد), and "the rule of heresy broke" (قاعده), all of which yield the required date A H 1004 (A D 1595). Badā'unī also says that, with a view to restoring his shattered religious reputation, he composed a commentary on the Qur'ān consisting entirely of undotted letters, adding unkindly that he was drunk and in a state of legal uncleanness when he wrote it. The author of the Majma'u'l-

¹ Muntakhabu't Tawārīkh, vol. III, pp. 299-310, especially p. 300

² This took place on 10 Safar, 1004 (October 15, 1595). See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, p. 450, where the chief sources are fully enumerated

*Fuṣṣahā*¹ in alluding to this book (which he only knew by repute) says that the author "troubled himself to no purpose" (كُلفَتى بىحاصل كشیده), and has no word of praise for his poems, on which the author of the Ātash-kada has the tepid encomium that "they are not bad." The fullest and most appreciative account of him which I have met with is that given by Shiblī Nu'mání in his *Shi'r-u'l-'Ājam*². He composed a Khamṣa ("Quintet") in imitation of Nizāmī, the titles of these five poems being Markaz-i-Adwār, Sulaymán u Bilqís, Nal u Daman (the most celebrated), Haft Kishwar, and Akbar-náma, but some of them remained incomplete. He also wrote many qaṣīdas and ghazals, and produced several translations from the Sanskrit. None of his verses quoted by Shiblī appear to me so affecting as the following on the death of his child :

ای روشنی دیده روشن چگونه،
 من بی تو تیره روز تو بی من چگونه،
 ماتم سراست خانه من در فراق تو،
 تو زیر خاک ساخته مسکن چگونه،
 بر خار و خس که بستر و بالین خواب تست،
 ای یاسمین عذار سمن تن چگونه،

Faydī's verses
 on the death
 of his child.

"O brightness of my bright eyes, how art thou? Without thee my days are dark; without me how art thou? My house is a house of mourning in thine absence; thou hast made thine abode beneath the dust: how art thou?"

The couch and pillow of thy sleep is on thorns and brambles: O thou whose cheeks and body were as jasmine, how art thou?"

¹ Vol. ii, p. 26. This commentary was entitled, according to Shiblī Nu'mání (loc. cit., p. 65), Sawāfi' u'l-Ilhām.

² Vol. iii, pp. 31-81.

Faydí was a man of varied learning and a great lover of books. His library contained four thousand six hundred choice manuscripts, mostly autographs or copied during the authors' lifetimes¹. He was generous and hospitable, and amongst those who enjoyed his hospitality was 'Urfí of Shíráz, to whom we now turn.

'Urfí, whose proper name was Jam'ílu'd Dín Muhammad and whose father was named Badru'd-Dín, was born and educated at Shíráz, but at an early age migrated to India, and, as already mentioned, attached himself to Faydí, with whom, however, he presently quarrelled. Badá'uní says² that one day he called on Faydí and found him caressing a puppy, whereupon he enquired what the name of "the young master" (makhdum-záda) might be. "'Urfí," replied Faydí, to which 'Urfí promptly replied, "Mubárah bashad!" which means "May it be fortunate!" but may be taken as alluding to Faydí's father Shírykh Mubárah and as meaning, "It should be Mubárah!"

'Urfí next won the favour of the Hakím Abu'l Fath of Gílán³, by whom he was introduced to that great nobleman and patron of letters 'Abdu'r-Rahím, who succeeded to the title of Khán khánín borne by his father Báyram Khán on the assassination of the latter in 968/1560-1. In due course he was presented to the Emperor Akbar himself, whom he accompanied on his march to Cashmere in 997/1588-9.

In spite of his opportunities and undoubted talents, 'Urfí's intolerable conceit and arrogance prevented him from being popular, and made him many enemies. Ridá quíl Khan accords him but a brief notice⁴, and observes that 'the style of his poems is not admired by the people of this age.' Criticism

Unam-able character of
'Urfí

¹ Shí'rú'l 'Ajam, III, p. 50, and Muntakhabu'l Tawárikh, III, p. 305.

² Muntakhabu'l Tawárikh, III, p. 285.

³ Muntakhabu'l Tawárikh, III, p. 167. He died in 997/1588-9.

⁴ Majma'ul Fusahá, vol. II, pp. 24-5.

and disparagement are, indeed, courted by a poet who could write¹:

نازشِ سعدی بُمُشتِ خاک شیراز از چه بود گر نمی دانست باشد مولد و مأوای من

"Wherefore did Sa'dí glory in a handful of the earth of Shíráz
If he did not know that it would be my birthplace and abode?"

Nor is this an isolated example of his conceit, for in like fashion he vaunts his superiority to Anwarí, Abu'l-Faraj, Kháqání, and other great Persian poets, and this unamiable practice may have conduced to his unpopularity amongst his compatriots, who do not readily tolerate such disparagement of the national heroes. In Turkey, on the other hand, he had, as we have seen, a great influence and reputation, and likewise in India, so that Shiblí devotes to him fifty-two pages (pp. 82-133) of his Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, rather more than he devotes to Faydí, and much more than he gives to any other of the seven poets he mentions in the third volume of his work. But even Shiblí admits that his arrogance made him generally unpopular, a fact of which he was fully aware, as appears from the following poem², wherein he complains of the hypocritical sympathy of the so-called "friends" who came to visit him when he was confined to bed by a severe illness:

تن افتاد درین حال و دوستان فصیح
بدوور بالش و بستر ستاده چون منبر
یکی بریش کشد دست و کج کند گردن
که روزگار وفا با که کرد جانِ پدر
بجاه و مالِ فرومایه دل نباید بست
کجاست دولتِ جمشید و نامِ اسکندر

¹ Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, iii, p. 88.

² Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, iii, pp. 92-3.

یکی بنرمی آوار و گفتگوی حزین
 کد شروع و کشد آستین بدیده تر
 که خان من همه را این رهست و باید رفت
 تمام راه روانیم و دهر راکب بر
 یکی بچرب زبانی سخن طراز شود
 که ای وفات تو تاریخ انقلابِ عمر
 فراهم آی و پریشان مدار دل زنهار
 که نظم و نثر تو من جمع میکنم بکسر
 پس از نوشتن و تصحیح میکنم انشا
 بمدعای تو دیباجه چو درج کهر
 چنانچه هستی فهرستِ دانش و فرهنگ
 چنانچه هستی مجموعه صفات و هنر
 نظم و نثر در آویزم و فرو ریزم
 اگرچه حصرِ کمال تو نیست حدِ بشر
 خدای عز و جل صحتم دهد بینی
 که این منافقان را چه آورم بر سر

'Urfi on Job's comforters. "My body hath fallen into this state, and my eloquent friends stand like pulpits round my bed and pillow.

One draws his hand through his beard and cocks his neck, saying,
 'O life of thy father! To whom is fortune constant?

One should not set one's heart on ignoble rank and wealth where is the Empire of Jamshid and the name of Alexander?

Another, with soft voice and sad speech, begins, drawing his sleeve across his moist eyes

'O my life! All have this road by which they must depart. we are all travellers on the road, and time bears forward the riders'

Another, adorning his speech with smooth words, says, 'O thou whose death is the date of the revolution of news (inqiláb i-khabar)!'

¹ I think the words انقلاب حمر must be taken as a chronogram, giving the date 986/1578-9, in which case this cannot, as Shibli suggests (loc cit, p 92), have been 'Urfi's last illness, since he did not die until 999/1590-1.

Collect thyself, and beware, let not thy heart be troubled, for I will with single purpose collect thy verse and prose.

After copying and correcting it, I will compose an introduction like a casket of pearls in support of thy claims;

An index of learning and culture such as thou art, a compendium of good qualities and talents such as thou art,

I will pour forth, applying myself both to verse and prose, although it is not within the power of man to enumerate thy perfections!

‘May God, mighty and glorious, give me health again, and thou shalt see what wrath I will pour on the heads of these miserable hypocrites!’¹

Space does not allow us to follow in detail Shiblī’s interesting and exhaustive study of this poet, to whose verse he assigns six salient merits, such as “forceful diction” (زورِ کلام), new and original combinations of words, fine metaphors and comparisons, and continuity or congruity of topics (مسلسل مضامین). Except for a little-known prose treatise on Śūfism entitled Nafsiyya all his work was in verse, and included, according to Shiblī, two mathnawī poems in imitation of Nizāmī’s Makhzanu’l-Asrār and Khusraw wa Shitrīn, and a Diwān, compiled in 996/1588, only three years before his death, containing 26 qaṣīdas, 270 ghazals, and 700 fragments and quatrains. The following chronogram gives the date of its compilation²:

این طرفه نکاتِ سحری و اعجازی
چون گشت مکمل برقمِ پردازی
مجموعه طرازِ قدس تاریخش یافت
اول دیوانِ عرفی شیرازی

One of his most famous qaṣīdas, given in the Kharābāt (vol. i, pp. 169–174), is in praise of ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, and contains 181 verses. It begins:

¹ This final verse is, of course, spoken by the poet himself.

² Shi’ru’l-‘Ajam, vol. iii, p. 95.

جهان بگشتم و دردا که هیچ شهر و دیار

ندیده‌ام که فروشد بخت در بازار

"I have wandered through the world, but alas! no city or country have I seen where they sell good fortune in the market!"

'Urfi is not, however included amongst the Persian Shī'a poets to whom notices are consecrated in the Majlisu'l-Mu'minin

Concerning the numerous Persians—theologians, scholars, philosophers and poets—attracted to Akbar's brilliant court, the third volume of Badá'úní's Muntakhabu't-Tawarikh is a mine of information, but space will not permit us as a rule to go beyond the frontiers of the Persian Empire. The late Mr Vincent Smith in his otherwise admirable monograph on Akbar¹ is perhaps unduly hard on these poets when he says (pp 415-6)

"The versifiers, or so-called poets, were extremely numerous. Abu'l Fazl tells us that although Akbar did not care for them, 'thousands of poets are continually at court, and many among them have completed a diwán (collection of artificial odes), or have written a mathnawí (composition in rhymed couplets)'. The author then proceeds to enumerate and criticize 'the best among them,' numbering 59, who had been presented at court. He further names 15 others who had not been presented but had sent encomiums to His Majesty from various places in Persia². Abu'l Fazl gives many extracts from the writings of the select 59, which I have read in their English dress, without finding a single sentiment worth quoting, although the extracts include passages from the works of his brother Fayzí (Faydī), the 'king of poets,' which Abu'l Fazl considered to enshrine 'gems of thought'."

The third volume of Badá'úní's Muntakhabu't-Tawarikh, which is entirely devoted to the biographies of the poets and men of learning who adorned Akbar's court, contains notices of 38 Shaykhs (religious leaders), 69 scholars, 15 philosophers and physicians, and no fewer than 167 poets, most of whom, however, though they wrote in Persian and were in many cases Persians by birth, are unknown even by name in Persia.

Valuable data furnished by Badá'úní.

¹ Akbar the Great Mogul, 1542-1605 (Oxford, 1917)

² "A'in (i. Akbari, translated by H Blochmann and H S Jarrett, Calcutta, 1873-1894 in 3 volumes), vol 1, pp 548, 611"

Amongst the most eminent names belonging, in part at any rate, to the century which we here conclude, are those of Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín 'Ámilí, Mullá Muḥsin-i-Fayḍ (Fayḏ) of Káshán, Mír Dámád, and Mír Abu'l-Qásim-i-Findariskí, who, however, will be more suitably considered amongst the theologians or philosophers.

II. Between A.D. 1600 and 1700 (A.H. 1008-1111).

Four of the seven poets discussed at length by Shibli in the third volume of his Shi'ru'l-'Ajam fall within the period indicated above. These are Nazírí (d. 1021/1612-13), Tálíb-i-Ámulí (d. 1036/1626-7), Abú Tálíb Kalím (d. 1061/1651), and Šá'ib (d. 1088/1677-8)¹. Riḏá-qulí Khán in the enumeration of eminent contemporaries of the Šafáwí kings with which he concludes the supplementary eighth volume written by him in continuation of Mírkhwánd's Rawḍatu's-Šafá mentions not one of these, but, in the period now under consideration, names only Zuhúrí (d. 1024/1615) and Shifá'í (d. 1037/1627). Another poet ignored by both these writers but highly esteemed in Turkey, where, according to Gibb², "he continued for more than half a century to be the guiding star for the majority of Ottoman poets," being "deservedly famous for his marvellous ingenuity and fertility in the invention of fresh and picturesque images and similes," is Shawkat (or Shevket, according to the Turkish pronunciation) of Bukhárá (d. 1107/1695-6). To these seven we may add, besides four or five³ who, though ¹ Other dates, e.g. 1080/1669-70, are also given. See Rieu, op. cit., p. 693.

² History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. i, p. 130. See also vol. iv, p. 95, of the same.

³ Namely, Mír Dámád, Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín, Abu'l-Qásim Findariskí, Muḥsin-i-Fayḍ and 'Abdu'r-Razzáq-i-Láhiǵí, called Fayyáḏ.

they wrote occasional verse, were primarily philosophers, and will be discussed in connection with that class, the following six, who were, perhaps, a trifle more distinguished than their innumerable competitors: Sahâbî of Astarâbâd (d. 1010/1601-2), Zulâfî of Khwânsâr (d. about 1024/1615), Jalâl Asîr (d. 1049/1639-40), Qudsî of Mashhad (d. 1056/1646-7), Sâlim of Tihîrân (d. 1057/1647-8), and Amânî of Mâzandarân (d. 1061/1651). Although I think that Rieu¹ goes too far when he describes Sâ'ib as "by common consent the creator of a new style of poetry, and the greatest of modern Persian poets," he is without doubt the greatest of those who flourished in the seventeenth century of our era, and, I think, the only one deserving a detailed notice in this volume, notwithstanding Ridâ-qulî Khân's remark that "he had a strange style in the poetic art which is not now admired²."

Here follows a list of these seventeen poets, arranged chronologically according to the dates of their deaths, with brief references to the authorities who may be consulted for further particulars concerning them. These are, besides Rieu's incomparable Persian Catalogue, Shibli's Shi'rû'l-'Ajam, vol. iii (Sh.), the Âtash-kada (A. K.), the Haft Iqlim (H. I., available in manuscript only), the Rawdatu'l-Jannat (R. J.), the Rawdatu's-Safa (R. S.), the Majma'u'l-Fusahd (M. F.), and the Ri'âdu'l-'Arifin (R. 'A.)

(1) Sahâbî of Astarâbâd (d. 1010/1601-2) Rieu, p. 672; A. K., pp. 141-2, and H. I., s.v. Astarâbâd in both; M. F., ii, p. 21; R. 'A., pp. 85-6. He spent forty years of his life in tending the holy shrine of Najaf, and composed, besides ghazals, many quatrains, of which 6000 are said to be extant.

Sahâbî of Astarâbâd
(d. 1010/1601-2).

¹ Persian Catalogue, p. 693.

² Majma'u'l-Fusahd, vol. ii, p. 24, باری در طریق شاعری طرزی غریب داشته که اکنون پسندیده نیست.

(2) Naẓírí of Níshápúr (d. 1021/1612-3). Rieu, pp. 817-8; Sh. iii, pp. 134-64; A. K., pp. 131-3; H. I., s.v. Níshápúr (a long notice); M. F., ii, pp. 48-9; R. 'Á., pp. 236-7. The last thirty years of his life were spent in India, chiefly at Aḥmadábád in Gujerát, where he died. He was one of the many poets who benefited by the bounty of 'Abdu'r-Raḥím Khán-khánán, who provided him with money to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca in 1002/1593-4, in response to a qaṣ'ida beginning:

ز هنر بخود نكنجم چو بخرم مې مغانی

بدرّد لباس بر تن چو بجوشدم معانی

همه عیش این جهانى بعنایت تو دیدم

چه عجب اگر بیایم ز تو زاد آنجهانى

"Through genius I cannot contain myself, like the Magian wine in the jar; the very garments are rent on my body when my ideas ferment.

Through thy beneficence I experienced all the pleasure of this world: what wonder if through thee [also] I should obtain provision for the other world?"

In matters of religion he was something of a fanatic, and wrote verses attacking "the heretic" Abu'l-Faḍl. He also wrote verses in praise of tobacco, some of which are quoted by Shiblí (p. 134).

(3) Zulálí of Khwánsár (d. 1024/1615). Rieu, pp. 677-8; H. I., s.v. Khwánsár (a long notice). He was the panegyrist of Mír Dámád, and composed seven mathnawís, of which that on Maḥmúd and Ayáz (begun in 1001/1592-3, and concluded in 1024/1615), shortly before his death, is the most popular. Two others mentioned by Rieu are "the Wine-Tavern" (May-khána), and "the Mote and the Sun" (Dharra u Khurshíd).

Zulálí of Khwánsár (d. circ. 1024/1615).

(4) Zuhûrî of Turshîz (d 1024/1615, murdered in an affray in the Deccan together with his fellow poet and father-in-law Malik of Qum). Rieu, pp 678-9, Jah. rif Turshîz (d. 1024/1615) A K pp 68-70, K S, at end of vol III. He is, as Rieu observes, little known in Persia, though much admired in India especially as a writer of extremely florid prose. The author of the A K says that in his opinion this poet's Sâf udma ('Book of the Cup-bearer') has no great beauty, in spite of the fame which it enjoys.

(5) Bahâ'u'd-Dîn 'Âmilî, commonly called Shaykh-i-Bahâ'î (d 1030/1620-1) was primarily a theologian and to some extent a philosopher and mathematician but he wrote at least two short mathnawî poems, entitled respectively Nâ'u Halâ'i ('Bread and Sweetmeats') and Sîr u Şakkar ('Milk and Sugar'). Extracts from both are given in the M I (vol II, pp 8-10), besides a few g'azals and quatrains and also in the R 'A pp 45-9. Apart from his mathematical and astronomical treatises his best-known prose work is the Kashkûl (or 'Beggars' Bowl') which has been printed at Bulâq and lithographed in Persia. This work, though written in Arabic, contains many Persian poetical citations, which, however, are omitted in the Egyptian edition. The famous mujtahid Mullâ Muḥammad Taqî-i-Majlisî (d 1070/1659-1660) was one of the most eminent of his disciples.

(6) Ṭalib-i-Âmilî (d 1036/1626-7) Rieu, p 679, Sh III, pp 165-188, A K, pp 155-6, where it is said that 'he had a peculiar style in verse which is not sought after by eloquent poets'. In India, whither he emigrated in early life, he was so highly appreciated that Jahāngîr made him his poet-laureate (Malikū'sh Shuhard) in 1028/1619. He was far from modest, for he

Ṭalib of Âmilî
(d. 1036/1626-7)

boasts that before he reached his twentieth year he had mastered seven sciences¹:

پا بر دومین پایهٔ اوجِ عشراتم^۱
و اینک عددِ فنم از آلف زیادست^۲
بر هندسه و منطقی و هئیت و حکمت^۳
دستی است مرا کشِ یدِ بیضا ز عبادست^۴
وین جمله چو طی شد نمکین علمِ حقیقت^۵
کاستادِ علومست برین جمله مزادست^۶
در سلسلهٔ وصفِ خطِ این بس که ز کلکم^۷
هر نقطه سویدای دلِ اهلِ سوادست^۸
پوشم نسبِ شعر چو دامن که تو دانی^۹
کاین پایه مرا ثامنِ این سبعِ شدادست^{۱۰}

Tálib's boasted accomplishments.

"My foot is on the second step of the zenith of the decades, and behold the number of my accomplishments exceeds the thousands!

In mathematics, logic, astronomy and philosophy I enjoy a proficiency which is conspicuous² amongst mankind.

When all these are traversed the savoury knowledge of the Truth³, which is the Master of the Sciences, is added to the sum total.

In the concatenated description of my writing this is enough, that every dot from my pen is the heart's core of men of letters⁴.

I put on the attribute of poetry, for I know that thou knowest that this step is to me the eighth of these 'seven severe ones.'⁵

In the following quatrain, also cited by Shiblî (p. 168), he alludes to his proposed journey to India and bids himself

¹ The verses are given by Shiblî, op. cit., p. 166.

² Literally "which has the White Hand," in allusion to one of the miracles of Moses.

³ That is, Sûffism, as explained by Shiblî.

⁴ The word-play between surwaydâ and sarwâd cannot be reproduced in translation.

⁵ This expression occurs in Qur'ân xii, 48, where it denotes the "seven lean years."

"leave his black (i.e. bad) luck in Persia, because no one would take a Hindú as a present to India".

طالب کل این چمن بستان بگذار

بگذار که می شوی پریشان بگذار

هندو سرد تحفه کسی جانب هند

بحث سیه خویش به ایران بگذار

He had an elder sister to whom he was deeply attached and after a long separation she came from Persia to Ágra to see him. He thereupon sought leave of absence from the Emperor Jahángír in the following verses¹

صاحباً ذره پرورا عرصی، سربانِ سخن و رست مرا
 پیر همشیره ایست عمر حواری، که باو مهرِ مادرست مرا
 چارده سال بلکه بیش گذشت، کز نظر دورِ مطرست مرا
 دور کشته ر خدمتش بعراق، وین گمِ حُرْمِ منکرت مرا
 او بیاورد تاب دوری من، که بماند برانرست مرا
 آمد ایسک ساکوه و شوقش، دل طپان چون کتوتست مرا
 می کند دل بسوی او آهنگ، چه کمِ شوق رهبرست مرا
 گر شود رحمتِ زیارت او، نه حبابی برانرست مرا

"O Master, Patron of the humble²! I have a representation [to make] in eloquent language

I have an old and sympathetic sister, who entertains for me a mother's love

Fourteen years or more have passed since my eyes were parted from the sight of her face

I was removed from her service in 'Irâq, and this sin is a grievous fault of mine

¹ Shiblí, op cit, pp 179-180

² Dharra means a mote, then metaphorically any very small thing or person, so that dharra parwar is equivalent to the common Indian gharib-parwar, "protector of the poor"

She could not bear to remain far from me, for she is as a mother to me.
Lo, she hath come to Āgra, and in longing for her my heart flutters like a pigeon.

My heart craves after her: what can I do? Yearning impels me on the road.

If leave should be granted me to visit her, it would be worth a world to me."

Of love-poems there are only too many in Persian, but poems such as this, testifying to deep and sincere family affection, are rare enough to make them worthy of record.

(7) Shifá'í (d. 1037/1627). There exists in the British Museum (Or. 1372, f. 7^a) a portrait of this poet, as well as one of his satires, entitled *Sizdah-band*¹ (Add.

Shifá'í
(d. 1037/1627). 12,560, ff. 134-140): see Rieu, pp. 786 and 822.

I cannot find in my manuscript of the Ta'rikh-i-'Ālam-árá-yi-'Abbásí, either amongst the poets or the physicians of the court of Sháh 'Abbás, the notice of him to which Rieu refers, but there is a long account of him in M. F. (vol. ii, pp. 21-23) and in the R. 'Ā. of the same author (pp. 213-218), as well as in A. K. (pp. 168-9). His proper name was Ḥakīm (Doctor) Sharafu'd-Dīn Ḥasan, and he was court-physician and boon companion to Sháh 'Abbás the Great. Ridā-qulí Khán says that "his medicine eclipsed his scholarship, as his poetry eclipsed his medicine":

فضلِ حکیمِ را طبابت و طبابتِ او را شاعری محبوب داشته

Besides satires and odes he composed a mathnawí poem entitled Namakdān-i-Ḥaqíqat in imitation of Saná'í's Ḥadīqatü'l-Ḥaqíqat.

(8) Mír Muḥammad Báqir-i-Dámád of Astarábád (d. 1040/1630-1). The title Dámád ("Son-in-law") really

Mír Báqir-i-
Dámád
(d. 1040/1630-1). applies to his father, who was the son-in-law of the celebrated mujtahid Shaykh 'Alí ibn 'Abdu'l-'Āl al-'Āmilí. Mír Dámád, who wrote

¹ So called, I suppose, because it contains 13 strophes.

SHIFĀ'Ī, POET AND PHYSICIAN

1920.9.17-0298[2] (Brit. Mus.)

To face p. 256

verse under the pen name of Ishraq, was more notable as a theologian and philosopher than as a poet. See Rieu, p 835, MF, II, p 7, R 'A', pp 166-7, A K, p 159. There are long notices of him in the Rawdatu'l Janнат (pp 114-116) and in the Ta'rikh i 'Alam ard yi 'Abbasi, written in 1025/1616, while he was still living. He is there described as skilled in most of the sciences, especially philosophy, philology, mathematics, medicine, jurisprudence, exegesis and tradition, and about a dozen of his prose works are mentioned. He was one of the teachers of the great philosopher Mullá Sadrá of Shíráz.

(9) Mír Abu'l Qásim i-Findariskí (d about 1050/1640-1) was also more notable as a philosopher than as a poet, but is mentioned in MF, vol II, pp 6-7, R 'A', pp 165-6, A K, pp 143-4, and Rieu, pp 815-816. One poem of his, written in imitation of Násir i Khusraw, is cited in all the tadhkiras, and is therefore, presumably, his best known if not his best production. It begins

چرخ نا این احتراں معرو حوش ریاستی
 صورتی در ربر دارد هرچه بر بالاستی
 صورتِ ربرس اگر نا بردیاں معرفت
 بر رود نالا همان نا اصلِ حود یکتاستی
 این سخن را در ساند هیچ فهمِ طاهری گر ابو نصرستی و گر نو علی سبستی

"The heaven with these fair and pleasant stars should be beautiful
 it hath an aspect beneath, whatever there may be above
 If this lower aspect should ascend by the ladder of knowledge, it would indeed be at one with its original
 No exoteric understanding can comprehend this speech, though it be Abu Nasr [al Fárabí] or Abu 'Alí [ibn] Síná (Avicenna)"

Abu'l Qasim was extraordinarily careless of appearances, dressing like a darwísh, avoiding the society of the rich and the respectable, and associating with disreputable vagabonds. One day Sháh 'Abbás, intending to rebuke him for keeping such low company, said to him, "I hear that certain students cultivate the society of vagabonds and look on at their degrading diversions." "I move constantly in those circles," replied Mír Abu'l-Qásim, "but I have never seen any of the students there." He made a journey to India, and there, according to the *Dabistán*¹, came under the influence of certain disciples of Ádhar Kaywán and imbibed Zoroastrian and Hindú or Buddhist ideas which led him to declare that he would never perform the pilgrimage to Mecca, since it would involve his taking the life of an innocent animal. Though his attainments are rated high by Riḍá-qulí Khán, very meagre details are given concerning his life; perhaps because, while more a philosopher than a poet, and more a darwísh than a philosopher, he does not exactly fall into any one of these three classes, and is consequently apt to be omitted from the special biographies of each.

Among the better-known minor poets of this period are Jalál Asír (d. 1049/1639-40), Qudsí (d. 1056/1646-7), Salím of Tíhrán (d. 1057/1647-8), Abú Ṭálib Kalím and Amání of Mázandarán (both died in 1061/1651), Muḥammad Ṭáhir Wahíd (d. about 1120/1708-9), and Shawkat of Bukhárá (d. 1107/1695-6). Besides Šá'ib (d. 1088/1677-8), the greatest of them all, only the fourth, the sixth and the last of these demand any separate notice.

(10) Abú Ṭálib Kalím (d. 1061/1651) was born at Hámádán, but, until he went to India, lived chiefly at Káshán (whence he is often described as "Káshání")

Abú Ṭálib Kalím (d. 1061/1651) and Shíráz. Riḍá-qulí Khán (M.F., ii, p. 28) gives a very meagre notice of him, but Shiblí (Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, iii, pp. 205-230) discusses him at some length.

¹ Shea and Troyer's translation, vol. i, pp. 140-1.

About 1028/1619 he paid a visit to his native country, but after remaining there for about two years, he again returned to India, where he became poet-laureate to Sháh Jahán. He accompanied that monarch to Cashmere and was so charmed with that country that he remained there until his death. He was a man of genial disposition free from jealousy, and consequently popular with his fellow-poets, of whom Sá'ib and Mír Ma'súm were his special friends, so that Sa'ib says

عبر صائب و معصوم نكته سنج و كليمر

دگر كه ز اهل سخن مهربان يكدگرند

"Except Sá'ib, the epigrammatic Ma'súm, and Kalím, who of all the poets are kind to one another?"

When the poet Malik of Qum died, Abú Tálib composed the following verses giving the date of his death

مَلِكِ آن پادشاهِ مُلْكِ معی ' كه نامش سَكّه ' نقد سخن بود
چنان آفاق كبرِ اَرِ مُلْكِ معی ' كه حدِ ملكش از قُمْ تا دكن بود
سُخْتَمَرِ مالِ تارخش ز اَيامِ ' بگفتا او سرِ اهل سخن بود

"Malik, that king of the realm of ideas, whose name is stamped on the coin¹ of poetry,

So enlarged the horizons of this realm of ideas that the frontiers of his domains extended from Qum to the Deccan

I sought for the date of the year [of his death] from the days they said 'He was the chief of the Masters of Speech'" (u Sar i ahl i sukhun bud = 1025/1616)²

Most of the Persian poets who went to India to seek a fortune, or at least a livelihood, had, according to Shibli³, nothing but evil to say of the country, but Kalím speaks of it with appreciation⁴

D like of most of the Pers an poets for India.

¹ Malik is, of course, the Arabic equivalent of Pādishāh, "King," and one of the two distinctive symbols of kingship is the imposition of the royal name on the current coin of the realm

² Shi'ru'l 'Ajam, III, p. 209

³ He also learned more of the vernacular than most of his countrymen. See a poem full of Hindi words cited by Shibli (op cit, p. 211)

توان بهشتِ دوم گفتنش باین معنی

که هر که رفت ازین بوستان پشیمان شد

"One can call it the second Paradise, in this sense, that whoever quits this garden departs with regret."

On one occasion the Sultán of Turkey wrote a letter to the Emperor Sháh Jahán reproaching him with arrogance in calling himself by this title, which means "King of the World," when he was in reality only king of India. Kalím justified his patron in the following verse:

هند و جهان ز روی عدد هر دو چون یکیست

شهر را خطابِ شاهِ جهانی مبرهن است

"Since both Hind (India) and Jahán (world) are numerically identical¹, the right of the king to be called 'King of the World' [and not merely 'King of India'] is demonstrated."

Shiblí discusses Kalím's merits very fully, and cites many of his verses to illustrate them. He includes amongst them especially novelty of topics (مضمون آفرینی), original conceits (خیال بندی), and aptness of illustration (مثالیّه). In this last respect, illustrated by the following amongst other verses, Kalím resembles the more famous Šá'ib:

روزگار اندر کمینِ بختِ ماست دزدِ دایم در پیِ خوابیده است

"Fate sets an ambuscade against our luck: the thief always pursues the sleeper²."

دل گمان دارد که پوشیده است رازِ عشق را

شمع را فانوس پندارد که پنهان کرده است

"The heart imagines that it has hidden the secret of love: the lantern imagines that it has hidden the candle."

¹ Both words yield the numerical equivalent 59.

² Luck is called bídár ("awake") when it is good, and khwábída ("asleep") when it is bad.

از خاک بر گرفته^۱ دوران چو نی سوار^۲

دایم پیاده رفت اگرچه سوار شد^۳

"He who has been raised up from the dust by fortune, like the rider of the hobby-horse, always goes on foot, although he is mounted"

از هنر حال خرابم نشد اصلاح پذیر^۴

همچو ویرانه که از گنج خود آباد نشد^۵

"My desolate state is not mended by my virtues, just like the ruin, which does not prosper through its treasure"^۱

سفله از قربِ بزرگان نکند کسبِ شرف^۲

رشته پُر قیمت از آمیزش گوهر نشود^۳

"The mean man does not acquire nobility by proximity to the great. The thread does not become precious through its connection with the pearls"

دستِ هر کس را بسانِ سحبه بوسیدم چه سود^۴

هیچ کس نکشود آخر عقده^۵ کار مرا^۶

"What profits it that I, like the rosary, kissed the hands of all?
After all, no one loosed the knots of my affair"

با من آمیزشِ او الفتِ موجست و کنار^۷

دمدم با من و پیوسته گریزان از من^۸

"Her converse with me is as the association of the wave and the shore, Ever with me, yet ever fleeing from me"

چو هست قدرت دست و دلِ توانگر نیست^۹

صدف کشاده کف است آن زمان که گوهر نیست^{۱۰}

"Where there is power, the hand and heart are not able [to use it]
The oyster-shell opens its palm when there is no pearl therein"

(This last verse is very similar to one by Sā'ib which runs:

شگوفه با ثمر هرگز نگردد جمع در يك جا^{۱۱}

مُحَالست آنکه باهمِ نعمت و دندان شود پیدا^{۱۲}

"Flowers and fruit are never found together in one place. it is impossible that teeth and delicacies should exist simultaneously")

^۱ Treasures are popularly supposed to be found in ruins

واصل ز حرفِ چون و چرا بسته است لب،

چون ره تمام گشت جرس بی زبان شود

'He who has reached [the goal] shuts his lips on 'Why?' and 'Wherefore?'

When the journey is finished the [camel-]bell becomes tongueless."

گر بقسمت قانعی بیش و کم دنیا یکیست،

تشنه چون یک جرعه خواهد کوزه و دریا یکیست،

"If thou art satisfied with thy portion, the more or less of the world is the same:

When the thirsty man requires but one draught, the pitcher and the ocean are alike."

ما ز آغاز و ز انجام جهان بیخبریم،

اول و آخر این کهنه کتاب افتاده است،

"We are without knowledge of the beginning and end of the world: the first and last [pages] of this ancient book have fallen out."

زود رفت آنکه ز اسرار جهان آگه شد،

از دبستان برود هرکه سبق روشن کرد،

"He who becomes acquainted with the mysteries of the world soon departs:

Whoever does his work brilliantly leaves the school."

The following ode, cited by Shibl¹, is typical of Kalīm, and with it we may conclude this brief notice:

پیری رسید و مستی طبع جوان گذشت،

ضعف تن از تحملِ رطلِ گران گذشت،

وضع زمانه قابلِ دیدن دو باره نیست،

رو پس نکرد هرکه ازین خاکدان گذشت،

از دست بُردِ حسینِ تو بر لشکرِ بهار،

یک نیزه خونِ گل ز سرِ ارغوان گذشت،

¹ Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, vol. iii, p. 229.

طبعی بهم رسان که باری بعالمی
 یا هستی که از بر عالم توان گذشت
 در گیش ما تحرّج عمقا تمام نیست
 در فکر نام ماسد اگر از شان گذشت
 بی دیده راه اگر بتوان رفت پس چرا
 چشم از جهان چو بستی ازو می توان گذشت
 بدنامی حیات دو روزی نمود بیش
 آن هم کلیم با تو بگویم چسان گذشت
 يك روز صرف بستن دل شد باین و آن
 روزی دگر نكندن دل زین و آن گذشت

"Old age hath come, and the exuberance of the youthful temperament hath departed,

The weakness of the body can no longer support the heavy [wine] cup

The way of the world is not worth seeing a second time

Whoever passes from this dust heap looks not back

Through the triumph of thy beauty over the army of Spring

The blood of the roses hath risen a fathom above the top of the Judas tree

Acquire such a disposition that thou canst get on with the whole world,

Or such magnanimity that thou canst dispense with the world.

According to our creed the detachment of the 'Angd is not complete,

For, though it retains no sign, it continues to think of name¹

If one cannot travel the road without sight, then how

Canst thou forsake the world when thou hast closed thine eyes to it?

The ill repute of Life endureth no more than two days

O Kalim, I will tell thee how these too passed

One day was spent in attaching the heart to this and that,

And another day in detaching it from this and that"

¹ The mythical bird called in Arabic 'angd and in Persian simurgh is often spoken of as "having name but not substance" (mawjudu'l ism, mafqudu'l jism)

(11) Muḥammad Ṭāhir Wāḥid of Qazwīn (d. 1120/1708-9)¹ was an industrious rather than a great poet: he is said by Ridā-qulī Khān² to have left a Dīwān containing 90,000 verses, which, however, were for the most part "tasteless" (*malāḥatī na-dāsh*t), and of which only six are quoted as "the best of his poetry," amongst them the following quatrain testifying to his Shī'a proclivities:

از مهر علی طینتِ هر کس که سرشت
 هر چند بود همیشه در دیر و گشت
 در دوزخ اگر در آورندش بمثل
 جا گرم نکرده میبوندش بهیشت

"Whosoever's nature is leavened with the love of 'Alī,
 Though he be the constant frequenter of church or synagogue,
 Even if, for example, they should bring him into Hell
 They would bear him thence to Paradise ere his place there had been heated."

The main facts of Wāḥid's life are given by Rieu³. He was secretary to two successive Prime Ministers of Persia, Mīrzā Taqiyyu'd-Dīn Muḥammad and Khalīfa Sultān. In 1055/1645-6 he was appointed court-historiographer to Shāh 'Abbās II, became a Minister in 1101/1689-90, retired eighteen years later into private life, and died about 1120/1708-9. Five manuscripts of his historical monograph are described by Rieu, one of which (Or. 2940) comes down to the twenty-second year of the reign, 1073-4/1663. The remark of the Ātash-kada, that these poems were only

¹ The date of his death is uncertain. See Rieu's Persian Supplement, pp. 40-41, and Ethé's India Office Catalogue of Persian MSS, cols. 900-1.

² M. F., ii, p. 50.

³ Persian Catalogue, pp. 189-190, and the Supplement cited in the last note but one.

praised on account of the author's rank, is probably justified. He was, according to Ethé, a friend of the poet Sá'ib

(12) Shawkat¹ of Bukhárá (d 1107/1695-6) is at the present day almost unknown in Persia. He is not even mentioned in the Majma'u'l-Fusahá and but briefly in the Riyadul-'Arifin, where only two of his verses are cited, together with the description of his eccentric demeanour given by his contemporary Shaykh Muhammad 'Alí Láhijí, called Hazín, who saw him wandering about in mid-winter, bare-headed and bare-footed, with a piece of felt (namad pára) over his shoulders and his head covered with snow, which he did not trouble to shake off. Shawkat only deserves mention because of the reputation which he enjoys in Turkey and the influence which he exerted over Turkish poetry, an influence which Gibb emphasizes in several places in his *History of Ottoman Poetry*².

(13) Šá'ib of Tabriz³ (d 1088/1677-8) is considered by Shibli⁴ as the last great Persian poet, superior in originality to Qa'ání, the greatest and most famous of the moderns, whom he regards as a mere imitator of Farrukhí and Minúchihri. Ridá-qulí Khán, on the other hand⁵, says that Šá'ib has "a strange method in the poet's path, which is not now admired." He is, in short, like 'Urfí, one of those poets who, while greatly esteemed in Turkey and India, are without honour in their own country. I have already expressed⁶ my own personal opinion as to his high merits.

¹ See Rieu's Persian Cat, p 698, Ethé's India Office Persian Cat, cols 891-2

² Vol. i, p 130, vol iv, pp 96-7, 185 Cf p 250 supra

³ Though he was born in Tabriz he was educated and grew up in Isfahán, and is therefore often called "of Isfahán"

⁴ Shur'ul-'Ajam, vol iii, p 189

⁵ M F, vol ii, p 24. Cf p 251, n 2 supra ⁶ Pp 164-5 supra

According to the *Atash-kada*¹, Šā'ib, whose proper name was Mīrzā Muḥammad 'Alī, was born in the village of 'Abbās-ābād near Iṣfahān, whither his father's family had been transferred from Tabrīz by Shāh 'Abbās. Having completed his studies in Iṣfahān, he visited Dihlī and other cities of India at an early age, certainly before 1039/1629-30, and was patronized by Ṣafar Khān and other nobles. He had only spent two years there, however, when his father, though seventy years of age, followed him to India in order to induce him to return home, for which journey he sought permission from his patron Ṣafar Khān in the following verses²:

شش سال بیش رفت که از اصفهان بهند
 افتاده است توسنِ عزم مرا گذار
 آورده است جذبه گستاخِ شوقِ من
 از اصفهان بآگره و لاهورش اشکبار
 هفتاد ساله والدِ پیرست بنده را
 کز تربیت بود بمنش حقّ بی شمار
 ز آن پیشتر کز آگره بمعموره دکن
 آید عنان گسسته تر از سیل بیقرار
 این راه دور را ز سرِ شوق طی کند
 با قامت خمیده و با پیکرِ نزار
 دارم امیدِ رخصتی از آستان تو
 ای آستان کعبه امیدِ روزگار
 مقصودِ او ز آمدنش بُردنِ منست
 لب را بحرفِ رخصتِ من کن گهر نثار
 با جبهه کشاده تر از آفتابِ صبح
 دستِ دعا ببدرقه راه من بر آر

¹ Bombay lith. 1277/1860-1, pp. 30-31.

² Shiblī's Shi'r al-'Ajam, vol. iii, p. 194.

Autograph of the poet Şa'ib

"More than six years¹ have passed since the passage of the steed of my resolve from Isfahán to India took place
 The bold attraction of my longing has brought him weeping from Isfahán to Agra and Lahore
 I your servant have an aged father seventy years old, who has countless claims upon me by reason of the education [he gave me].
 Before he comes from Agra to the flourishing land of the Deccan with reins looser than the restless torrent,
 And eagerly traverses this far road with bent body and feeble form, I hope for permission from thy threshold, O thou whose threshold is the Ka'ba of the age's hopes!
 His object in coming is to take me hence, therefore cause thy lips to scatter pearls [of speech] by [uttering] the word of permission, And, with a forehead more open than the morning sun, raise thy hand in prayer to speed me on my way."

On his return to Isfahán, Sá'ib became poet-laureate to Sháh 'Abbás II, but had the misfortune to offend his successor Sulaymán. He died in Isfahán after an apparently uneventful life in 1080/1669-70. The words "Sá'ib found death" (صائب وفات یافت) give the date of his decease².

Amongst the merits ascribed to Sá'ib by Shibli is an appreciation of Indian poets rare with the Persians. Shibli quotes thirteen verses in which Sá'ib cites with approval, by way of tadmín or "insertion," the words of Faydí, Malík, Tálíb-i-Ámulí, Naw'í, Awhadí, Shawqí, Fathí, Shápúr, Mutí, Awjí, Adham, Hádhíq and Ráqím. In the following verses he deprecates the jealousy which too often characterizes rival singers:

حوش آن گروه که مستِ بیانِ یكدگرند
 ز حوشِ فكرِ مېِ ارعوانِ یكدگرند
 نمی زنند بسِ شكستِ گوهرِ هم
 بی رواجِ متاعِ دكانِ یكدگرند

¹ If, as Shibli says, these verses were composed in or about 1041/1631-2, Sá'ib must have come to India about 1035/1625-6.

² These words, however, yield the number 1081, not 1080.

زنند بر سرِ هر گُل ز مصرعِ رنگین،
 ز فکرِ تازه گُلِ بوستانِ یکدگرند،
 سخن تراش چو گردند تیغِ الماسند،
 زند چو طبع بگنبدی فسانِ یکدگرند،
 بغیر صائب و معصومِ نکته سنج و کلیر،
 دگر که ز اهلِ سخن مهربانِ یکدگرند،

"Happy that company who are intoxicated with each other's speech; who, through the fermentation of thought, are each other's red wine.

They do not break on the stone [of criticism] one another's pearls [i.e. verses], but rather strive to give currency to the wares of one another's shops.

They pelt one another with tender-hued verses as with roses, with fresh ideas they become the flowers of one another's gardens.

When they shape their poetry it is with blades like diamonds, and when their genius tends to become blunted, they are each other's whetstones.

Except Šá'ib, the epigrammatic Ma'súm, and Kalím, who of all the poets are kind to one another¹?"

Šá'ib was a great admirer of Ḥáfiz, and is also complimentary to his masters Rukná and Shifá'í. Of the latter he says

در اصفهان که بدرِ سخن رسد صائب، کنون که نبض شناسِ سخن شغائی نیست،

"Who will care for poetry in Iṣfahán, O Šá'ib,

Now that Shifá'í, whose discerning hand was on the pulse of poetry, is no more?"

He puts Naẓírí not only above himself but above 'Urífí. "So far," says Shiblí², "no objection can be made, but it is a pity that, yielding to popular approbation and fame, he makes himself also the panegyrist of Żuhúrí and Jalál-i-

¹ Cf. p. 259 supra.

² Shi'rul-'Ajam, vol. iii, p. 198.

Asír This was the first step in bad taste, which finally established a high road, so that in time people came to bow down before the poetry of Násir 'Alí, Bí díl, and Shawkat of Bukhárá. 'The edifice of wrong-doing was at first small in the world, but whoever came added thereunto'""

Though Sá'ib tried his hand at all kinds of poetry, it was in the ode (ghazal) that he excelled. He was a ready wit. One of his pupils once composed the following absurd hemistich

از شیشه بی می می شیشه طلب کن

"Seek for the bottleless wine from the wineless bottle"

Sá'ib immediately capped it with the following

حقرا رد دل حالی از اندیشه طلب کن

"Seek for the truth from the heart which is empty of thought"

On another occasion one of his friends produced the following meaningless hemistich and apparently invited Sá'ib to complete the verse and give it a meaning

دودن رفتن استاں نشستن حُفتن و مُردن

Sá'ib immediately prefixed the following hemistich

بقدر هر سکون راحت بود بگر تفاوت را

so that the completed verse runs in translation

"Peace is in proportion to every pause observe the difference between
'to run, to walk, to stand, to sit, to lie, to die'"

Sá'ib was a very careful student of the works of his predecessors both ancient and modern, and himself compiled a great anthology of their best verses, of which, according to Shibli², a manuscript exists at Haydar ábád in the Deccan and which appears to have been utilized by Wálih of Dághistán and other tadhkira writers. Shibli compares Ṣá'ib to Abú Tammám, the compiler of the great anthology of Arabic poetry called the Ḥamása, inasmuch as his taste is shown even more in his selective than in his creative powers. The following are the verses

¹ This is a quotation from the Gulistán of Sa'di (ed. Platts, p. 32)

² Op cit., p. 201

Selected verses from Ṣá'ib.

by Ṣá'ib which I selected from the Kharábat and copied into a note-book many years ago¹.

They pleased me when I was a beginner, they still please me, and I hope that some of them at any rate may please my readers.

چو شد زهر عادت مضرت نبخشد، بهرگ آشنا كن بتدریج جان را

"When poison becomes a habit it ceases to injure : make thy soul gradually acquainted with death."

ریشه نخلِ کهن سال از جوان افزونترست

بیشتر دلبستگی باشد بدنيا پیرا

"The roots of the aged palm-tree exceed those of the young one; the old have the greater attachment to the world."

هر سری دارد درین بازار سودائی دگر

هر کسی بندد بآئینِ دگر دستارا

"In this market every head has a different fancy : everyone winds his turban in a different fashion."

تهی دستانِ قسمت را چه سود از رهبرِ کامل

که خضر از آبِ حیوان تشنه باز آرد سکندر را

"What profit accrues from a perfect guide to those whom Fate hath left empty-handed, for even Khidr brings back Alexander athirst from the Water of Life?"

سبحه بر کف توبه بر لب دل پُر از شوقِ گناه

معصیت را خنده می آید ز استغفارِ ما

"The rosary in the hand, repentance on the lips, and the heart full of sinful longings—sin itself laughs at our repentance!"

¹ See pp. 164-5 supra. My copy of these selected verses was completed on Sept. 4, 1885.

مقامِ کوهرِ شهوار در کنجینه می داید

بیاض از سینه داید ساحت شعرِ استخابی را

"The place of a royal pearl should be in a treasury" one should make one's breast the common-place book for chosen verses "

گفته‌گوی کُفر و دین آخر بیکجا می‌کشد

خواب يك حواست اما مختلف تعبیرها

"All this talk of infidelity and religion finally leads to one place" The dream is the same dream, only the interpretations differ "

از تیرِ آه مطلوب طالع امان نیاند

پیش از شاهه حیزد از دل وغان گمان را

"The tyrant finds no security against the arrows of the victim's sighs Groans arise from the heart of the bow before [they arise from] the target "

چاره' نا حوشی وضع جهان بیخبرست

اوست بیدار که در خواب گراست اینجا

"The cure for the unpleasant constitution of the world is to ignore it Here he is awake who is plunged in heavy sleep "

شکوفه نا ثمر هرگز نگردد جمع در یکجا

محالست آنکه نا هر نعمت و ددان شود پیدا

"Flowers and fruit are never combined in one place, it is impossible that teeth and delicacies should exist simultaneously."

ده در شود کشاده اگر بسته شد دری

انگشت تره‌مان زبان است لال را

"Ten doors are opened if one door be shut the finger is the interpreter of the dumb man's tongue "

ساده لوحان زود میگیرند رنگِ همشین

صحبتِ طوطی سخنور میکند آئینه را

"The simple-minded quickly acquire the colour of their companions The conversation of the parrot makes the mirror [seem to] speak "

گرویش اقبال دارد لغزشِ ادبارها،

✓ يك دو خطوه باز رفتن پر دهد و ثابرا،

"The march of good fortune has backward slips : to retreat one or two paces gives wings to the jumper."

موج از حقیقتِ کُهرِ بحر غافلست،

حادث چگونه درك نماید قدیمرا،

"The wave is ignorant of the true nature of the sea : how can the Temporal comprehend the Eternal?"

معیارِ دوستانِ دغل روز حاجتست،

قرضی بر سرِ تجربه از دوستان طلب،

"The touchstone of false friends is the day of need : by way of proof, ask a loan from your friends."

در میانِ اهل دنیا مردمِ دانا غریب،

همچو انگشتِ شهادت در كفِ ترسا غریب،

"The learned man is a stranger amidst the people of the world, just as the 'witness-finger' [i.e. the index-finger] appears strange on the Christian's hand."

چه سود ازین که کتبخانهٔ جهان از تست،

نه علم هرچه عمل میکنی همان از تست،

"What doth it profit thee that all the libraries of the world should be thine? Not knowledge but what thou dost put into practice is thine."

هستی دنیای فانی انتظارِ مُردنست،

ترك هستی ز انتظارِ نیستی وا رستن است،

"The life of this transitory world is the expectation of death : to renounce life is to escape from the expectation of annihilation."

ترا ز جان غیرِ مال ای عزیزِ بیشترست،

علاقهٔ تو بدستارِ بیشتر ز سرست،

"O my dear friend ! thou hast more care for wealth than for life : Thy attachment to the turban is greater than to the head."

با کمالِ قُرب از حانانِ دلِ ما غافلست

زنده از دریاست ماهی و ز دریا غافلست

"Our heart is heedless of the Beloved, notwithstanding our complete proximity

The fish lives through the sea, yet heeds not the sea."

گریه شمع از برای ماتمِ پروانه نیست

صُبحِ نزدیکست در فکرِ شبِ تارِ خودست

"The weeping of the candle is not in mourning for the moth the dawn is at hand, and it is thinking of its own dark night"

رفتن از عالمِ پُرشور به ار آمدنست

غمچه دلتنگِ باغ آمد و حدان بر حاست

"To quit this troubled world is better than to enter it the rose-bud enters the garden with straitened heart and departs smiling"

اگر میانِ دو دل هست دوستی قرار

نمی شوند تأمد شدِ خبرِ محتاج

"If friendship is firmly established between two hearts, they do not need the interchange of news"

✓ آدمی پیر چو شد حرصِ جوان میگردد

حواب در وقتِ سحرگاه کران میگردد

"When a man becomes old, his greed becomes young sleep grows heavy at the time of morning"

✓ حموشی حُصَتِ ناطق بود حویایِ گوهر را

که از غَوَاص در دریا نفسِ بیرون نمی آید

"To the seeker after pearls silence is a speaking argument, for no breath comes forth from the diver in the sea"

یا سو یا خُمِ می یا قدحِ ناده کسد

یک کعبِ خاکِ درین میکرده صایع شود

"Not one handful of earth is wasted in this tavern they make it either into a pitcher, a wine jar, or a wine cup"

✓ حریص را نکند نعمتِ دو عالم سیر^۱ همیشه آتشِ سوزنده اشتها دارد^۲

"The enjoyments of both worlds will not satisfy the greedy man :
Burning fire has always an appetite."

پیرانه سر همای سعادت بمن رسید^۳

وقتِ زوال سایه^۴ دولت بمن رسید^۵

شد مهربان سپهر بمن آخرِ حیات^۶

در وقتِ صُبح خواب فراغت بمن رسید^۷

"The *humá*¹ of happiness came to me in old age ; the shadow of fortune came to me at the time of [the sun's] decline :

Heaven became kind to me at the close of my life : peaceful slumber visited me at morning-time."

از پشیمانی سخن در عهدِ پیری میزنم^۸

لب بدنجان میزنم اکنون که دندانم نماند^۹

"I talk of repentance in the days of old age ; I bite my lip [in remorse] now that no teeth remain to me."

میشود غارتگرِ جان چون کمال افتد زیاد^{۱۰}

شاخِ نازک بشکند چون بیشتر بار آورد^{۱۱}

"When perfection² is unduly increased it becomes the destroyer of life :
The tender branch breaks when it bears too much fruit."

اگر مجنون منم پس کیست در روی زمین عاقل^{۱۲}

اگر عاقل توئی دیوانه در عالم نمی باشد^{۱۳}

"If I am mad, then who on the face of the earth is sane? If thou art sane, then there is no madman in the world."

مرا بروزِ قیامت غمی که هست اینست^{۱۴}

که روی مردمِ عالم دو باره باید دید^{۱۵}

¹ The humá is a mythical bird of whom it is supposed that if its shadow falls on anyone he will become a king.

² As already pointed out, perfection is regarded as a danger because it is specially obnoxious to the Evil Eye, which the Arabs call 'Ayn el-Kamál, "the Eye of Perfection." See supra, p. 117, n. 2, and p. 216, n. 2.

"The only thing which troubles me about the Resurrection Day is this,

That one will have to look once again on the faces of mankind"

لا مکانی شو که تبدیلِ مکانِ آب و گل،

نقل کردن باشد از زندانِ زندانِ دگر،

"Become placeless, for to change this place of water and clay is but to move from one prison to another"

نگویمت که دل از حاصلِ جهانِ بر دار،

بهرچه دست رست نیست دل از آن بر دار،

"I do not bid thee detach thy heart from the sum of the world detach thy heart from whatever lies beyond thy reach"

اسمارت پرست بود به ز خود پرست،

در قیدِ خود مناش و بقیدِ فرنگِ ناش،

"In the end the idolator is better than the worshipper of self better be in bondage to the Franks than in the bondage of self"

گر پُشتِ پا بعالمِ صورتِ می زی،

تا حشر در شکمِ این کفشِ تنگِ ناش،

"If thou dost not trample under foot this world of form, then suffer until the Resurrection the torments of this tight boot."

درونِ خانه، خود هر کدا شهشاهیست،

قدمِ برونِ مه از حدِ خویش و سلطانِ ناش،

"Within his own house every beggar is an emperor do not overstep thine own limit and be a king"

گر سحودِ گلِ کمر بر رُستِ بلبلِ خطاست،

من که در آتشِ پرستی اُمّتِ پروانه‌ام،

"If I worship the rose according to the rites of the nightingale, it is a fault—I, who in the worship of fire am of the religion of the moth"

چون شمع هر که افراشت گردن بافسر زر'

در اشك خود نشیند بسیار تا بگردن'

"Everyone who like the candle exalts his head with a crown of gold will oft-times sit [immersed] in his tears up to the neck."

پیش ازین بر رفتگان افسوس می خوردند خلق'

می خوردند افسوس در ایام ما بر ماندگان'

"Formerly people used to grieve over the departed, but in our days they grieve over the survivors."

یا ز سیلاب حوادث رو نباید تافتن'

یا نباید خانه در صحرای امکان ساختن'

"Either one should not avert one's face from the torrent of vicissitudes
Or one should not make one's home in the plain of the Phenomenal World."

هر لوح مزاری ز فراموشدهء خاک'

دستبست برون آمده بهر طلب تو'

"Every tombstone is a hand stretched forth from the house of oblivion of the earth to search for thee."

شد از فشار گردون موی سفید و سرزد'

شیری که خورده بودم در روزگار طفلی'

"The hair has become white through the squeezing of the sphere, and the milk which I had drunk in the time of childhood has reappeared [on my head]."

در وطن گر میشدی هر کس بآسانی عزیز'

کی ز آغوش پدر یوسف بزدان آمدی'

"If everyone could easily become honoured in his own country,
How would Joseph have passed from his father's embrace to a prison?"

III. Between A.D. 1700 and 1800 (A.H. 1111-1215).

From the literary point of view this century is perhaps the most barren in the whole history of Persia¹, so much so that the only notable poem produced by it is, so far as I know, the celebrated tarj' band of Hátif-i-Isfahání, of which I shall speak presently. On the other hand we have two full and authoritative accounts of the period by two men of letters who were personally involved in the disastrous events which befell Persia during and after the Afghán invasion, and who have left us a fairly clear and detailed picture of that sad and troubled epoch. These men were Shaykh 'Alí Hazín (b. 1103/1692, d. 1180/1766-7), and Lutf 'Alí Beg poetically surnamed Ádhar (b. 1123/1711, d. 1195/1781). Both were poets, and the former even a prolific poet, since he composed three or four diwáns, but their prose writings are, from our point of view, of much greater interest and value than their verse.

Shaykh 'Alí Hazín, whose proper name was Muhammad ibn Abí Tálib of Gílán, is best known by his "Memoirs" (Tadhkiratu'l Ahwal), which he composed in India in 1154/1741-2, twenty years after he had become an exile from his native land, and which are easily accessible to students in the text and English translation published by F. C. Belfour in 1830-31. He was born, as he himself tells us, on Monday the 27th of Rabí' II, 1103 (Jan. 19, 1692) at Isfahán, and was directly descended in the eighteenth degree from the famous Shaykh Záhíd of Gílán, of whom some account was given in a previous chapter². The family continued to reside in Gílán, first at Astará and then at Lahiyán, until the author's

¹ Cf p. 168 supra.² See pp. 38-43 supra.

Barrenness of the eighteenth century

Two important contemporary records.

Shaykh 'Alí
Hazín (b. 1103/
1692 d. 1180/
1766-7).

father, Shaykh Abú Tálíb, at the age of twenty, went to Iṣfahán to pursue his studies, and there married and settled. He died there in 1127/1715 at the age of sixty-nine, leaving three sons, of whom our author was the eldest, to mourn his loss¹. Shaykh 'Alí Ḥazín speaks in the highest terms of his father's character and ability, and quotes a few lines from an elegy which he composed on this mournful occasion. He also mentions that, amongst other final injunctions, his father addressed to him the following remarkable words²: "If you have the choice, make no longer stay in Iṣfahán. It were meet that some one of our race should survive." "At that time," the author continues, "I did not comprehend this part of his address, not till after some years, when the disturbance and ruin of Iṣfahán took place³."

Since the "Memoirs" can be read in English by anyone interested in their contents, it is unnecessary to discuss or analyse them here, and it will be sufficient to emphasize their importance as a picture of the author's times, and to note a few points of literary interest. In 1135/1722-3 he began to compile a kind of literary scrap-book or magazine (majmú'a), probably somewhat similar in character to the Kashkúl of Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín 'Ámilí, and entitled *Muddatu'l-'Umr*⁴ ("Lifetime"), but it was lost with the rest of his library in the sack of Iṣfahán by the Afgháns a few months later. About the same time or a little earlier he wrote, besides numerous philosophical commentaries, a book on the Horse (Faras-náma), and

Shaykh 'Alí
Ḥazín's Memoirs.

¹ A fourth son died in infancy. The mother survived the father by two years.

² Belfour's text, p. 16; translation, p. 14.

³ Compare text, p. 107; translation, p. 117.

⁴ See pp. 93-4 of Belfour's translation, to which henceforth references will be given. There is a MS. of this work in the British Museum. See Rieu's Persian Catalogue, p. 483, where two other works by the same author, one on wine and measures and another on beasts of venery, are mentioned.

published his second Díwán of poetry, and soon afterwards his third¹

The Afghán invasion and the misery which it caused, especially in Isfahán, put a stop to Shaykh 'Alí Hazín's literary activities for some time "During the latter days of the siege," he says², "I was attacked by severe illness, and my two brothers, my grandmother, and the whole of the dwellers in my house died, so that my mansion was emptied of all but two or three infirm old women-servants, who attended me till my disorder began to abate" Being somewhat recovered, he escaped from Isfahán early in Muḥarram, 1135 (October, 1722), only a few days before it surrendered to, and was entered by, the Afgháns During the next ten years he wandered about in different parts of Persia, successively visiting or residing at Khurramábad in Luristán, Hamadán, Niháwand Dizful, Shushtar (whence by way of Basra he made the pilgrimage to Mecca and on his return journey visited Yaman), Kirmánsháh, Baghdád and its holy places, Mashhad, Kurdistán, Ádharbáyján, Gílán and Tihrán From the last-named city he returned once more to Isfahán, to find "that great city, notwithstanding the presence of the King³, in utter ruin and desertion Of all that population and of my friends scarcely any one remained ' It was the same at Shíráz, whither he made his way six months later "Of all my great friends there," he says⁴, "the greatest I had in the world, not one remained on foot, and I met with a crowd of their children and relatives in the most melancholy condition and without resource" From Shíráz he made his way by Lár to Bandar-i-'Abbás, intending to go thence in

¹ See Belfour's translation, pp 106 and 111, and for his fourth Díwán, which was published somewhat later, p 176

² Ibid, p 128

³ Ibid, p 205 This was after the expulsion of the Afgháns by Nádir

⁴ Ibid, p 207

a European ship to the Hījáz, "because their ships and packets are very spacious and are fitted up with convenient apartments, and their navigators also are more expert on the sea and more skilful in their art than any other nation¹." He was, however, prevented by illness and poverty (caused partly by the loss of his patrimony in Gīlān, partly by the exorbitant and oppressive taxation which now prevailed) from carrying out this plan. A subsequent attempt carried him in a Dutch vessel as far as Muscat, which he found little to his liking, so that after a stay of rather more than two months he returned again to Bandar-i-'Abbās. He next visited Kirmán, but, finding "the affairs of that ruined country in utter confusion by reason of the insurrection of a body of the Balúch tribe and other accidents²," he returned thence after a few months' stay to Bandar-i-'Abbās in the hope of being able to go thence once again to Baghdád and the Holy Shrines. Finding this impracticable owing to Nádír's operations against the Turks, and unable to endure any longer the sight of the misery prevailing throughout Persia, he embarked on the 10th of Ramadán, 1146 (Feb. 14, 1734) for India, where, in spite of the deep dislike which he conceived for that country, he was destined to spend the remaining forty-five years of his long life. "To me," he says³, "who do not reckon the time of my residence in this country as a portion of my real life, the beginning of my arrival on the shores of this empire appears as it were the end of my age and vitality." A little further on he says, "Altogether my nature had no agreement with the fashions and manners of this country, nor any power of patiently enduring them," and adds a few lines lower "the sight of these dominions became more and more hateful to me, and being continually in hope of escape from them, I reconciled

Shaykh 'Alí
Hazin's deep dislike for India.

¹ See Belfour's translation, p. 215.

² Ibid., p. 240.

³ Ibid., p. 253.

my mind to the incidents in the affairs of Persia, and bent my thoughts on my return thither¹” Although unhappily disappointed in this hope, and compelled to spend the long remainder of his days in “a country traced with foulness and trained to turpitude and brutality²,’ where “all the situations and conditions are condemned by fate to difficulty and bitterness of subsistence³,” he declined to include in his “Memoirs” any account of his personal experiences in India, save in so far as they were connected with such important historical events as Nádír Sháh’s invasion and the terrible massacre he made in Dihlí on March 20, 1739. So, though the “Memoirs” were penned at “the end of the year [A H] 1154⁴ (beginning of A D 1742), they deal chiefly with the author’s personal history before he left Persia twenty years earlier. The accounts of contemporary scholars and men of letters (many of whom perished during the siege of Isfahán in A D 1722) with whom he was personally acquainted constitute one of the most valuable features of this interesting book.

Eleven years later (1165/1752) Shaykh ‘Alí Hazín composed an account of about a hundred contemporary poets entitled Tadhkiratu’l Mu’asirín, which is included in the lithographed edition of his complete works published at Lucknow in 1293/1876, and of which MSS exist in the British Museum and elsewhere⁵.

¹ See Belfour’s translation, p 255

² Ibid, p 256

³ Ibid, p 261

⁴ Ibid, p 257

⁵ See Rieu’s Pers Cat, p 372, and Sprenger’s Catalogue, pp 135–141, where the contents are fully stated. Through the kindness of my friend Professor Muhammad Shafí of the Oriental College, Lahore, I have recently (September, 1923) received a copy of the Kulliyádt, or Complete Works, of Shaykh ‘Alí Hazín, lithographed at Kánpur in 1893. It comprises 1032 pp., of which this Tadhkira occupies pp 931–1025. I make the number of biographies contained in it 96, and of all these

Shaykh ‘Alí
Hazín’s biography of contemporary poets.

Another and more accessible contemporary account of the poets of this period forms the last portion of the well-known Ātash-kada ("Fire-temple") of Luṭf Beg Ādhar. The greater part of this book (b. 1123/1711, d. 1195/1781). deals with the Persian poets who flourished before the author's time, arranged in alphabetical order under the various towns and countries which gave birth to them, including Túrán and Hindústán. This is followed by an account of sixty of the author's contemporaries, which begins with a brief historical survey of the misfortunes of Persia during the fifty years succeeding the Afghán invasion down to the re-establishment of security and order in the South by Karím Khán-i-Zand¹. The author recognizes the dearth of poets and men of letters during this period and ascribes it to the prevalent chaos and misery, "which," he says, "have reached such a point that no one has the heart to read poetry, let alone to compose it":

تفریقِ بال و اختلالِ حالِ بحدیست که کسی را حالِ خواندنِ
شعر نیست تا بگفتنِ شعر چه رسد

To most of these poets the author devotes only a few lines. The longer notices include Mullá Muḥammad Mú'min, poetically surnamed Dá'í, who died in 1155/1742-3 at the age of ninety; Mullá Husayn Raṭīq of Iṣfahán; Sayyid Muḥammad Shu'la of Iṣfahán; Sayyid Muḥammad Ṣádiq of Tafrish; Mírzá Ja'far Ṣáfi of Iṣfahán; a young friend of the author's named Sulaymán, who wrote under the name Ṣabáhi, and to whose poems he devotes no less than thirteen pages; Mírzá Muḥammad 'Alí Ṣubrīh of Iṣfahán; poets there are only about four of whom I ever heard even the names, to wit, Ṭáhir of Qazwín, Shawkat of Bukhárá, Shafí'á Athar of Shíráz, and Luṭf 'Alí Beg Shámí.

¹ "That peerless Prince of happy fortune Abu'n-Naṣr Sulṭán Karím."

Áqá Taqí Sahbd of Qum; Sayyid 'Abdu'l-Báqí Tabláb ("the physician"), whose father Mírzá Muhammad Rahím was court-physician to Sháh Sultán Husayn, as he himself was to Nádir Sháh; Túfán of Harár-jaríb, whose death was commemorated by the author in a chronogram giving the date 1190/1776-7; Áqá Muhammad 'Áshuq of Isfahán (d. 1181/1767-8), to whom he devotes eight pages; and his own younger brother Isháq Beg, who wrote under the pen-name of 'Udhri and died in 1185/1771-2, according to the chronogram:

بادا در بهشت حاودان اسحق بیگ

Other poets noticed are Muhammad 'Alí Beg the son of Abdál Beg, a Frankish painter who embraced Islám, Sayyid Muhammad Husayn Ghálíb, who spent fourteen years of his earlier life in India and married the daughter of the Nawwáb Sar-afráz Khán, Mír Sayyid 'Alí Mushtaq of Isfahán; Sayyid Muhammad Sádiq, nephew of the above-mentioned court-physician Mírzá Muhammad Rahím, who, besides several mathnawí poems dealing with the somewhat threadbare romances of Laylá and Majnún, Khusraw and Shírn and Wámiq and 'Adhrá, was engaged on a history of the Zand dynasty; Mírzá Nasír, son of the physician Mírzá 'Abdu'lláh (d. 1192/1778), and Sayyid Ahmad Háfif, the most notable of all these poets, of whom we shall shortly have to speak.

Lutf 'Alí Beg concludes his Atash-kada with an autobiography of himself, from which we learn that he was born on the 20th of Rabí' i, A.H. 1123 (June 7, 1711) at Isfahán, but spent fourteen years of his earlier life at Qum, whither his family migrated in consequence of the Afghán menace. At the beginning of Nádir Sháh's reign his father was made governor of Lár and the coasts of Fárs, and he resided in Shíráz. On the death of his father two years later he accompanied his uncle Hájji Muhammad Beg on the pilgrimage to Mecca, and, after visiting that and the other holy places, returned to Persia, and was at Mashhad when Nádir's victorious army returned from India. After accompanying them to Mázandarán he returned to Işfahán, and, after the assassination of Nádir Sháh, was attached for a while to the service of 'Alí Sháh, Ibráhím Sháh, Sháh Isma'íl and Sháh Sulaymán. He then seems to have retired from public life and devoted himself to the cultivation of poetry under the guidance and tuition of Mír Sayyid 'Alí Mushtáq. With selections of this poetry, largely drawn from his Yúsuf u Zulaykhá, he concludes the book¹.

Of Sayyid Ahmad Hátif of Işfahán, though he was the contemporary and friend of Luţf 'Alí Beg, no biographical particulars are given in the Atash-kada, but only praises which appear somewhat exaggerated, since he is described as "in Arabic and Persian verse and prose the third after A'shá and Jarír, and second only to Anwarí and Zahir." Nearly ten pages are filled with citations from his poems, but of all these we need only concern ourselves with the beautiful and celebrated tarjî'-band by which alone Hátif's name has been immortalized.

(بند اوّل)

ای فدای تو هم دل و هم جان
 وی نثارِ رخت هم این و هم آن
 دل فدای تو چون توئی دلبر
 جان نثارِ تو چون توئی جانان
 دل رهندن ز دستِ تو مشکل
 جان فشاندن بپای تو آسان

¹ I have used the Atash-kada in the Bombay lithographed edition of 1277/1860. It has three defects: the numeration of the pages stops at 189; the dates are often omitted; and the accuracy of the text leaves a good deal to be desired.

راه وصل تو راه پُر آسیب درد عشق تو درد بی درمان
 . سندگانیم حان و دل در گف
 چشم هر حکم و گوش هر فرمان
 گر سر صلح داری اینک دل
 و سر جنگ داری اینک حان
 دوش از شور عشق و حذبه شوق
 هر طرف می شتافتیم حیران
 آخر کار شوق دیدار
 سوی دیر مغان کشید عنان
 چشم بد دور خلوتی دیدم
 روش از نور حق نه از بیران
 ۱۰ هر طرف دیدم آتشی کآن شب
 دید در طور موسی عمران
 پیری آنجا بآتش افروزی
 ساد گرد پیر معجزگان
 همه سیمین عذار و گل رحسار
 همه شیرین زبان و تنگ دهان
 عود و چمگ و نی و دف و بربط
 شمع و نقل و گل و می و ربان
 ساقی ماهروی و مشکب موی
 مطرب بذله کوی خوش الحان
 ۱۱ مع و مغ زاده موبد و دستور
 خدمتش را تمام بسته میان
 من شرمنده از مسلمانی
 شدم آنجا بگوشه پنهان

پیر پرسید کیست این گفتند
 عاشقی بی قرار و سرگردان
 گفت جامی دهدش از می ناب
 گرچه ناخوانده باشد این مهمان
 ساقی آتش دست و آتش پرست
 ریخت در ساغر آتش سوزان
 ۲۰ چون کشیدم نه عقل ماند و نه هوش
 سوخت هم کفر از آن و هم ایمان
 مست افتادم و در آن مستی
 بزبانی که شرح آن نتوان
 این سخن می شنیدم از اعضا
 همه حتی الوریث و الشریان
 که یکی هست و هیچ نیست جز او
 وحده لا اله الا هو

(بند دوم)

از تو ای دوست نگسلم پیوند
 ورتیغم بُرند بند از بند
 ۲۰ الحق ارزان بود از ما صد جان
 وز دهان تو نیم شکر خند
 ای پدر پند کم ده از عشقم
 که نخواهد شد اهل این فرزند
 پند آنان دهند خلق ای کاش
 که ز عشق تو می دهند پند
 من ره گوی عافیت دامن
 چکنم کاوفتاده ام بکمنند

در کلیسا بدلسری ترسا،

گفتم ای دل بدام تو در بد،

۲۰ ای که دارد بستان زتارت،

هر سر موی من جدا پیوید،

ره بوحدت بیافتن تا کی،

ننگ تثلیث بر یکی تا چند،

سام حقی یگانه چون شاید،

که اب و ابن و روح قدس نهد،

لب شیرین کشود و با من گفت،

وز شکر حمد ریخت از لب قند،

که گر از سر وحدت آگاهی،

تهمت کافری بما میسند،

۳۰ در سه آئینه شاهد آرلی،

پرتو از روی تاساك افکند،

سه نگردد بریشم از اورا،

پرنیای خوانی و حریر و پرد،

ما درین گفتگو که از یکو،

شد ر باقوس این ترانه بلند،

که یکی هست و هیچ نیست جز او،

وحده لا اله الا هو،

(بد سوم)

دوش رفتم بکوی بادیه فروش،

ز آتش عشق دل بحوش و حروش،

مجلسی نعر دیدم و روشن،

مبیر آن بزم پیر بادیه فروش،

چاکران ایستاده صف در صف،
 باده خواران نشسته دوش بدوش،
 پیر در صدر و میکشان گردش،
 پارهٔ مست و پارهٔ مدهوش،
 سینه بی کینه و درون صافی،
 دل پر از گفته‌گو و لب خاموش،
 همه را از عنایتِ ازلی،
 چشم حق بین و گوش راز نیوش،
 ۴۰ سخنِ این بآن هنئاً لك،
 پاسخ آن باین که بادت نوش،
 گوش بر چنگ و چشم بر ساغر،
 آرزوی دو کون در آغوش،
 بادب پیش رفتم و گفتم،
 ای ترا دل قرارگاهِ سروش،
 عاشقم دردمند و حاجتمند،
 دردِ من بنگر و بدرمانِ گوش،
 پیر خندان بطنز با من گفت،
 ای ترا پیرِ عقل حلقه بگوش،
 ۴۰ تو کجا ما کجا ای از شرم،
 دخترِ رز نشسته برقع پوش،
 گفتمش سوخت جانم آبی ده،
 و آتشِ من فرو نشان از جوش،
 دوش میسوختم ازین آتش،
 آه اگر امشبم بود چون دوش،

گفت خندان که هین پیاله بگیر

ستدم گفت هان ربا ده موش

حروعه در کشیدم و گشتم

فارغ از ربح عقل و محبت هوش

.. چون بهوش آمدم یکی دیدم

ما نقی را همه خطوط و نقوش

ساکهان در صوامع ملکوت

این حدیثم سرش گفت بگوش

که یکی هست و هیچ نیست جز او

وحده لا اله الا هو

(بد چهارم)

چشم دل ناز کن که حان بیی

آنچه با دیدنیست آن بیی

کر باقلیم عشق رو آری

همه آفاق گلستان بیی

۱ بر همه اهل این زمین بمراد

گردش دور آسمان بیی

آنچه بیی دلت همان خواهد

و آنچه خواهد دلت همان بیی

بی سر و پا گدای آنحازا

سر ر ملک جهان گران بیی

هم در آن پا برهنه قومی را

بای بر فرق فرقان بیی

هم در آن سر برهنه جمعی را

بر سر ار عرش سایان بیی

- ۶: گاه وجد و سماع هر یکی را
 بر دو کون آستین فشان بینی
 دل هر ذره که بشگافی
 آفتابیش در میان بینی
 هرچه داری اگر بعشق دهی
 کافرم گر جوی زیان بینی
 جان گدازی اگر بآتش عشق
 عشق را کیمیای جان بینی
 از مضیق جهات در گذری
 وسعت ملک لا مکان بینی
 ۷: آنچه نشنیده گوش آن شنوی
 و آنچه نا دیده چشم آن بینی
 تا بجائی رساندت که یکی
 از جهان و جهانیان بینی
 با یکی عشق ورزی از دل و جان
 تا بعین الیقین عیان بینی
 که یکی هست و هیچ نیست جز او
 وحده لا اله الا هو
 (بند پنجم)
- یار بی پرده از در و دیوار
 در تجلّی است یا اولو الأبصار
 ۷۰: شمع جوئی و آفتاب بلند
 روز بس روشن و تو در شب تار
 گر ز ظلمات خود رهی بینی
 همه عالم مشرق انوار

کوزُوش قایید و عصا طلسی
 بهر این راه روشن و هموار
 چشم بکشا بگلستان و بهین
 حلوه آب صاف در گل و حار
 ز آب سیرنگ صد هزاران رنگ
 لاله و گل نگر درین گلزار
 ۸ پا براه طلب نه و ار عشق
 بهر این راه توشه بر دار
 شود آسان ز عشق کاری چند
 که بود پیش عقل بس دشوار
 یار گو بالعقد و الاصال
 یار حو بالعشی و الایکار
 صد رخت کن تَرابی ار گوسد
 باز میدار دیده بر دسدار
 تا بهائی رسی که می نرسد
 پای اوهام و دیده افکار
 ۹ بار یابی بمحفل کآنجا
 حمرئیل امین ندارد بار
 این ره این توشه تو این منزل
 مرد راهی اگر بیا و بهار
 و نه مرد راه چون دگران
 یار مسگوی و پشت سرمیچار
 هاتف ارباب معرفت که گهی
 مست حواسدشان و که هشیار
 ار می و حام و مطرب و ساقی
 ار مُع و دَیِر و شاهد و رَئار

۱. قصدِ ایشان نهفته اسرارِ یست
 که بایما کنند گاه اظهاری
 پی بری گر برآزسان دانی
 که همین است سرّ آن اسرار
 که یکی هست و هیچ نیست جز او
 وحده لا اله الا هو

(Strophic I)

"O Thou to whom both heart and life are a sacrifice, and O Thou in whose path both this and that are an offering !

The heart is Thy sacrifice because Thou art a charmer of hearts ; life is Thine offering because Thou art the Life of our lives¹.

Hard it is to deliver the heart from Thy hand ; easy it is to pour out our life at Thy feet.

The road to union with Thee is a road full of hardships ; the pain of Thy love is a pain without remedy.

We are servants holding our lives and hearts in our hands, with eyes [fixed] on Thy orders and ears [waiting] on Thy command. 5

If Thou seekest peace, behold our hearts ; and if Thou seekest war, behold our lives !

Last night, [impelled] by the madness of love and the impulse of desire, I was rushing in bewilderment in every direction.

At last desire for the [Beatific] Vision turned my reins towards the temple of the Magians.

Far from it be the Evil Eye ! I beheld a secret gathering bright with the Light of Truth, not with the Flames [of Hell].

On every side I beheld that fire which Moses the son of 'Imrân saw that night on Sinai. 10

There was an elder [busied] with tending the fire, round about whom respectfully stood the young Magians,

All silver-skinned and rose-cheeked, all sweet-tongued and narrow-mouthed.

[There were] lute, harp, flute, cymbals and barbiton ; candles, desert, roses, wine and basil ;

The moon-faced and musky-haired cup-bearer ; the witty and sweet-voiced minstrel.

¹ It is impossible adequately to preserve in English the play between dil and dilbar, jân and jânân.

Magian and Magian boy, Fire priest and High Priest, all with loins girt up for His service 15

I, ashamed of my Muhammadanism, stood there concealed in a corner

The elder enquired, 'Who is this?' They answered, 'A restless and bewildered lover'

He said, 'Give him a cup of pure wine, although he be an unbidden guest'

The fire handed and fire worshipping cup bearer poured into the goblet the burning fire

When I drained it off, neither reason remained nor sense, thereby were consumed both Infidelity and Faith 20

I fell down intoxicated, and in that intoxication, in a tongue which one cannot explain,

I heard this speech from [all] my limbs, even from the jugular vein and the carotid artery

'He is One and there is naught but He
There is no God save Him alone!'

(Strophe II)

O Friend, I will not break my ties with Thee, even though with a sword they should hew me limb from limb!

Truly a hundred lives were cheap on our part [to win] from Thy mouth a sweet half smile 25

O Father, counsel me not against love, for this son [of thine] will not prove susceptible [to counsel]!

People counsel these [others] O would that they would counsel me concerning Thy love!

I know the road to the street of safety, but what can I do? for I am fallen into the snare

In the church I said to a Christian charmer of hearts, 'O thou in whose net the heart is captive!

'O thou to the warp of whose girdle each hair tip of mine is separately attached! 30

'How long [wilt thou continue] not to find the way to the Divine Unity? How long wilt thou impose on the One the shame of the Trinity?

'How can it be right to name the One True God "Father," "Son," and "Holy Ghost"?'

She parted her sweet lips and said to me, while with sweet laughter
she poured sugar from her lips

'If thou art aware of the Secret of the Divine Unity, do not cast on us the stigma of infidelity!

'In three mirrors the Eternal Beauty cast a ray from His effulgent countenance. 35

'Silk does not become three things if thou callest it Parniyân, Harîr and *Parand*¹.'

Whilst we were thus speaking, this chant rose up beside us from the church-bell:

'He is One and there is naught but He:
There is no God save Him alone!'

(Strophe III)

Last night I went to the street of the wine-seller, my heart boiling and seething with the fire of love.

I beheld a bright and beautiful gathering presided over by the wine-selling elder. 40

The attendants stood row on row, the wine-drinkers sat shoulder to shoulder.

The elder sat in the chief seat and the wine-drinkers around him, some drunk and some dazed,

With breasts devoid of malice and hearts pure, the heart full of talk and the lips silent.

The eyes of all, by the Eternal Mercy, beholding the Truth, and their ears hearkening to secrets.

The greeting of this one to that one, 'Wassail!' the response of that one to this one, 'Drink-hale'! 45

With ears for the harp and eyes on the goblet, and the desire of both worlds in their embrace.

Advancing respectfully, I said, 'O thou whose heart is the abode of the Angel *Surûsh*²,

'I am an afflicted and needy lover: behold my pain and strive to remedy it!'

The elder, smiling, said to me mockingly: 'O thou to whom the Guide of Reason is a devoted³ slave!

¹ All these words, of which the first and last are Persian and the other Arabic, mean silk.

² Surûsh with the Zoroastrians, like Jibra'il (Gabriel) with the Muhammadans, is the Angel who brings revelation.

³ Literally "with a ring in the ear," a sign of servitude.

'Where art thou, and where are we¹, O thou for shame of whom the daughter of the grape² sits with veiled face?' 50

I said to him, 'My soul is consumed! Give me a draught of water, and abate my fire from its vehemence!

'Last night I was consumed by this fire and if my to-night be as my yestereven!

He sud smiling, 'Ho! Take the cup!' I took it. He cried, 'Hail Drink no more!

I drained a draught and became free from the pain of understanding and the trouble of sense

When I came to my senses I saw for a moment One, and all else mere lines and figures. 55

Suddenly in the temples of the Angelic World the *Surush*³ whispered these words into my ear

'He is One and there is naught but He
There is no God save Him alone!'

(Strophe IV)

Open the eye of the heart that thou mayst behold the spirit, that thou mayst see that which is not to be seen

If thou wilt turn thy face towards the Realm of Love thou wilt see all the horizons a garden of roses.

Thou wilt behold the revolution of the cycle of heaven favourable to all the people of this earth. 60

That which thou seest thy heart will desire and that which thy heart desireth thou wilt see.

The headless and footless beggar of that place thou wilt see heavy headed with the dominion of the world⁴

There also thou wilt see a bare footed company with their feet set on the summit of the Guard stars⁵

¹ That is, how far apart are we

² Wine, who must veil her face before the stranger (nd mahram)

³ See p. 294 supra, n. 2 ad calc

⁴ I.e. even the veriest beggar in the Realm of Love exercises in this lower world such authority as do the kings and rulers of earth and is as much preoccupied by his responsibility as they are.

⁵ Targaddn two bright stars in Ursa Minor, called "the Guards" or "Guardians" (from the Spanish word guardar, "to behold") because of their "singular use in navigation" See vol. II of my Traveller's Narrative, p. 125, ad calc

There also thou wilt see a bare-headed assembly canopied overhead by the throne of God.

Each one at the time of ecstasy and song thou wilt see shaking his sleeves over the two worlds¹. 65

In the heart of each atom which thou cleavest thou wilt behold a sun in the midst.

If thou givest whatsoever thou hast to Love, may I be accounted an infidel if thou shouldst suffer a grain of loss!

If thou meltest thy soul in the fire of Love, thou wilt find Love the Alchemy of Life;

Thou wilt pass beyond the narrow straits of dimensions, and wilt behold the spacious realms of the Placeless;

Thou shalt hear what ear hath not heard, and shalt see what eye hath not seen; 70

Until they shall bring thee to a place where of the world and its people thou shalt behold One alone.

To that One shalt thou make love with heart and soul, until with the eye of certainty thou shalt clearly see ‘That He is One and there is naught but He:

There is no God save Him alone!’

(Strophe V)

From door and wall, unveiled, the Friend shines radiant, O ye who have eyes to see!

Thou seekest a candle whilst the sun is on high: the day is very bright whilst thou art in darkest night. 75

If thou wilt but escape from thy darkness thou shalt behold all the universe the dawning-place of lights.

Like a blind man thou seekest guide and staff for this clear and level road.

Open thine eyes on the Rose-garden, and behold the gleaming of the pure water alike in the rose and the thorn.

From the colourless water [are derived] a hundred thousand colours:
behold the tulip and the rose in this garden-ground.

Set thy foot in the path of search, and with Love furnish thyself with provision for this journey. 80

By Love many things will be made easy which in the sight of Reason are very difficult.

¹ I.e. snapping his fingers at them, taking no account of them.

Speak of the Friend in the mornings and the evenings seek for the Friend in the gloaming and at dawn

Though they tell thee a hundred times '*Thou shalt not see me*¹' still keep thine eyes fixed on the Vision,

Until thou shalt reach a place to which the foot of Fancy and the eye of Thought cannot attain

Thou shalt find the Friend in an assembly whereunto not even Gabriel the trusted hath access 85

This is the Road, this thy Provision, this the Halting place if thou art a roadman, come and bring!

And if thou art not equal to the Road, then, like the others, talk of the Friend and scratch the back of thy head²!

O Hâtif, the meaning of the Gnostics, whom they sometimes call drunk and sometimes sober,

[When they speak] of the Wine, the Cup, the Minstrel, the Cupbearer, the Magian, the Temple, the Beauty and the Girdle,

Are those hidden secrets which they sometimes declare in cryptic
utterance. 90

If thou shouldst find thy way to their secret thou wilt discover that even this is the secret of those mysteries,

'He is One and there is naught but He:

There is no God save Him alone!'

¹ Lan tarâni, the answer given to Moses when he desired to see God face to face. See Qur'dn, vii, 139

² Like one bewildered or undecided

CHAPTER VII.

POETS OF THE QÁJÁR PERIOD.

The Qájár rule was strong though severe, and, in spite of its harshness, was, perhaps, welcome on the whole to a country which had suffered seventy years of anarchy and civil war. The brief and bloody reign of the eunuch Áqá Muḥammad Khán¹, who once more carried the Persian standards into Georgia and captured Tiflis, was followed by the milder administration of his nephew Fath-‘Alí Sháh (A.D. 1797–1834), to whose influence Ridá-qulí Khán, in the Introduction to his Majma‘u‘l-Fuṣaḥá, ascribes the revival of poetry and the restoration of a better literary taste. He himself wrote verses under the pen-name of Kháqán, and gathered round him a host of poets to whose lives and work several monographs are devoted, such as the Zínatu‘l-Madádih, the Anjuman-i-Kháqán, the Gulshan-i-Maḥmúd and Saḥṭ-natu‘l-Maḥmúd, the Nigáristán-i-Dará, and the Tadhkira-i-Muḥammad-Sháhi, all of which are described by Rieu in his Supplementary Catalogue of the Persian MSS. in the British Museum (pp. 84–91), and most of which were utilized by the above-mentioned Ridá-qulí Khán. One of them, the Gulshan-i-Maḥmúd, contains notices of forty-eight of Fath-‘Alí Sháh’s sons who wrote poetry, and at a later date the Royal Family supplied Persia with another verse-making autocrat in Náṣiru‘d-Dín Sháh (A.D. 1848–1896), but these kingly outpourings need detain only those who accept the dictum Kalámu‘l-Mulúk Mulúku‘l-Kalám (“the Words of Kings are the Kings of Words”).

¹ Though practically supreme for eighteen years (A.D. 1779–1797), he was not crowned until 1796 and was assassinated in the following year.

These poets of the earlier Qājār period might very well have been included in the preceding chapter, but for the inordinate length which it has already attained

Persian in earliest models

The only respect in which they differed from their immediate predecessors was in their reversion to earlier models and their repudiation of the school typified by 'Urfs, Šā'ib, Shāwkat, and their congeners. This fact is established from two opposite quarters. On the one hand Shibli, as we have seen¹, takes the view that Persian poetry, which began with Rūdākī, ended with Šā'ib, and that Qā'ānī and the moderns did but imitate the older classical poets, especially Farrukhī and Minuchihri. Rūdāqul Khān

Divergent taste of Persians and Indians etc.

takes the same view of the facts, but puts on them a quite different interpretation. According to him², Persian poetry had long been on the decline and at the end of the pre-Qājār period had become thoroughly decadent, so that the early Qājār poets did well to break away from the ideals of their immediate predecessors and revert to earlier models, amongst which he especially mentions the poems of Khāqānī, 'Abdu'l Wāsi-i-Jabālī, Farrukhī, Minuchihri, Rūdākī, Qatrān, 'Unsuri, Mas'ūd-i-Sā'id-i-Salmīn, Sanā'ī, Jalālu'd-Dīn Rūmī, Abū'l-Faraj-i-Rūmī, Anwārī, Asadī, Firdawsī, Nizāmī, Sā'dī, Azraqī, Mukhtārī, Mu'izzī, Lāmī, Nāsir-i-Khusraw and Adīb Šābir, all of whom flourished before the Fall of the Caliphate and the Mongol Invasion in the middle of the thirteenth century. Of the later poets Hāfiz was perhaps the only one who retained an undiminished prestige in the eyes of his countrymen, and it is doubtful how far even he served as a model, though this was perhaps rather because he was inimitable than because he was out of fashion, like Jāmī, 'Urfs and Šā'ib, who lost and never regained the position they had once held in their own country. Henceforth, therefore, the divergence between Turkish and Indian taste on the one hand and Persian taste on the other increases, while the action of the British rulers of India¹ in substituting Urdú for Persian as the polite language of that country in 1835-6 tended still further to cut off India from the intellectual and literary currents of modern Persia.

¹ Pp. 164 and 265 supra, and Shi'r-i-'Alam, vol. III, p. 189.

² Fifth (unnumbered) page of the Introduction to the Majma'at'l-Fusahā.

It would be easy with the help of the Biographies of Poets mentioned above and others of a later period to compile a list of a hundred or two more or less eminent poets of the Qājār period, but it will be sufficient for our purpose to mention ten or a dozen of those who followed the classical tradition. Nor is it necessary to group them according to the reigns in which they flourished, though it will be convenient to arrange them in chronological order. Of one great family of poets, the sons and grandsons of Wiṣāl (Mīrzā Shaffī, commonly called Mīrzā Kúchuk) who died in 1262/1846, it was my privilege to meet several, including the brothers Farhang and Yazdání, at Shīrāz in the spring of 1888². The latter was accompanied by his own son and the son of his deceased brother who wrote under the pen-name of Himmat. Of the three elder brothers, sons of Wiṣāl, the eldest, Wiqār, was about forty-two years of age when Riḍá-qulī Khán³ met him in Tīhrán in 1274/1857-8, while the second, Mīrzā Maḥmúd the physician, who adopted the takhalluṣ of Ḥakīm, died in 1268/1851. Of the third, Dáwarī, a specimen of whose work is quoted in translation in vol. ii of my Literary History, pp. 41-42, I do not know the date of decease. As his poems have not, I think, been published, I here give the Persian text on which the trans-

¹ At or about the same time they ceased to subsidise the publication of Oriental texts, thus inflicting a great injury on Oriental studies.

² See my Year amongst the Persians, pp. 267-8, and also p. 119.

³ Majma'u'l-Fuṣṣahá, vol. ii, p. 548.

20/1

کتابخانه

مازیان این خط را کشید
 زخمی فادیه لار و بان کوشید

تیر که کبریت دم زخم کشید
 که ز همراه بودیش ز سرش کشید

تا کی این گم که چه خواهیم کرد و این
 ای برادر من این جهان کشید

کین این که جبر روزی تعدد و جور
 کیستیم تبع جور و راجت کشید

تا بخویش آن لکانه کنی نام صال
 بایدت بردی ز محنت چکانه و خوش

ما نیت خواستی و آزار و عیان علی
 مریت باید و دولهای عزیزان زور

مری که زخی داغ نرسد بر دروغ
 چاره چون ننگی شین از برادر

غریبای من که شکی با عجب کجاست
 خدیو ده زغم دست یار

ما زنی با جبار که محبت نهم
 که مرا عجله است زید و یار

تا بخویش آن لکانه کنی نام صال
 بایدت بردی ز محنت چکانه و خوش

۵۷

lation above mentioned is based. It is taken from a small manuscript selection of his poems¹ given to me in Tíhrán in the winter of 1887-8 by my late friend the Nawwáb Mírzá Hasan 'Alí Khán, one of his admirers and patrons

Two stanzas of a musammat by Dáwán

ای بچه عرب صَحَّحَكَ اللَّهُ بِخَيْرِا
صبح است صوحی بده آن ساعر می را
رآن می که نقطب ار بدهی حرعه ویرا
سر پات بساید سر اکلیل حُدّی را
کردند سعاتش بندا چون تو نسی را
چون چرخ زنی گردِ حیر ناده حُدّی وار
گر بیست ترا باده یکی شیشه بر کش
بر حیز و عمارا عربی وار سر کش
همچون عربای دامنِ خود تا بکمر کش
یکدست عا شیشه بدان دستِ دگر کش
با دامنِ تر مَتّ ار آن دامن تر کش
ور حانه برو تا بدر حانه حَمّار

This mention of my kind friend the Nawwáb reminds me of a quaint incident which occurred while I was his guest at Tíhrán in the early part of the year 1888, and which shows how relatively unprofitable is the profession of a Persian poet now compared to what it was in the "good old days" when a poet's mouth was sometimes filled with gold or pearls as the reward of a successful poem which hit the taste of his patron. A minor poet, whose name I forget, if ever I knew it, came one day to the Nawwáb's house and

¹ These selections are now bound up in my MS bearing the class mark Y. 1. The whole musammat contains eight strophes, of which only the first two are here given

The modest reward of a modern panegyrist.

asked and obtained permission to recite a poem which he had composed in his praise. On its conclusion he received the sum of one túmán (at that time worth about six shillings), with which he departed, apparently very well contented. But so far from the gift being deemed insignificant, the Nawwáb was subsequently reproached by some of his friends for turning the poet's head and making him imagine that he could earn an honest livelihood by writing poetry!

This is no doubt one of the causes which are tending to put an end to the old style of poetry, especially the

Another cause of the decline of panegyric.

panegyric qaṣída. Another still more potent one is the position attained by the Press since the Revolution of 1905-6, for the poet now tends more and more to write for the people as a whole rather than for some special patron. The transition can be very well seen in the case of poets like the unfortunate Mírzá Jahángír Khán of Shíráz, the proprietor and editor of that remarkable product of the Revolution the weekly Šúr-i-Isráfíl, whose life, death, and literary activities in connection with that great national upheaval are fully discussed in my previous works, the Persian Revolution and the Press and Poetry of Modern Persia. As a poet and writer of the Revolution only did I know him until lately, when I received from my accomplished friend and former pupil Mr W. A. Smart, one of the most sympathetic Consular officers ever sent to Persia from this country, a large fragment (292 pages) of an untitled, anonymous, acephalous and incomplete Persian manuscript work¹ containing accounts of thirty-eight poets, mostly of Fárs, who were either still living in A.D. 1910 or who had died in the course of the preceding forty years. Amongst these mention is made of Mírzá Jahángír Khán (pp. 74-77), and specimens are given of his earlier pre-revolutionary poems, including one addressed to his friends at Shíráz from ¹ It bears the class-mark J. 19 in my library.

Tihrán, which are quite in the classical style, and bear no traces of the modern peculiarities. Two other not less eminent "transition poets" mentioned in this extraordinarily interesting volume are Abu'l Hasan Mírzá, a grandson of Fath-'Alí Sháh born in 1264/1848, and commonly entitled Hájji Shaykhu'r Ra'ís chiefly known as a philosophical and political writer and a strong advocate of Pan Islamism, who also wrote poetry, mostly topical, but in the classical forms, under the pen name of Hayrat (pp 102-121 of my MS), and the eminent journalist *Adíbu'l-Mamalik*¹ (born in 1277/1860-1), a descendant in the third degree of Mírzá 'Isá the

The transit on poets of the Revolu on

Qa'im Maqam, who composed verse under the pen name of Amírí of Faráhan (pp 39-50 of my MS). The new poets of the Revolution were therefore, except in the case of the younger ones who have appeared since that epoch making event, to a large extent the poets of the old school who had sufficient enthusiasm and flexibility to adapt themselves to the new conditions. But the transition itself is marked by as hard and fast a line as can mark any such historical transition, that line lying in the years 1906-7. Of course an abundance of poetry of the old type is still being produced, and I myself was gratified and honoured on the occasion of my sixtieth birthday (February 7, 1922) by receiving an album of verses contributed by sixteen of the most notable contemporary poets besides a separate qasída from 'Imádu l-Kuttáb, that Benvenuto Cellini of contemporary Persia.

The older forms of poetry in no danger of extinct on.

Nor is there any reason to apprehend the early disappearance of the old verse forms.

The panegyric (as opposed to the philosophical and didactic) qasída will probably become rarer for the reasons given above, but the mathnawí, ghazal and rubáí will survive as long as mysticism, love and epigram continue to interest the Persians.

¹ See pp 37-39 of my Press and Poetry in Modern Persia

After these preliminary general remarks on the poetry of the latest epoch, we may pass to the consideration of some of its chief representatives. For information as to those who flourished before about A.D. 1870 my chief sources have been the three works of that industrious writer Ridá-qulí Khán, poetically surnamed Hidáyat, to wit the large general biography of Persian poets entitled Majma'u'l-Fuṣahá ("the Concourse of the Eloquent"); the smaller biography entitled Riyádu'l-'Arifín ("Gardens of the Gnostics"), which deals chiefly with the mystical poets; and the Supplement to Mírkhwánd's Rawḍatu's-Ṣafá, which carries that well-known general history down to about 1857 and was already well advanced in 1272/1855-6, when the author returned from the embassy to Khwárazm described in his Safárat-náma, of which the Persian text was published by the late M. Ch. Schefer with a French translation in 1876-9¹. At the end of the ninth volume of the Rawḍatu's-Ṣafá (the second of the Supplement), which concludes the reign of Fath-'Alí Sháh, several pages (unfortunately unnumbered, so that exact references are impossible) are devoted to the notable statesmen, poets, theologians and other eminent men of that period which sometimes contain biographical material lacking in the two earlier monographs. From these three sources, so far as they extend, the following particulars are chiefly drawn, but I have also made use of a rare manuscript work (possibly an autograph) entitled Tadhkira-i-Dilgushá, a biography of contemporary poets by Mírzá 'Alí Akbar of Shíráz, who himself wrote poetry under the pen-name of modern poets.

Biographies of

Majma'u'l-Fuṣahá.

Riyádu'l-'Arifín.

Rawḍatu's-Ṣafá (Supplement).

Tadhkira-i-Dilgushá.

¹ Brief notices of these and other published works of the same author will be found in Mr E. Edwards's excellent Catalogue of the Persian printed books in the British Museum (London, 1922), columns 631-2.

Bismil, composed about 1237/1821-2. This fine MS., written throughout in a large, clear naskh with rubrications, formerly belonged to the late Sir Albert Houtum-Schindler, and now bears in my library the class-mark J. 18. Mention is made of this author and his work by Ridā-qulī Khān (who in his youth used to see him at Shīrāz) both in the Majma'u'l-Fusahā (ii, pp. 82-3) and the Riyddu'l-'Arifin (pp. 243-4).

(1) Saḥāb (d. 1222/1807-8).

Sayyid Muhammad of Iṣfahān, poetically surnamed Saḥāb, was the son of that Sayyid Ahmad Hādīf mentioned at the end of the preceding chapter as almost the only notable Persian poet of the eighteenth century. Ridā-qulī Khān (M.F., ii, 207-11) says that he was held in high honour by Fath-'Alī Shāh, for whom he composed, besides numerous panegyrics, a book of memoirs (presumably of poets) entitled Rashahdt-i-Saḥāb, which I have never met with, and that his Dīwān comprises only some five thousand verses. The following, censuring the conceit and arrogance of certain poets, are of some interest¹:

کس را کمالِ نفسِ بحرِ حُسنِ حالِ چیست
و آن را که حسنِ حالِ نباشد کمالِ چیست
شعرت هیچ و شاعری از هیچِ هیچ‌تر
در حیرتم که در سرِ هیچِ این حدالِ چیست
یک تن نپرسد از پیِ ترتیبِ چند لفظ
ای ابلهانِ بی هنر این قیل و قالِ چیست
از بهرِ مصرعی دو که مضمونِ دیگرست
چندین خیالِ حاه و تمنای مالِ چیست

¹ M.F., ii, p 211.

شعر اصلش از خیال بود حُسنش از مُحال،
تا از خیالِ این همه فکرِ مُحال چیست،
از چند لفظِ یابوه نَزْد لافِ برتری،
هر کس که یافت شرم چه و انفعال چیست،
صد نوع از این کمالِ برِ اهلِ رای و هوش،
با حُسنِ ذاتِ عامی نیکو خصالِ چیست،
گیرم که نظمِ بحرِ دُر و کانِ گوهرست،
با نثرِ کلکِ داورِ دریا نوالِ چیست،

"Wherein save in good nature lies anyone's 'perfection'¹, and what 'perfection' can there be to him who has not good nature?

Poetry is naught, and the poet's vocation less than naught: I wonder what is all this quarrel about nothing!

No one will ask about the arrangement of a few words: O fools devoid of merit, what is all this talk?

On account of one or two hemistichs expressing some one else's ideas, what is all this thought of position and hope of wealth?

The root of poetry is phantasy, and its beauty lies in the impossible²: what can result from the imagining of all these impossible ideas?

Whoever has discovered what shame and modesty are will not boast of superiority on account of a few silly words.

What in the eyes of men of judgment and sense are a hundred sorts of such 'perfection' compared with the good nature of an ordinary well-disposed man?

I grant that the naẓm (arrangement, or verse) of the ocean is pearls and mines of precious stones: but what is it compared with the naṭhr (scattering, or prose) of the pen of that Lord whose bounty is as that of the ocean?"

¹ Kamāl ("Perfection") means especially literary attainments. Cf. pp. 26-7 supra.

² The Arabs say "the best poetry is that which contains most lies," and the exaggeration characteristic of most Persian panegyrists is notorious. Cf. Lit. Hist. Persia, ii, pp. 69-70.

(2) Mijmar (d 1225/1810-11)

Sayyid Husayn-i Tabátábáí of Ardistán near Isfahán, who earned the title of Mujtahidu sh-Shu'arâ, is noticed by Ridâ qulî Khân in all three of his above-mentioned works. He owed his introduction to the Persian Court to his fellow townsman and fellow poet Mîrzâ 'Abdul-Wahhâb Nashât, who survived him by eighteen or nineteen years. He appears to have died young, for Ridâ qulî Khân, after praising his verse, of which but a small collection was left, says that "had he lived longer, he would probably have attained the utmost distinction," but even as it is he is one of the five poets of this period whom my accomplished old friend Hâjji Mîrzâ Yahyâ of Dawlatâbâd placed in the first class.¹ Copies of his poems are rare, but the British Museum possesses a manuscript of his Kulliyât, or collected works.² I can find nothing very noteworthy in Ridâ qulî Khân's selections but the two following riddles, the first on the Wind and the second on the Pen, taken from the Tadhkirat Dilgushâ may serve as specimens of his work

نَعْرَاد

چست آن پیکِ مَارِکِ مَقْدَمِ قَرَحِ حَبَابِ
روز و شب اندر تحرّکِ سال و مه اندر شتابِ
نافه‌اش در دامن و اندر گرسناش عمیرِ
عمرش در حب و اندر آستش مشکِ نابِ
رهروی بی پا و سر دیوانه بی عقل و هوشِ
عاشقی بی حان و مان آواره نسجورد و حوابِ

¹ See p 225 supra. The others are Furughî, Sabî (not Safâ), Nashât, and Qadâfî in the first class, Wisâl and Ridâ qulî Khân Hid'iyat in the second and Wiqâr and Surush in the third.

² Or 3543. See B M P S, No 354 pp 222-3.

کس نمیداند که از عشقِ که باشد بیقرار

کس نمی یابد که از هجرِ که دارد اضطراب

آب از او چون دلِ عشاق از زلفِ بُستان

گاه باشد در سلاسل که بود در پیچ و تاب

مُرده گاه از او زمین و زنده گاه از او جهان

چون قوی از پیری و همچون طبیعت از شباب

"What is that messenger of auspicious advent and fortunate presence who is moving every day and night and hastening every year and month ?

Who carries musk-pods in his skirt and perfume in his collar, ambergris in his pocket, and pure musk in his sleeve ?

A traveller without foot or head, a madman without sense or reason, a lover without abode or habitation, a wanderer without food or sleep.

None knoweth for love of whom he is so restless ; none discovereth through separation from whom he is so troubled.

Through him water becomes, like the hearts of lovers through the tresses of their idols, now wreathed in chains, now twisted and tormented.

Now the earth dies through him, and again the world lives through him, like the faculties through old age and like the nature through youth."

لَغْزِ قَلَمِ

کُلُّنِ باغِ نفسِ ناطقه را من یکی ابرِ گوهر افشانم

هم شکر ریز و هم عبیر افشان لبِ دلدار و زلفِ جانانم

در دُر افشانی و گهر ریزی طبعِ دستور و دستِ سلطانم

"To the rose-bush of the garden of the reasoning faculty I am a cloud raining down pearls,

Both pouring forth sugar and diffusing perfume [like] the darling's lips and the sweetheart's tresses.

In scattering pearls and pouring forth jewels I am [like] the nature of the Minister and the hand of the King."

(3) Šabá (d 1238/1822-3)

Fath-'Alī Khān of Kāshān, with the pen-name of Šabá, was poet laureate (Malikū'sh Shu'arā) to Fath-'Alī Shāh Ridā-qulī Khān, who mentions him in all three of his works, says that no poet equal to him had appeared in Persia for nearly seven hundred years, and that some critics prefer his Shahinshāh nāma to the Shāhnāma of Firdawsī. He also composed a Khudā-wand nāma, an 'Ibrat nāma and a Gulshan-i-Sabá, while his Dívān is said to comprise ten or fifteen thousand verses. He was for a time governor of Qum and Kāshān, but latterly devoted himself entirely to the Shāh's service. In his youth he was the pupil of his fellow townsman the poet Šabāhī, who was a contemporary of Hātīf and Ādhar, and died, according to the Majma'ul-Fusahā, in 1206/1791-2. His eldest son Mīrzā Husayn Khān poetically surnamed 'Andalīb ('Nightingale'), succeeded him in the laureateship. His poetry, being mostly panegyric, has little attraction for us, but is extraordinarily melodious as the following extract from a qasida quoted in the Tadhkirat-i-Dilgusha (which I think it unnecessary to translate, since the beauty lies in the form only) will show

عیدست و عشرت را بقا هر درکه شه ره ما
 در دم نوای مرحما بر لب سرود آفرین
 عیدست و شاهان جهان گویان بهر در آستان
 بر خاست بانگ بارهاں بشت شاه راد هس
 عیدست و ار بویت سرا آوار کوس و نانگ نای
 در کاج هفت اختر صدا در کاس نه گردون طیب
 شهزادگان حورشید فر هر کتله پروین سپر
 هر حاشاں پا تا بهر در آفرین حان آفرین

¹ Riyādu'l-'Arifin, p 264. The Shahinshāh nāma was lithographed in Bombay in 1890.

بر ز آسمان‌شان پایگه بل آسمان‌شان خاك ره
 دیدار رشك مهر و مه گفتار راز داد و دین
 شهرا مهین بر آستان با شه سریان داستان
 گوهر فشان بر آستان چندانکه شه از آستین
 فضل و هنر آب و گلش آسان از آن هر مشکش
 گنج جواهر در دلش گنجور قدرت را دفین
 در پیشگاهی کآسمان بنهاده سر در آستان
 عکسی از آن باغ جنان فرشی برآن عرش برین
 شاهنشہ فرخنده خو با صدر اعظم راز گو
 گلبرگ رو کافور مو آن پس نگر این پیش بین
 برجیس سان خورشید سا آن در سخن این در سخا
 چون پور پیر برخیا چون رود راد آبتین¹
 کار آگهی فرخ لقا از آن صفاهان در صفا
 بر رنج درویشی دوا بر گنج سلطانی امین
 برتر ز گردون پایه‌اش افزون ز آنجم مایه‌اش
 زین دو بهین پیرایه‌اش روی نکو رای رزین
 زیب بساط شه نشاط آری نشاط و انبساط
 اطفال معنی را قماط از کلک و از حبر انگبین
 هر طفل معنی کآورد گر بخردش از جان خرد
 ندهد بلی چون بگذرد ناقص ثمن مثنی ثمین

¹ The "aged son of Barkhiyá" is Āṣaf, Solomon's Wazír; the "noble son of Ábtín" is the legendary King Fírdún. I have made a slight but necessary emendation in the penultimate and antepenultimate words of this line.

(4) Nashāt (d 1244/1828-9)

Passing over Mīrzā Muhammad qulī Afshār Ulfat (d 1240/1824-5) and Āqā 'Alī Ashraf Āghā (d 1244/1828-9), the younger brother of the poet Bismil, both of whom were personally known to Ridā qulī Khān, we come to Mīrzā 'Abdu'l-Wahhāb of Isfahān, celebrated as a calligraphist as well as a poet, and master of the three languages, Arabic, Persian and Turkish. After nearly ruining himself by his prodigal hospitality and liberality to poets, mystics and men of letters, he gained the favour of Fath-'Alī Shāh, who conferred on him the title of Mu'tamadu'd Dawla. He excelled in the ghazal, and his best known work is entitled Ganjīna (the "Treasury"). The following chronogram gives the date of his death (A H 1244)

ار قلب جهان نشاط رفته

"Nashāt (Joy) hath departed from the heart of the world"

(5) Mīrzā Abu'l-Qasim Qā'im-maqām (put to death in 1251/1835)

Two eminent men, father and son, bore this title (of which the literal meaning is exactly equivalent to "lieutenant," in the sense of vicar or deputy), Mīrzā 'Īsā of Farāhān, called Mīrzā Buzurg, who acted as Deputy Prime Minister to Prince 'Abbās Mīrzā and died in 1247/1831-2, and his son Mīrzā Abu'l Qāsim, who, on the death of Fath 'Alī Shāh, fell into disgrace, and was put to death by his successor Muhammad Shāh on June 26, 1835¹. The latter was, from the literary point of view, the more remarkable, but though he wrote

Mīrzā Abu'l
Qasim Qā'im
maqām
(d 1251 1835)

¹ See R. G. Watson's History of Persia, pp 271-2 and 287-8. His estimate of this Minister's character differs very widely from that of Ridā qulī Khān.

poetry under the pen-name of Thand'at, he is more celebrated as a prose-writer, his numerous published letters being regarded by his countrymen as models of good style. I possess a collection of his writings, both prose and verse, compiled at the instance of the late Prince Farhád Mírzá in 1281/1864-5, and lithographed at Tabríz in 1282/1865-6, of which the letters, addressed to various more or less eminent contemporaries but only occasionally bearing dates¹, occupy by far the larger portion. Many of them are diplomatic documents of some historical importance, e.g. the apology addressed to the Tsar of Russia for the murder of the Minister Grebaïodoff and his staff at Tíhrán on February 11, 1829², which is here given as a specimen of the Qá'im-maqám's much admired style.

نامه شاهنشاهی بامپراطور اعظم در باب گذشتن خون ایلچی

بآن طور که خواهش کرده بودند

اول دفتر بنام ایزد دانا، صانع پروردگار حق و توانا،

وجودی بی مثل و مانند مبرا از چون و چند که عادل و عالم
است. و قاهر هر ظالم پاداش هر نیک و بد را اندازه و حد نهاده
بحکمت بالغه خود بدکاران را زجر و عذاب کند و نیکوکاران را
اجر و ثواب بخشد، و درود نامعدود بر روان پیغمبران راست
کار و پیشوایان فرخنده کردار باد، و بعد بر رای حقایق
نمای پادشاه ذی جاه انصاف کیش عدالت اندیش تاجدار با
زیب و فرّ شهریار بحر و برّ برادر والا گهر خجسته اختر امپراطور
ممالک روسیه و مضافات که دولتش با جاه و خطر است و
رأیتش با فتح و ظفر مخفی و مستور نماناد که ایلچی آن

¹ Shawwál, 1238 (June-July, 1823), is the earliest date I have noticed.

² The circumstances are fully given by R. G. Watson, op. cit., pp.

دولت را در پای تحت این دولت باقتضای حوادث دهر و عوای کسان او با حُبال شهر آسمی رسید که تدبیر و تدارک آن بر ذمه کارگذاران این دوست واقعی واجب و لازم افتاد، لهذا اولاً برای تمهید مقدمات عدروحاهی و پاس شوکت و احترام آن برادر گرامی فرزند ارحمید خود حسرو میرزا را بهای تحت دولت بهمه روسیه فرستاد، حقیقت ناگاهی این حادثه و نا آگاهی آسای این دولت را در تلو نامه صادقانه مرقوم و معلوم داشتیم و ثانیاً نظر نکمال یگانگی و اتفاق [که] ما بین این دو حضرت آسمان رفعت هست انتقام ایلچی مرور را بر ذمت سلطنت خود ثابت دانسته هر کرا از اهالی و سُکن دار الخلافه گمان میرفت که درین کار رشت و کردار ناسرا اندک مدحلیتی تواند داشت ناندازه استحقاق مورد سیاست و حد و احراج بلد نمودیم حتی داروغه شهر و کدخدای محله را نیز بهمین حریم که چرا در حردار شده و قبل از وقوع این حادثه صابطه شهر و محله را محکم نداشته اند عمل و تسبی و ترهمن کردیم، بالا تر از ایما همه پاداش و سزائی بود که نسبت بهعالیجناب میرزا مسیح وارد آمد نا مرتبه احتیاد در دین اسلام و اقتفا و اقتدائی که زمره حواص و عوام ناو داشتند بواسطه اجتماعی که مردم شهر هنگام حدوث عایله ایلچی در دایره او کرده بودند گذشت و اغماص را نظر اتحاد دولتی شایسته ندیدیم و شفاعت هیچ شفیع و توسط هیچ واسطه در حق او مقبول بیعتاد پس چون اعلام این گذارش ناں برادر بیکو سیر لازم بود تحریر این نامه دوستی علامه پرداخته اعلام تفصیل اوصاع را بررید مؤید موفق نایب السلطنه عباس میرزا محول داشتیم امید از درگاه پروردگار داریم که در مدد مراتب و داد این دو دولت اندیت سیاد در

تَرْقى و ازدیاد باشد و روابطِ دوستی و یگانگیِ حضرتین پیوسته
بآمد و شدِ رسل و رسایل متأكّد و متضاعف گردد و العاقبة بالعافیه

تحریراً فی شهر ربیع الاول ۱۲۴۵هـ

"The Royal Letter to the Most Great Emperor concerning the reparations for the murder of the Envoy in such wise as was desired.

"The beginning of the record is in the Name of the All-Knowing God, The Living and All-Powerful Creator and Provider,— —that Peerless and Incomparable Being, exempt from every 'how' and 'how much¹,' Who is just and wise, and subdueth every wrong-doer, Who hath set a measure and limit to the recompense of every good and evil deed, and Who, by His far-reaching wisdom, reproveth and punisheth the doers of evil, and rewardeth and recompenseth the well-doers. And countless blessings be upon the spirits of the righteous Prophets and beneficent Leaders².

But to proceed. Be it not hidden and concealed from the truth-discerning judgment of that most eminent, equitable, and just King, that brilliant and glorious Sovereign, that Lord of land and sea, my noble-natured and fortunate-starred brother, the Emperor of the Russian domains and their dependencies, whose rule is mighty and glorious, and whose standards are triumphant and victorious, that a disaster hath overtaken the Envoy of that State in the capital of this, by impulse of the vicissitudes of the time and the quarrels of his people with certain ignorant townsfolk, for which it is incumbent and obligatory on the acting officials of this Government to make reparation and give satisfaction. Therefore, in order to express our preliminary apologies and to satisfy the self-respect and honour of that esteemed brother, I have sent my dearly beloved son Khusraw Mīrzá³ to the capital of the glorious Russian State. In the course of a friendly letter we have expressed and explained the truth as to the suddenness of this tragedy and the non-complicity of those responsible for the conduct of our Government, and secondly, having regard to the perfect record and agreement existing between these two Heaven high Courts, we have recognized it as incumbent on Our Royal Person to avenge the above mentioned Envoy, and, according to his deserts, have chastised, punished or expelled from the country everyone of the inhabitants and dwellers in our Capital who was suspected of having participated in the slightest degree in this foul deed and improper action. We have even reprimanded and dismissed the chief constable of the city and the headman of the quarter, merely for the crime of being informed too late and of not having established a firmer control over the town before the occurrence of this catastrophe. Beyond all this was the retribution and punishment which befel His Reverence Mírzá Masfih, notwithstanding the rank of mujtahid which he holds in the religion of Islám and the respect and influence which he enjoys alike with gentle and simple by reason of the assembly made by the townsfolk in his circle. Having regard to the concord of our two Governments, we have regarded as improper any overlooking of or connivance at, such matters, nor hath the intercession or intervention of anyone been admitted in regard to him. Wherefore, since it was necessary to make known this procedure to that brother of goodly disposition, we have applied ourselves to the writing of this friendly letter, committing the elucidation of the details of these events to our divinely aided and favoured son Prince 'Abbás Mírzá, our Viceroy. The hope which we cherish from the Court of God is that every moment the extent of the mutual affection of these two States of ancient foundation may expand and increase, and that the bonds of friendship and unity of these two Courts may be continually confirmed and multiplied by the interchange of messengers and messages and may the end be in welfare!

¹ I.e. transcending quality and quantity.

² As the letter is addressed to a Christian sovereign, the usual specific mention of Muḥammad is replaced by this more general phrase.

³ See R. G. Watson, op. cit., pp. 254-6. He was the son of 'Abbās Mīrzá and therefore the grandson of Fath-'Alī Sháh.

"Written in the month of the First Rabí, 1245 (September 1829)

This letter, although professedly from Fath 'Alí Sháh, was, of course, really written by the Qá'im maqám. It must have been gall and wormwood to him to be compelled to write so civilly, indeed so humbly, to the Russians, of whom he says in a poem commemorating a Persian victory by 'Abbás Mírzá over them and the Turks'

*Rás
manhá*

¹ Majma'u'l Fusahá, II, p 88

رومِ شوم و روسِ منحوس از دو جانب،

قصداًشان تسخیر آذربایجان شد،

"The unlucky Turks and the ill-starred Russians on either side attempted the subjugation of Ādharbāyján," and in one of his letters to Mīrzā Buzurg of Nūr, written after the conclusion of peace with Russia (probably in 1243/1828), he laments that he no longer dares speak of the "Rūs-i-manhūs" (the "sinister" or "ill-starred Russians"):

تالان سیم که در مقدمهٔ روس میترسم بگویم منحوس

A later, greater, and more virtuous, but equally unfortunate, Persian Prime Minister, Mīrzā Taqī Khān *Amīr-i-Kabīr*¹, still further simplified the style of official correspondence; but the Qā'im-maqām's letters, though they may not strike one unused to the flowery effusions of the preceding age as very simple, mark an immense advance on the detestable rhodomontades which had for too long passed as eloquent and admirable, and probably deserve the high esteem in which, as already mentioned, they are held by the best contemporary Persian taste and judgment. A critical annotated edition of these letters would be of considerable literary and historical value, and might with advantage engage the attention of some Persian scholar whose interests are not confined to a remote past.

(6) Wiṣāl (d. 1262/1846) and his sons.

I have already mentioned Wiṣāl, some of whose gifted sons and grandsons I was privileged to meet at Shīrāz in the spring of 1888. He is generally regarded by his countrymen as one of the most eminent of the modern poets, and both Riḍā-qulī Khān, who devotes lengthy notices to him in all three of his works, Wiṣāl (d. 1262/1846) and his sons.

¹ For a most favourable sketch of his character, see R. G. Watson, op. cit., pp. 404-6.

and the poet Bismil, the author of the Tadhkirat i-Dilgushá, were personally acquainted with him, the latter intimately. His proper name was Mírzá [Muhammad] Shafí, but he was commonly entitled "Mírzá Kuchuk," and he was a native of Shíráz. Bismil speaks in the most glowing terms of his skill in calligraphy and music as well as in verse, wherein he holds him "incomparable" ('admu'l mithál), and praises his lofty character and fidelity in friendship, but describes him as "rather touchy" (andak zud rang), a description illustrated by Ridí qulí Khán's remark (in the Rawdatu's-Safá) that he was much vexed when the Sháh, meaning to praise him, told him that he was "prodigal of talents!" He is said to have written twelve thousand verses, which include, besides qasidas and ghazals, the Basm i-Wisál and the continuation and completion of Wahshí's Farhad u Shírin, described as 'far superior to the original!'. He also translated into Persian the Atwad-qu'dh-Dhahab ('Collars of Gold') of ZamaKhsharí. Bismil, who professes to have read all his poems, only cites the relatively small number of 213 couplets, of which the following are fairly typical, and afford a good instance of what Persian rhetoricians call the "attribution of praise in the form of blame," for the qasida begins

"The sea, the land, heaven and the stars—
Each one of them declares the King a tyrant—an opening calculated to cause consternation to courtiers, until it is stated that the sea considers itself wronged by his liberality, the mountain because he has scattered its hoarded gold like dust, the stars because they are eclipsed in number and splendour by his hosts, and so forth. As

باسراف در کمالات بست داد¹

فرهاد و شریں وحشی را تمام فرموده و کمال فصاحت ظاهر²
نموده و بمراتب به از وحشی گفته³

such far-fetched conceits can hardly be made attractive in translation, I again confine myself to quoting a few lines of the original:

هرکس شها ز بحر و بر و چرخ و اخترست
 اقرار میکنند که خسرو ستمگوست
 ز آنها یکیست بحر که نالد ز دست شاه
 کآبر ازو برفت و کنون خاک بر سرست
 اندخته‌ام تمام بپردخت و خود نگفت
 کاین سنگریزه نیست که مرجان و گوهرست
 دریا نشست و کوه بر آورد سر که داد
 زین شاهِ جود پیشه مرا دل پر آذرست
 بر من هر آنچه رفت بدریا ز شه نرفت
 مرجان کجا بپایه یاقوتِ احمرست
 لعلی که جز بر افسرِ شاهان حرام باد
 بی آب تر ز افسرِ شاهانش بر درست
 ز مرا ندیدی و آن عزتی که داشت
 با خاکِ ره ز جودِ وی اکنون برابرست
 کوه‌است و سنگِ خویش کنون از سخای شاه
 و آن نیز پیشِ حلمِ وی از گاه کمترست
 فراخت چرخ سر که مرا شکوه بیشتر
 برفش فزون‌ترست که بامش فزون‌ترست
 اختر مرا شمار نه و پیشِ لشکرش
 اختر مگو که مهره چندم بشش درست
 خورشید را که چشم و چراغ زمانه بود
 آتش بدل ز مجمرِ شاهش چو مجمرست

تا کرد شیرِ رایتش آهنگِ آسمان
 شیرِ من از هراسِ چو روباہِ لاعزت
 از پیشِ سرِ گرسه چشمِ سارِ شاه
 صد عجزِ نامہ بیشِ ببالِ کموترت
 این شاه نیست دشمنِ بحرت و معدست
 این شاه نیست آفتِ چرخِ است و احترت

Wisál's Farhád u Shitrín has been lithographed, and ample selections from his poems are given by Ridá-qulí

Khán in his Riyádu'l-'Arifín (pp 337-50) and Majma'u'l-Fusaha (II, pp 528-48), which latter work also contains (pp 548-58) an ample notice of his eldest son Wiqár, who was presented to Násiru'd-Dín Sháh in 1274/1857-8 at Tíhrán, where his biographer met him again "after twenty years' separation" The same work contains notices of Wiqár's younger brothers, Mírzá Mahmúd the physician, poeti-cally named Hakím (d 1268/1851-2 pp 102-5), and Mírzá Abu'l-Qásim Farhang, of whom

I have already spoken (p. 300 supra), but not of the three other brothers Dáwarí, Yazdání and Himmat. The following fine musammat by Dawarí, describing one of the Sháh's hunting parties, I copied for myself in the house of the late

Nawwáb Mírzá Hasan 'Alí Khán at Tíhrán early in the year 1888, and, as it has never been published, and I know of no other copy in Europe, I cannot resist the temptation of here assuring a survival hitherto so precarious, for it was copied on a loose half-sheet of note-paper which I only accidentally came across just now while searching for something else.

يك چند جدا از نرم آن شوح پسر بود

اروى نه نشان بود مرا و نه حمر بود

با موکب منصور همانا بسفر بود،

از حسرت او آتش شوقم بجگر بود،

شبهای فراقم ز شب گور بتر بود،

روزم ز غم هجر سیه تر ز شب تار،

دوشینه همان ز اول شب ناشده پاسی،

زنگی شب افکنده برخ تیره پلاسی،

با قیر بیندوده و پوشیده لباسی،

مه بر سر گردون شده چون سیمین طاسی،

آمد ز در آن دلبر بی ترس و هراسی،

یکباره ببرد از دل من انده و تیمار،

بر بسته میان و زده خنجر بکمر بر،

مسکین دلم از خنجر تیزش بحذر بر،

سرداری سنجاب پوشیده ببر بر،

چوخای خراسانی آنرا بزبر بر،

از بس هوس دیدن من داشت بسر بر،

از ره سوی من آمده با چکمه و شلوار،

پُر خاک سر و زلف و رخ از گرد سپاهش،

خشکیده دو عناب تر از صدمه راهش،

از بس نزده شانه بزلغین سپاهش،

درهم شده و ریخته بر گرد کلاهش،

چون کاسه خون سرخ شده چشم سپاهش،

از صدمه بیخوابی و از زحمت بسیار،

یک دسته گل سرخ ره آورد سفر داشت،

از سنبل تر نیز یکی دسته بسر داشت،

ار لعل ندحشای ځک حَقَّه کهر داشت،

ار حَقَّه عحتر که ځکی تمگ شکر داشت،

چون ار دل بیمار من حسته حمر داشت،

در تمگ شکر داشت دواي دل بیمار،

گفتم صما گرچه نسی ربح کشدی،

صد شکر که شاد آمدی و بیک رسیدی،

حان رهی از دست غماں نار حردی،

بر کو که در این راه چه کردی و چه ددی،

در موکب مصور چه دیدی و شنیدی،

چون بود سراسحار و چه شد عاقبت کار،

گفتا که بودی و ندیدی که چه سان بود،

بحیرکه شاه ځکی لاله‌ستان بود،

هر گوشه ر حون دحلّه بعداد رواں بود،

تا چشم‌همی کار کند تیر و کمان بود،

تا انرهمی حای دهد گرز و سان بود،

نه دشت پدیدار بُد ار لاش و نه گُهار،

دلها همه آسوده ر ربح و ر حرن بود،

در دشت و بیابان همه گل بود و سمن بود،

کځک دری ار هر طرفی قهقهه رن بود،

بحیرکه ار آهو چون دشت خُش بود،

اینها همه ار بحث شه شیر شکن بود،

کاقبال وی امروده نود سختش بیدار،

بح سج چه تماشائی و وه وه چه شکاری،

آراسته صحرا و بیابان چو نگاری،

گیتی بزمستان شده چون تازه بهاری
هر گوشه ز آهو و ز نخجیر قطاری
هر آهوئی آویخته از ترك سواری
چون لاش بقناره قصاب نگونسار

This poem is simple, sonorous and graphic; the court page, who has just returned from accompanying the Sháh on a winter hunting-expedition, and is in so great a hurry to visit his friend the poet that he enters in his riding-breeches and boots (bá chakma wa shalwár), with hair still disordered and full of dust, and eyes bloodshot from the glare of the sun, the hardships of exposure, and lack of sleep, bringing only as a present from the journey (rah-dward-i-safar) roses and hyacinths (his cheeks and hair), rubies of Badakhshán (his lips), and a casket of pearls (his teeth), is a vivid picture; and if a description of the Royal massacre of game reminds us of the immortal Mr Bunker's Bavarian battue¹, we must remember that the wholesale slaughters of game instituted by Chingíz Khán the Mongol in the thirteenth century, whereof the tradition still survives to some extent, were on a colossal scale, altogether transcending any European analogy².

In 1887, the year before I met Dáwarí's brother Farhang at Shíráz, two of his unpublished poems were shown to and copied by me in London. One was a qaṣída in praise of Queen Victoria, composed on the occasion of her Jubilee, which I was asked to translate so that it might perhaps be brought to her notice, a hope not fulfilled. The other, composed in May of the same year (Sha'bán, 1304), contained a quaint description

Farhang's
description of Paris.

¹ See J. Storer Clouston's Lunatic at Large (shilling edition, 1912, p. 241).

² See Baron d'Ohsson's Histoire des Mongols (the Hague and Amsterdam, 1834), vol. i, pp. 404-6; and p. 59, n. 2 supra.

of Paris, laudatory for the most part, but concluding with some rather severe reflections on the republican form of government. It differs widely from the poems of Farhang cited in the Majma'ul-Fusahd (ii, pp 384-8), is full of French words, and produces, as was probably intended, a somewhat comic and burlesque effect. It contains 78 verses and is too long to be cited in full, but I here give the opening and concluding portions:

چشم نکشا بیا بین انوار	سوی پاریس ار در و دیوار
دیده راز بین خود بکشی	تا بینی ز هر طرف اسرار
سر آزادگان و آزادی	حق نموده برایشان اظهار
همگی خواصه‌های آزادند	نیست مملوک حمله‌شان احرار
همه شهر پادشاه و شند	هم زن و مرد و هم صغار و كبار
همه دارای مکت و ثروت	همه با مال و دولت بسیار
همه دارای شغل و کار خودند	نیست در ملک یک نفر بیکار
همگی صاحب منصب و شغل	همه سر کرده و همه سالار
شهر آراسته چو حله برین	باغی آراسته چو باغ بهار
شب زس مشعل است و شمع و چراغ	نیست فرقی میان لیل و نهار
ماه رویان و گلعدارا را	بگر از هر طرف قطار قطار
کوچه‌هایی همه چو باغ ارم	هر طرف بر نشسته سرو و چار
در حیابان و کوچه‌ها بیی	کُرسی و صدلی دویست هزار
همه کالسکه‌های پُر دگر	همه آتورها پُر از دلدار
و چه کالسکه‌ها چو حله حور	و چه آتورها های خوش رفتار
از ترم و آ و آمبوس سی	هست چندان که ناید او شمار
ز اول شهر تا ساحر شهر	در حیابان و کوچه و بلوار
گوئیا حله ز قصر بهشت	می برندش همی یمن و یسار

¹ Voiture² Tramway³ Omnibus⁴ Boulevard

کس ندیده که به شود بهمان،
 زین سبب است سلطنت در کار،
 نوحشانی منظم به با مردار،
 منتهی میگرد در دیوار،
 می بنشیند پیش کفایت،
 مشورت میرسد در هر کار،
 هنگام عاقلان و کار کداز،
 متقی رای و متقی گفتار،
 کینه محروم در همه اظهار،
 فور محرومی زنده مدار،
 کس نکرده سلطنت اقزار،
 فکری پادشاه ملل مدار،
 نیست کاری برایشان دیوار،
 بودن تا به قیل هم اعمار،
 سال حوری هزار و چند و چار،
 کیم این شعرها به شعاع،
 هرچه این گویند آن ذکر شود،
 از هر علم و از هر دانش،
 همه سلطان دولت جویند،
 بعد نویسی و نایابی،
 دراست دولت دراست،
 نوایان صبح و بزمین محاسن،
 متقی قول و متقی کار،
 محاسن معقود رفعت حدی،
 کفایت میسر در هر امر،
 محاسن معقود برای همه،
 نومی از عاقلان و دانایان،
 شریکان مصطفی با سلطان،
 همه تان پادشاه و سلطان،
 حکمت و طبع درویش بود،

Lack of space compels me to pass over several poets of some note, such as Agā Muhammad Hasan Zargar

("the Goldsmith") of Isfahan, who died in 1270/

1853-4¹, Agā Muhammad 'Ashiq, a tailor, also of Isfahan, who died at the age of seventy in 1281/1864², Mirza Muhammad 'Alī Surush of Sidih, entitled Shamsu'sh Shu'ara, who died in 1285/1868-9³, and

Agā Muhammad 'Alī Jayhun of Yazd, of whose life I can find no particulars save such as can be gleaned from his verses, but who composed, besides numerous poems of

¹ See Majma'ul Funajid, II, pp 151-2

² Ibid, pp 346-9

³ Ibid, pp 184-95.

شکر که از یاری بردای من
 جمع شد اوراق پریشان من
 بیست درو عاریت هیچ کس
 حاجت مست آنچه درو هست و بس
 خردو سه بیتی رعب و رعب
 کآمد حاری بزبانی قلم
 حاصه که در طق عبارت همی
 رفته بدانحمله اشارت همی
 تا ر حسودان نرسد ذق مرا
 سحره باطل نشود حق مرا
 رفته ر ماه رجب ایام بیست
 پسخه و دو سال و هزار و دویست
 کم بود ارسی دو سه ماه سال من
 لیک نسی حسته بود حال من
 سکه ز غم کوژتر از هاله‌ام
 راست چو پیران بود ساله‌ام
 لیک عمر من غیر عشقت و بس
 ز آنکه خزاو بیست کسم داد رس
 شادی عالم همه در این غم است
 عاشق ارین عمر بجان خرم است
 عمر اگر ایست فروتر خوش است
 بر صفت قدم مکرر خوش است
 هر که اری عمر بدلت پرتوی است
 در بطرش ملک دو عالم حوی است
 یا رب ازین غم دل من شاد کن
 و غم دنیا دلم آزاد کن

His proper name was Ḥabīb, under which he originally wrote, and which he uses as his takhalluṣ, or nom de guerre, in many of his earlier poems. Later when he and Mīrzā ‘Abbās of Bistām, who originally wrote under the pen-name of Miskīn, had attached themselves to Ḥasan ‘Alī Mīrzā Shujā‘u’s-Saltāna, for some time Governor of Khurāsān and Kirmān, that prince changed their pen-names respectively to Qā‘ānī and Furūghī, after his two sons Ogotāy Qā‘ān and Furūghu’d-Dawla¹.

Qā‘ānī was born at Shīrāz. His father, Mīrzā Muḥammad ‘Alī, was also a poet who wrote under the pen-name of Gulshan. Though Qā‘ānī was but a child when he died, his statement in the *Kitāb-i-Parīshān*² that “though thirty complete years have elapsed since the death of my father, I still imagine that it was but two weeks ago” cannot be reconciled with the other statement quoted above that he was not yet thirty when he completed the book in question. The Tadhkira-i-Dilgushā consecrates articles to both father and son, but unfortunately in my manuscript the last two figures of the date of Gulshan’s death are left blank, while it is also omitted in the notice contained in the *Majma‘u’l-Fuṣaḥā*³, which is very meagre.

About Qā‘ānī’s seemingly uneventful life there is not much to be said. He appears to have spent most of it at Shīrāz, where in the spring of 1888 I had the honour of occupying the room in the house of the Nawwāb Mīrzā Ḥaydar ‘Alī Khān which he used to inhabit; and, as we have seen, he resided for some time at Kirmān. The latter part of his life, when he had established himself as a recognized Court poet, was spent at Tīhrān, where he died in

¹ Majma‘u’l-Fuṣaḥā, ii, p. 394.

² Tīhrān lithographed edition of Qā‘ānī’s works of 1302/1884-5, p. 35.

³ Vol. ii, p. 426.

HÁJJI MÍRZÁ ÁQÁSÍ

1270/1853-4. Two of his latest poems must have been those which he wrote to celebrate the escape of Násiru'd Dín Sháh from the attempt on his life made by three Bábis on August 15, 1852, quoted in my *Traveller's Narrative*¹

Qá'ání is one of the most melodious of all the Persian poets, and his command of the language is wonderful, but he lacks high aims and noble principles. Not only does he flatter great men while they are in power, and turn and rend them as soon as they fall into disgrace, but he is prone to indulge in the most objectionable innuendo and even the coarsest obscenity. In numerous qasidas he extols the virtues and justice of Hájji Mírzá Áqásí², the Prime Minister of Muhammad Sháh, but in a qasida in praise of his successor Mírza Taqí Khán Amír-i Kabír he alludes to the fallen minister thus

سهای طالعی شقی شسته عادلای تقی

که مؤمنان متقی کند انتحارها

"In the place of a vile tyrant is seated a just and God fearing man,
In whom pious believers take pride"

Of his innuendo the following is a good specimen

حدادان حدادان دوید و پیش من آمد

دوخت دو لب در لبم که بوسه برن ها

الحق شرور آمدم بدین لب مکر

بوسه رزن در لبی چو لاله حمرا

کاس لب همچون ربوی من نه سزا بود

بر لبمکی سرخ تر ر خون مصفا

¹ Vol. II, pp 325-6

² Tihván ed of 1302/1884 5, pp 19 35 40 41, 43 70 82 94 95, 115, 123 130 etc

گفتش ای تَرَك داده گیر دو صد بوس،
 روی ترش کرد و گفت کُبر فرو هل،
 کز لب لعل تو قانعم بستماسا،
 شاعر و آنگاه ردّ بوسه شیرین،
 کز تو تولا نکو بود نه تبرا،
 مادج شاهی تورا رسد که بروبد،
 کودك و آنگاه تَرَك جورِ مُنقا،
 خاك رهِترا بزلِفِ تافته حورا،
 بوسه بزن مر مرا ز لطف و گرنه،
 در همه عَضُومِ مخیّری پی بوسه،
 نزد بُتان سرشکسته گُردم و رسوا،
 از سرم اینك بگیر و بوسه بزن تا....
 بوسه چه باشد که مستحقّ کناری،
 شاکرم اینك ببوسه تو ولی با....
 روی و لب هر دو نیک درخور بوسند،
 این من و اینك تو یا ببوس لبم یا....
 گفتش ای تَرَك تَرَك این سخنان گوی،
 بس کن ازین غمزو رمزو عشوه و ایما،

The beauty of Qá'ání's language can naturally only be appreciated by one who can read his poems in the original, which is fortunately easily accessible, as his works have been repeatedly published¹. I have chiefly used the Tíhrán lithographed edition of 1302/1884-5, and in a lesser degree the Tabríz lithographed edition of 1273/1857, and the 'Selections... recommended for the Degree of Honour

¹ See E. Edwards's Catalogue of the Persian printed books in the British Museum, 1922, columns 237-9.

Examination in Persian" printed at Calcutta in A D 1907. Like most of the Qājār poets, he excels chiefly in the qasida, the musammāt and the tarkīb-band, but the following *ghazal*¹ is extraordinarily graceful and melodious:

یارکی مراست رند و ندله‌گو،
 شوخ و دلربا خوب و خوش سرشت،
 طره‌اش عبیر پیکرش حریر،
 عارضش بهار طلعتش بهشت،
 نقش‌بد روح گوئی از نخست،
 صورت و لش تا کشد درست،
 لعل‌پاره‌را زآب محصر شست،
 پس نمود حل با شکر سرشت،
 در قمار عشق از من آن پسر،
 برده عقل و دین حسرو حان و سر،
 هوش و صبر و تاب مال و سیم و زر،
 قول لوطیان هرچه بود کُشت،
 پیش از آنکه خط رویدش ز روی،
 بود آن پسر سحت و تند خوی،
 وینک از رحش سرز دست موی،
 تا از آن حظم‌چیست سر نوشت،
 چون حطش دمید خاطرم فسرده،
 گآن صفای حسن شد بدل ندرده،
 نکبتِ رحش باغ و زرد نرود،
 عیجه از لش داغ و درد هشت،
 موی عارضه داشت رنگِ قیر،
 در فراقِ او شد برونِ شیر،

¹ Tihván ed of 1302, p 355

در جوانیـمِ عمرِ گشتِ پیر،
 دهر پنبه کرد چرخ هرچه رشت،
 خواهم از خدا در همه جهان،
 يك نفس زمین يك نفس زمان،
 تا بکامِ دل مَی خورم در آن،
 بی حریفِ بد بی نگارِ زشت،
 خوش دهد بهارِ نشأ سرخِ مَل،
 گه کنارِ رود گه فرازِ پُل،
 گه بزیرِ سرو گه بپایِ گُل،
 گه بصحنِ باغ گه بطرفِ کشت،
 مرد چون شناخت مغز را ز پوست،
 هرچه بنگرد نیست غیرِ دوست،
 هر کجا رود ملکِ ملکِ اوست،
 خواه در حرمِ خواه در کنشت،
 چون ملک مرا گفت کایِ حَبیب،
 يك غزل بگو نغز و دلفریب،
 پس از آن غزل او برد نصیب،
 زرعِ زان کس است گزینِختِ کُشت،
 زینِ عابدینِ زیبِ مجد و جاه،
 بندهٔ امیرِ نیکخواه شاه،
 مُلک را شرفِ خلق را پناه،
 هم مَلِک لقا هم مَلِک سرشت،

Wonderful also is the swing and grace of the poem in praise of the Queen-mother (Mahd-i-'Ulyá) beginning¹: ..

بنفشه رُسته از زمینِ بطرفِ جویبارها،
 و یا گُسته حورِ عین ز زلفِ خویش تارها،

¹ Tīhrán ed. of 1302, p. 309.

ز سنگ اگر ندیده، چه سان عهد شرارها،

بسرکهای لاله بین میانِ لاله زارها،

که چون شراره میعهد ز سنگِ کوهسارها،

"Are these violets growing from the ground on the brink of the streams,

Or have the hours [of Paradise] plucked strands from their tresses?

If thou hast not seen how the sparks leap from the rock,

Look at the petals of the red anemones in their beds

Which leap forth like sparks from the crags of the mountains!"

Not inferior to this is another similar poem in praise of Mírzá Taqí Khán Amír-i-Kablr, beginning¹:

نسیرِ حُلُند میوزد مکر ز حویارها،

که بوی مشک میدهد هوای مُرغزارها،

فرازِ خاک و خشتها دمیده سزه کشتها،

چه کشتها بهشتها نه ده نه صد هزارها،

Instead of the far-fetched and often almost unintelligible conceits so dear to many Persian poets, Qá'ání prefers to draw his illustrations from familiar customs and common observances, as, for example, in the following verses², wherein allusion is made to various popular ceremonies connected with the Naw-rúz, or Persian New Year's Day:

عید شد ساقی بیآ در گردش آور حامرا،

بُشتِ پا رن دورِ چرخ و گردشِ ایامرا،

سینِ ساعر بس بود ای تُركِ مارا روزِ عید،

گو نباشد هفت سین³ رندانِ دُرْد آشامرا،

¹ Tihrán ed of 1302, p 16

² Ibid, pp 14-15

³ Haft Sín It is customary at the Naw rúz to collect together seven objects whereof the names begin with the letter S, such as sunbul (hyacinth), sib (apple), susan (lily), sím (silver), str (garlic), sirka (vinegar), and sipand (rue)

خلق را بر لب حدیث جامه¹ نو¹ هست و من
 از شراب کهنه میجویر لبالب جام را
 هر کسی شکر نهد بر خوان و بر خواند دعا
 من ز لعل شکرینت طالبم دشنام را
 هر تنی را هست سیر و دانه² گندم بدست
 مایلیم من دانه² خال تو سیر اندام را
 سیر بر خوانست مردم را و من از عمر سیر
 بی دلآرامی که برده است از دلم آرام را
 پسته و بادام نقل روز نوروزست و من
 با لب و چشمت نخواهم پسته و بادام را
 عود اندر عید میسوزند و من نالان چو عود
 بی بُتی گز خال هندو ره زند اسلام را
 یگدگرا خلق میبوسند و من زین غم هلاک
 گزچه بوسد دیگری آن شوخ شیرین کام را
 سرکه بردستار خوان خلق و همچون سرکه دوست
 میکنند بر ما تُرش رنگین ریخ گلفام را
 خلق را در سال روزی عید و من از چهر شاه
 عید دارم سال و ماه و هفته صبح و شام را²
 لا جرم این عید خاص من که بادا پایدار
 کَر و فرّش بشکند بازار عید عام را

¹ All the people put on new clothes at this great national festival, distribute sugar-plums amongst their friends, fill their hands with silver and corn, eat pistachio-nuts and almonds, burn aloë-wood and other fragrant substances, and greet one another with kisses.

² The first verse of a poem by Imámí of Herát cited on p. 116 of my Persian Literature under Tartar dominion contains a very similar thought.

Qá'ání is also one of the very few Persian poets who has condescended to reproduce actual peculiarities of speech or enunciation, as in his well-known dialogue between an old man and a child both of whom are afflicted with a stammer. This poem, which may more conveniently be transcribed into the Roman character, is as follows¹

Qá'ání's stammering poem

"Pírakí lál sahar gáh bí tísí alkan
Mí shunsám kí badín naw' hamí ránd sukhan
'K ay zí zulfat sha sha shubhám sha sha shám : tárfk,
Way zí chihrat sha sha shámam sha sha shubh : rawshan!
Ta-ta tiryákiyam, u az sha sha shahd : la labat
Sha sa shabr u ta ta tábam ra ra raft az ta ta tan'
Tísí guftá, 'Ma ma man rá tu tu taqlid ma kun!
Ga ga gum shaw zí baram, ay ka ka kamtar az zan!
Mí mí khwáhí mu mu mushtí bí ka kallat bí zanam,
Kí biyuftad ma mī maghzat ma mayán : da dihan?'
Pir guftá, 'Wa wa waláhi kí ma'lum ast ín
Kí kí zádám man : bíchára zí mádar alkan!
Ha ha haftád u ha hashtád u sí sál ast fuzun
Ga ga gung u la la lálam ba bí Khalláq : Zaman!'
Tísí guftá 'Kha khudá rá sha sha shad bár sha shukr
Kí bí rastám bí jahín az ma la lál u ma mihan!
Ma ma man ham ga ga gungam ma ma mithl : tu tu tu
Tu tu tu ham ga ga gungí ma ma mithl : ma ma man!'

Besides his poems, Qá'ání wrote a collection of stories and maxims in the style of Sa'dí's Gulistán entitled Kitáb i-Partshán, comprising one hundred and thirteen anecdotes, and concluding with thirty three truly Machiavellian counsels to Kings and Princes. This book, which contains a certain amount of autobiographical material, occupies pp 1-40 of the Tíhrán lithographed edition of Qá'ání's works, and numerous other editions exist, several of which are mentioned by Mr Edwards in his *Catalogue*²

The Asdáb i-Partshán

¹ See my Year amongst the Persians, pp 118-19 and pp 345-6 of the edition of Qá'ání cited above

² Columns 237-9

(8) Furúghí (d. 1274/1858).

Mention has already been made of Mírzá ‘Abbás, son of Áqá Músá of Bisṭám, who wrote verse first under the pen-name of Miskín and later of Furúghí. He is said to have written some twenty thousand verses, of which a selection of some five thousand is placed at the end (pp. 4-75) of the Tīhrán edition (1302/1884-5) of the works of Qā‘ání, with whom he was so closely associated. Unlike him, however, he seems to have preferred lyric to elegiac forms of poetry; at any rate the selections in question consist entirely of ghazals. According to the brief biography prefixed to them he adopted the Šúfí doctrine in the extremer forms which it had assumed in ancient times with Báyzíd of Bisṭám and Ḥusayn ibn Mansúr al-Ḥalláj, and so incurred the suspicion and censure of the orthodox. Náṣiru‘d-Dín Šháh, in the beginning of whose reign he was still flourishing, once sent for him and said, “Men say that like Pharaoh thou dost advance the claim ‘I am your Lord the Supreme¹,’ and that thou dost openly pretend to Divinity.” “This assertion,” replied Furúghí, touching the ground with his forehead, “is sheer calumny....For seventy years I have run hither and thither, and only now have I reached the Shadow of God!²” The first three verses from the first ode cited seem to me as good and as typical as any others. They run as follows:

کی رفتہ ز دل کہ تمنا کنم ترا
 کی بودہ نہفتہ کہ پیدا کنم ترا
 غیبت نکرده کہ شوم طالب حضور
 پنهان نگشته کہ هویدا کنم ترا
 با صد ہزار جلوہ برون آمدی کہ من
 با صد ہزار دیدہ تماشا کنم ترا

¹ Qur‘án, lxxix, 24.² I.e. the King.

"When didst thou depart from the heart that I should crave for Thee?
 When wert thou hidden that I should find Thee?
 Thou hast not disappeared that I should seek Thy presence
 Thou hast not become hidden that I should make Thee apparent
 Thou hast come forth with a hundred thousand effulgences
 That I may contemplate Thee with a hundred thousand eyes"

(9) Yaghmá of Jandaq

Mírzá Abu'l-Hasan of Jandaq, chiefly celebrated for his abusive and obscene verses (Hazaliyyát), and commonly known, from his favourite term of coarse invective, as Zan-qahba, is the 1st poet mentioned by the author of the *Majma'u'l-Fusahá*¹ before the autobiography with which he concludes. He was for some time secretary to a very violent and foul-mouthed nobleman named Dhu'l Fiqár Khán of Samnán, for whose amusement he is said to have written these offensive poems, collectively known as the *Sardáryja*². Though he wrote a quantity of serious verse and a number of elegant letters in prose, which are included in the large Tíhrán edition of his works lithographed in 1283/1866-7, it is on his Hazaliyyát, or "Facetiae," that his fame or infamy is based. The author of the *Tadhkirat-i-Dilgushá*³ devotes but three lines to him, and was not personally acquainted with him, but had heard him well spoken of as "an amiable and kindly man and a good-natured and eloquent youth, who did not believe in making a collection of his poems." Qá'ání attacked him in his own style in the following abusive verses⁴:

Qá'ání's attack on Yaghmá.

هفت احتیر ز نقصه و نه گنبد دوار
 پُر گشته ز زقحگی مرشد اشار

¹ Vol. II, p. 580

² These poems, which occupy pp. 204-217 of the Tíhrán lithographed edition of 1283/1866-7, are, however, only a fraction of the Hazaliyyát

³ F. 53^b of my MS

⁴ P. 372 of the lithographed Tíhrán edition of 1302/1884-5

آن شاعر ز نقحبه كه یغماش ستایند،
 شعرش همه ز نقحبه و ز نقحبگیش کار،
 گوئی همه ز نقحبه و از خویش نگوئی،
 خوانی همه ز نقحبه و از خود نه خبردار،
 ز نقحبه تو ز نقحبه‌تری از همه مردم،
 عالم همه ز نقحبهٔ مجبول و تو مختار،
 عکسِ تو فتاده است در آینهٔ عالم،
 تا آنکه بز نقحبگی خود کنی اقرار،

Yaghmá's Kulliyát, or Complete Works, as represented in the Ṭihrán lithographed edition above mentioned, comprise the following :

Contents of Yaghmá's
Kulliyát or Complete Works.

A. Prose writings (pp. 2-145), consisting of numerous letters written to friends and acquaintances, unfortunately, so far as I have seen, undated. A careful examination of these letters would undoubtedly furnish abundant materials for the poet's biography. Many of them are addressed to unnamed friends, acquaintances or patrons, but some were written to his sons, Mírzá Isma'íl who wrote poetry under the pen-name of Hunar, Mírzá Aḥmad Şafá'í, Mírzá Muḥammad 'Alí Khatař, and Mírzá Ibráhím Dastán, while others were written to men of more or less note whose names are given. In many of these letters he elects to write in pure Persian (Pársí-nigáрі), avoiding all Arabic words, while others, called náma-i-basit, are written in a very simple style.

B. Verse.

1. Early odes (ghazaliyyát-i-qadíma), pp. 146-183.
2. Later odes (ghazaliyyát-i-jadída), pp. 184-203.
3. The Sardáriyya mentioned above (pp. 204-217), written in the ghazal form with the pen-name Sardár.

[illegible]

Autograph of the poet Yaghmā

4. The Qassábíyya (pp 218-231), similar to the last-mentioned work in form and contents, but with the pen-name Qassáb ("Butcher")

5 The Kitáb i-Ahmad (pp 232-247), similar to the two last, but with the pen-name Ahmad

6 The Khulásatu'l-Iftidáh ("Quintessence of Disgrace," pp 248-265), an account in mathnawt verse of a scandalous incident fully described in a marginal note on p 248

7 The Kitáb-i-Sukúku'd-Dalll (pp 266-280), another mathnawt in the metre of the Shahnáma outwardly praising but inwardly satirizing a certain Sayyid Qanbar-i-Rawda-khwán, entitled by Yaghmá Rustamú's-Saddt

8 Marathí or Elegies on the deaths of the Imáms (pp 282-301)

9 Tarfí'-bands and Tarkíb-bands (pp 302-331), mostly of a ribald character

10 Qita'át or Fragments (pp 332-355), mostly ribald and satirical

11. Ruba'íyyát or Quatrains (pp 356-389), also ribald.

The odes, old and new, and the elegies (Nos. 1, 2 and 8 in the above list) constitute the respectable part of Yaghmá's verse, in all about one-third of the whole. As Yaghmá's abusive verse. for the rest, with the possible exception of

No 7, it is for the most part not fit to print, much less to translate. The poet's favourite term of abuse Zan qahba, by which he himself is commonly known, is by no means a nice expression, but it is delicacy itself compared with much of the language he employs. On the other hand, his serious odes and elegies show that

His religious elegies. he can write fine poetry, while his command of language is almost greater than that of Qá'ání, even though the melody of his verse be less. He also appears to have invented a type of marthíya or elegy which he calls Nuha i Sina zanf, or Lamentation accompanied by beating of the breast. This I supposed till lately to have been one of the new models which sprang into existence after the Revolution of 1905-6, and I gave several specimens of it in my *Press and Poetry of Modern Persia*¹. The following are the initial lines of eight of Yaghmá's elegies of this type:

نوحهء سینه زنی'

میرسد خشک لب از شطِّ فرات اکبرِ من'

نو جوان اکبرِ من'

سیلانی بکن ای چشمهء چشمِ ترِ من'

نو جوان اکبرِ من'

کسوتِ عمرِ تو تا این خمِ فیروزه نمون'

لعلی آورد بخون'

گیتی از نیلِ عزا ساخت سیه معجرِ من'

نو جوان اکبرِ من'

تا ابد داغِ تو ای زادهء آزاده نهاد'

نتوان برد ز یاد'

از ازل کاش نمیزاد مرا مادرِ من'

نو جوان اکبرِ من' الخ

و له ایضاً'

شکوه از چرخِ ستمگر چکنم گر نکنم' چکنم گر نکنم'

گله از گردشِ اختر چکنم گر نکنم' چکنم گر نکنم'

غیر عباسِ بلاکش چکشم گر نکشم' چکشم گر نکشم'

ناله بر حسرتِ اکبر چکنم گر نکنم' چکنم گر نکنم' الخ

¹ See No. 19 (pp. 216-218) and No. 31 (pp. 246-248).

و له ایضاً

در شست پوشیده بپیم روزِ محشر آفتاب

آفتاب، باز سرکش آفتاب

ور صاحت آشکارا شامِ دسکر آفتاب

آفتاب، باز سرکش آفتاب

نُست ازین سحت انتلا ذرات را نالا و پست

هرچه هست، باز راه ارکار دست

شرم کن آحر به از ذره کمتر آفتاب

آفتاب، باز سرکش آفتاب، آح

و له ایضاً

کوه و صحرا حصرو شاه کمر سپه تنها دریغ

وا دریغ، نصرتِ اعدا دریغ

قلبِ آسمان را شکست و نصرتِ اعدا دریغ

وا دریغ، نصرتِ اعدا دریغ

آه گر بیدولتانِ دیس بدبیا ناحته

تاحته، گشت کارش ناحته

پادشاهِ کشورِ دیس خسروِ دبیا دریغ

وا دریغ، نصرتِ اعدا دریغ، آح

و له ایضاً

محشری بپیم عیان در هفت کشور آسمان

آسمان، شرمی آحر آسمان

شامِ عاشورا است این یا صُبحِ محشر آسمان

آسمان، شرمی آحر آسمان

آفتابى شد ز دُورَت تیره اختر آسمان،
 آسمان، شرمى آخر آسمان،
 با چنین دوران نکردى کاش دیگر آسمان،
 آسمان، شرمى آخر آسمان، الخ

و له ايضاً،

زین مصیبت نه همین از خاکیان ماتم بیاست،
 کى رواست، سرنگون گردى فلك،
 چار ارکان شش جهت تا نه فلك ماتم سراست،
 کى رواست، سرنگون گردى فلك،
 نعره جن و ملك در ماتم فخر اُمم،
 از قدم، تا دمِ شامِ عدم،
 از ثرى هم تا ثرىا از ثرىا تا ثراست،
 کى رواست، سرنگون گردى فلك،

و له ايضاً،

هفته کين مه شر سالِ دغل قون دغاست،
 خون هدر مال هباست،
 شبِ غم روزِ ستم شامِ الم صبحِ عزاست،
 خون هدر مال هباست،
 فتنه بیدار و امان خفته و خصم از در کين،
 ترکستانان بکمين،
 رسته بى شهنه و خوان چیده فرمان یغماست،
 خون هدر مال هباست، الخ

و له ایضاً

زاده رهرا بکام زاده مروان نگر
 آه آه گردش دوران نگر
 این سحاری آن نعت این سن و آن نگر
 آه آه گردش دوران نگر
 آل مروان تیغ بر کف آل یس نقد حاس
 زین و آن گریطرذاری عیاس
 نفی حق اثبات باطل کفر بین ایمان نگر
 آه آه گردش دوران نگر

This last poem in form most closely approaches No. 19 in my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia

The above poems are interesting as regards their form. The following, an ordinary Nuha, or "Lamentation," without refrain, partly in colloquial dialect, is simple and rather beautiful. I quote only the first six of the nineteen verses which it comprises

دل از زندگانی سحت سیره
 زبان را دل سرای درد و ماتم
 پسر در خون تپان دختر عرادار
 برادر گشته و حواهر اسیره
 بکام مادران لحت حگر خون
 سیران را سحای اشک و افغان
 حروش تشه کامان زیر و بالا
 ر حاک تیره تا چرخ اثیره

"My heart is very weary of life, however soon I die, it is still too late.
 The women's hearts are the abode of grief and mourning, the men's bodies are the target of swords and arrows

Their sons welter in their blood, their daughters mourn, the brother is slain, the sister is a captive

The morsel in the mothers' mouths is their own heart's blood, the milk in the children's throats is liquid gore

The captives, in place of tears and lamentations, have sparks in their eyes and fire in their souls.

The outcry of the thirsty reaches down and up from the dark earth to the Sphere of the Ether."

It is curious to find in two such ribald poets as Yaghmá and Qá'án¹ so deep a religious sense and sympathy with the martyrs of their faith as are manifested in a few of their poems. Verlaine, perhaps, offers the nearest parallel in modern European literature.

Ribaldry and piety.

Of the remaining poets who flourished during the long reign of Násiru'd-Dín Sháh, whose assassination on May 1, 1896, may be regarded as the first portent of the Revolution which bore its full fruit ten years later, two, Mírzá Muḥammad Taqí of Káshán with the pen-name of Sipihr, and Mírzá Riḍá-qulí Khán Hidáyat, are better known as historians and will be mentioned as such in a later chapter, though notices of both are given by the latter in his often-quoted *Majma'u'l-Fuṣaḥá*². Another poet of some note is Abu'n-Naṣr Faṭḥu'lláh Khán Shaybání of Káshán, a copious selection of whose poems was printed by the Akhtar Press at Constantinople in 1308/1890-1³, and of whom a long notice (pp. 224-245) is also given in the Majma'u'l-Fuṣaḥá. The list might be increased almost indefinitely, did space permit, but the most notable names have been mentioned, and even to them it has been impossible to do justice.

¹ For his beautiful marthiya on the tragedy of Karbalá, see pp. 177-181 supra.

² See vol. ii, pp. 156-181 for Sipihr, and pp. 581-678 for the autobiography of Hidáyat. This great anthology was concluded in 1288/1871-2.

³ It was edited by Isma'íl Naṣrírí Qarája-Dághí, published at the instigation of Mírzá Riḍá Khán, afterwards entitled Arfa'u'd-Dawla, and comprises 312 pp.

MUZAFFARU D DIN MIRZA (afterwards SHÁH) seated with his tutor (Lala l ishi) RID Á QUI I KHÂN, poet and historian standing on his right (the reader's left)

Of the new school of poets produced by the Revolution in 1906 and the succeeding years I have treated in a separate work, the *Press and Poetry in Modern Persia*¹, more fully than would have been possible in this volume. The most eminent of these contemporary poets are, perhaps, Dakhaw (Dih-Khudá) of Qazwín, 'Árif of Qazwín, Sayyid Ashraf of Gílán, and Bahár of Mashhad. Dakhaw is probably the youngest and the most remarkable of them, though I do not think he has produced much verse lately. The versatility of his genius is illustrated by two of his poems (Nos 3 and 14) cited in my above-mentioned work, on the one hand the riotous burlesque of 'Kablay,' and on the other the delicate and beautiful In Memoriam addressed to his former colleague Mirzá Jahángír Khán of Shíráz, editor of the Súr i-Israfíl, of which the former was published in that admirable paper on November 20, 1907, and the latter on March 8, 1909. Bahár, entitled Malíku'sh Shu'ará, "King of the Poets," or Poet Laureate, was the editor of the Naw Bahar (which after its suppression reappeared under the title of Táza Bahar), and was the author of several fine poems (Nos 20, 34 and 36-47) published in my book, while 'Árif is represented by No 33, and Ashraf by Nos 4-7, 9-13 16-19 and 27. I do not think that the works of these or any others of the post-Revolution poets have been published in a collected form. They appeared from time to time in various newspapers, notably the Sur i Israfíl, Nasím i Shímdl and Naw Bahar, and must be culled from their pages. Many of the now numerous Persian papers contain a literary corner entitled Adabíyyát in which these poems appear. The importance of the fact that their aim must now be to please

¹ Camb Univ Press, 1914, pp xl+357, with a Persian foreword of 5 pp. The poems (originals and translations) occupy pp 168-308, comprise 61 separate pieces, and can be obtained separately for 5s

the increasing public taste and reflect the growing public opinion, not to gratify individual princes, ministers and noblemen, has been already emphasized¹.

Of one other poet, lately deceased, who is very highly esteemed by his countrymen, but whose writings are not yet readily accessible, something more must be

The late Adību'l-Mamālik.

said. This is Mīrzā Šādiq Khān, a great-grand-son of the celebrated Qā'im-maqām², best known by his title Adību'l-Mamālik, who died on the 28th of Rabī' ii, 1335 (Feb. 21, 1917). Three sources of information about him are at my disposal, viz. (1) a notice in my MS. marked J.. 19³ on modern Persian poets (pp. 39-50); (2) an obituary notice in No. 20 of the old Kāwa of April 15, 1917; and (3) a pamphlet published at the "Kaviani Press" in 1341/1922 by Khān Malik-i-Ḥusaynī-i-Sāsānī, a cousin of the poet, announcing his intention of collecting and publishing his poems, and asking help from those who possess copies of verses not in his possession. Some particulars concerning him are also given in my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia in connection with the various papers he edited or wrote for at different times, viz. the Adab of Tabrīz (pp. 37-8), Mashhad (p. 38) and Tīhrān (p. 39), which extended over the period 1316-1322/1898-1905; the Turco-Persian Irshād (p. 39), which he edited in conjunction with Aḥmad Bey Aghayeff of Qarābāgh at Bākú in 1323/1905-6; the Rūz-nāma-i-Īrān-i-Sulṭānī (pp. 88-91), to which he contributed in 1321/1903-4; the Irāq-i-'Ajam (pp. 118-19), which he edited in 1325/1907; and the Majlis (pp. 132-3), for which he wrote in 1324/1906 One of the most celebrated of his poems is also given on pp 300-302 of the same work

His journalistic activities.

¹ See p. 302 supra.

² See pp. 311-316 supra.

³ See p. 302 supra. Since writing this, my attention has been called by my friend Mīrzā Salmān-i-Asadī to an interesting article on the Adību'l-Mamālik in the periodical entitled Armaghān (No. 1 of the third year, pp. 15-25).

The Adíbu'l Mamálik was born in 1277/1860-1, and was a descendant in the third degree of Mírzá 'Ísá Qá'im-maqám, and in the thirty-fifth degree of the Imám Zaynul Ábidín In 1307/1889-90 he was at Tabríz in the service of the Amír Nízám (Hasan 'Alí Khán i Garrusí) in honour of whom he changed his pen name from Parwana ('Moth') to Amírí In 1311/1893-4 he followed the Amír Nízám to Kirmánshah and Kurdistan During the two following years (1894-6) he was employed in the Government Translation Office (Dáru t-Tarjuma i Dawlatí) in Tihrán but in Safar 1314/July-August, 1896, he returned with the Amír Nízám to Ádhar báyyán where, in 1316/1898-9 he adopted the turban in place of the kuláh, became Vice master of the Luqmaniyya College at Tabríz and founded the Adab newspaper which, as stated above, he afterwards continued at Mashhad and Tihran During the years 1318-20/1900-02 he travelled in the Caucasus and Khwárazm (Khiva) whence he came to Mashhad, but at the end of AH 1320 (March 1903) he returned to Tihran and for the next two years, 1321-2/1903-5 was the chief contributor to the Rúz nama i Írán i Sultán In 1323/1905-6 he was joint editor of the Irshád at Baku, in 1324/1906 he became chief writer for the Maýlis, edited by Mírza Muhammad Sádiq i Tabátabái, and in 1325/1907 he founded the Íraq i Ajam In July, 1910, he took part in the capture of Tihrán by the Nationalists, and subsequently held the position of President of the High Court of Justice (Rá'ís i 'Adliyya) in 'Íraq and afterwards at Samnán He lost his only daughter in 1330/1912 Two years later he was appointed editor of the semi official newspaper Aftab ('the Sun') In 1335/1916-17 he was appointed President of the High Court of Justice at

Brief chronology of his life.

Yazd, but soon afterwards, as we have seen, he died at Tīhrán, aged fifty-eight¹.

The special value and interest of his poems, according to Khán Malik, his cousin and intimate friend, lie not only in their admirable and original style, but in their faithful reflection of the varying moods of the Persian people during the fateful years 1906-1912. In satire it is said that no Persian poet has equalled him since the time of old Súzaní of Samarqand², who died in 569/1173-4. In his pamphlet Khán Malik gives the opening verses of all the poems in his possession, with the number of verses in each, and invites those who possess poems lacking in his collection to communicate them to him before Jumáda i, 1342 (December, 1923), when he proposes to publish as complete an edition as possible. The Káwa quotes the following verses from one of his poems on the Russian aggressions in Persia, which it compares with the celebrated poems of Sa'dí on the destruction of the Caliphate by the Mongols³, Anwarí on the invasion of the Ghuzz Turks⁴, and Háfiz on Tímúr's rapacity⁵:

چون برّه بیچاره بچوپانش نمیوست
از بیر بصحرا در نه خفت و نه بنشست
خرسی بشتکار آمد و بازوش فرو بست
شد برّه ما طعمه آن خرس زبردست

¹ These dates are taken from Khán Malik's pamphlet, pp. 4-6.

² See Lit. Hist. Persia, ii, pp. 342-3.

³ Ibid., pp. 29-30.

⁴ Ibid., pp. 384-9.

⁵ The reference here is to the well-known verse—

فغان کین لولیان شوخ شیرین کارِ شهر آشوب
چنان بردند صبر از دل که ترکان خوانِ یغمارا

It is, however, but a vague and casual allusion.

افسوس ہر آن ہرّہ نوزادہ سرمست

دریاد ار آن حرس کہیں سالِ شکر حوار

"Since the poor lamb did not forgather with its shepherd, through fear it neither slept nor rested in the plain

A bear came forth to hunt, and bound its limbs our lamb became the prey of that high handed bear

Alas for that new born and bemused lamb! Alack for that aged and greedy bear!

My manuscript J 19¹ (p 44) enumerates twelve of his works, which include an Arabic and a Persian Dīwan, a collection of Maqāmāt, a rhymed vocabulary, a volume of travels, and several books on Astronomy, Geography, Prosody, and other sciences

¹ See p 302 supra

PART III.

PERSIAN PROSE DURING THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES

CHAPTER VIII.

THE ORTHODOX SHÍ'A FAITH AND ITS EXPONENTS, THE MUJTAHIDS AND MULLÁS

One of the chief results of the Shí'a revival effected by the Safawí dynasty was the establishment of the powerful hierarchy of mujtahids and mullás, often, but not very accurately, described by European writers as "the clergy." This title is, however, more applicable to them than to the 'ulama, or "doctors," of the Sunnis, who are simply men learned in the Scripture and the Law, but not otherwise possessed of any special Divine virtue or authority. The great practical difference between the 'ulama of the Sunnis and of the Shí'a lies in their conception of the doctrine of Ijtihád, or the discovery and authoritative enunciation of fresh religious truths, based on a comprehensive knowledge of the Scripture and Traditions, and arrived at by supreme effort and endeavour, this last being the signification of the Arabic word. One who has attained to this is called a mujtahid, whose position may be roughly described as analogous to that of a Cardinal in the Church of Rome. No such dignitary exists amongst the Sunnis, who hold that the Bábu'l-Ijtihád, or "Gate of Endeavour" (in the sense explained above), was closed after the death of the founders of their four "orthodox" schools or sects, Abu Hanífa (d 150/767), Málík ibn Anas (d circá 179/795), ash-Sháfi'í (d 204/820), and Ahmad ibn Muhammad ibn Hanbal (d 241/855). Thus the "Gate of Endeavour," which, according to the Shí'a view, is still open, has for the Sunnis been closed for more than a thousand years, and in this respect the Shí'a doctrine must be credited with a greater flexibility and adaptability than that of the

The Shí'a
hierarchy

The doctrine of Ijtihád

Sunnís, though in other respects narrower and more intolerant.

As will appear in the course of this chapter, the power and position attained by these prelates tended to divert the ambitions of young men who possessed, or believed themselves to possess, the necessary intellectual qualifications from poetry, belles lettres, and other forms of mental activity to theology, and from this tendency in part resulted the dearth of poets and abundance of divines under the Şafawís. Those were spacious times for the "turbaned classes" (ahlu'l-'amâ'im), and every poor, half-starved student who frequented one or other of the numerous colleges (madrasa) founded, endowed and maintained by the piety of the Şafawí Sháhs, who delighted to call themselves by such titles as "Dog of the Threshold of the Immaculate Imáms," or "Promoter of the Doctrine of the Church of the Twelve," dreamed, no doubt, of becoming at last a great mujtahid, wielding powers of life and death, and accorded honours almost regal.

No class in Persia is so aloof and inaccessible to foreigners and non-Muslims as that of the mullás. It is easy for one who has a good knowledge of Persian to mix not only with the governing classes and officials, who are most familiar with European habits and ideas, but with merchants, tradesmen, artisans, land-owners, peasants, darwishes, Bábís, Bahá'ís, Şúfís and others; but few Europeans can have enjoyed intimacy with the "clergy," whose peculiar, exclusive, and generally narrow life is, so far as my reading has gone, best depicted in an otherwise mediocre and quite modern biographical work entitled Qişaşu'l-'Ulamá ("Tales of the Divines")¹ by Muḥammad

Attractions of theology for the ambitious.

Aloofness of the clerical class.

The *Qişaşu'l-
'Ulamá*, or
"Tales of the Divines."

¹ I possess two lithographed editions of this book, the (second) Tihrán edition, published in Şafar, 1304 (Nov. 1886), and another published (apparently) in Lucknow in 1306/1888-9.

ibn Sulaymán of Tanukábun, who was born in 1235/1819-20, wrote this book in three months and five days, and concluded it on the 17th of Rajab, 1290 (Sept 10, 1873). It contains the lives of 153 Shí'a doctors, ranging from the fourth to the thirteenth centuries of the Muhammadan (tenth to nineteenth of the Christian) era, arranged in no intelligible order, either chronological or alphabetical. To his own biography, which he places fourth in order, the author devotes more than twenty pages, and enumerates 169 of his works, besides various glosses and other minor writings. From this book, which I read through during the Easter Vacation of 1923, having long ago made use of certain parts of it bearing on the Shaykhís and Bábís, I have disentangled from much that is tedious, trivial or puerile, a certain amount of valuable information which is not to be found in many much better biographical works, whereof, before proceeding further, I shall here speak briefly.

What is known as 'Ilmu'r-Riyál ("Knowledge of the Men," that is of the leading authorities and transmitters of the Traditions) forms an important branch of theological study, since such knowledge is necessary for critical purposes. Of such Kutub'u'r-Riyál ("Books of the Men") there are a great many. Sprenger, in his edition¹ of one of the most important of these, the Fihrist, or "Index," of Muhammad ibn Hasan ibn 'Alí of Tús, entitled Shaykhu't-Tá'ifa, who died in 460/1067, ranks with it in importance four other works, the Asmá'u'r-Riyál ("Names of the Men") of Shaykh Ahmad ibn 'Alí an Najáshí² (d. 455/1063), the Ma'álimu'l-'Ulamá of Muhammad ibn 'Alí ibn Shahr-áshub of Mázandarán,

¹ Printed in the Bibliotheca Indica.

² Lithographed at Bombay in 1317/1899-1900. In the K'ashfu'l-Hujub (see pp. 357-8 infra) the date of the author's death is given as 405/1014.

who died in 588/1192; the Idálu'l-Ishtibáh ("Elucidation of Confusion") of Ḥasan ibn Yúsuf ibn Muṭahhar al-Ḥillí (b. 648/1250; d. 726/1326); and the *Lú'lu'atu'l-Baḥrayn*¹, a work of a more special character, dealing especially with the 'ulamá of Baḥrayn, by Yúsuf ibn Aḥmad ibn Ibráhím al-Baḥrání (d. 1187/1773-4). Another work, similar to the last in dealing with a special region, is the Amalu'l-Ámil fi 'Ulamá'i Jabal-'Ámil, composed by Muḥammad ibn Ḥasan ibn 'Alí...al-Ḥurr al-'Ámilí (b. 1033/1623-4) in 1097/1686. All these works are written in Arabic, but of the older books of this class there is one in Persian (compiled in 990/1582) which must on no account be overlooked. This is the Majálisu'l-Mú'minín ("Assemblies of Believers") of Sayyid Núru'lláh ibn Sharíf al-Mar'ashí of Shúshtar, who was put to death in India on account of his strong Shí'a opinions in 1019/1610-11. This book is both of a wider scope and a more popular character than those previously mentioned, since it contains, in twelve chapters, notices of eminent Shí'as of all classes, not merely theologians, and includes not only those who adhered to the "Sect of the Twelve" (Ithná-'ashariyya) but all those who held that 'Alí should have immediately succeeded the Prophet.

Of modern works of this class, composed within the last sixty years, three, besides the above-mentioned Qišaṣu'l-'Ulamá, deserve special mention. The most general in its scope, entitled Rawḍātu'l-Jannát fi Ahwáli'l-'Ulamá wa's-Sádat ("Gardens of Paradise: on the circumstances of Divines and Sayyids²"), was composed in Arabic by Muḥammad Báqir ibn Hájji Zaynu'l-'Ábidín al-Músawí al-Khwánsarí, whose autobiography is given on pp 126-8 of vol 1, in 1286/1869-70. The biographies, which are arranged alphabetically, include learned Muslims of all periods, and are not confined to theologians or members of the Shī'a sect. Thus we find notices of great Mystics, like Bīyazīd of Bistām Ibrāhīm ibn Adhām, Shiblī and Husayn ibn Mansur al-Hallāj, of Arabic poets, like Dhu'r-Rummā, Farazdaq, Ibnu'l Fāriḍ, Abu Nuwās and al-Mutanabbī, of Persian poets, like Sā'ī, Farīdu'd-Dīn 'Attār, Nāsir-i-Khusraw, and Jalālu'd-Dīn Rūmī, and of men of learning like al-Bīrūnī, Thābit ibn Qurra, Hunayn ibn Ishāq and Avicenna, etc., besides the accounts of Shī'a theologians down to comparatively modern times which give the book so great a value for our present purpose.

¹ Lithographed in Bombay, n. d.

² An excellent lithographed edition (four vols. in one, containing in all about 750 pp. and 713 biographies) was published at Tíhrán in 1306/1888.

Another important work composed in the same year as that last mentioned (1286/1869-70) but in Persian, is entitled Nujumu s-Samā ("Stars of Heaven")¹

The Nujumu s-Samā. It deals with Shī'a theologians of the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth centuries of the hijra (A.D. 1592-1882) and the biographies are arranged on the whole chronologically. The author was Muhammad ibn Sādiq ibn Mahdī. Like most of these books its utility is impaired by the lack of an Index or even a Table of Contents, but it contains a great deal of useful information.

The third work of which I desire to make special mention here is primarily a bibliography though it also contains a good deal of biographical matter. It is entitled

The Kashf ul Hujub. Kashf ul Hujub wa'l-Astār 'an Asmā' il-Kutub wa'l-Asfār ('the Removal of Veils and Curtains from the Names of Books and Treatises'), contains notices of 3414 Shī'a books arranged alphabetically, and was composed in Arabic by Sayyid I'jāz Husayn, who was born in 1240/1825, and died in 1286/1870. The editor, Muhammad Hidayat Husayn, discovered the manuscript in the excellent

¹ Lithographed at Lucknow in 1303/1885-6 (pp 424)

Bankipore Library, and, encouraged by Sir E. Denison Ross, prepared the text for publication at the expense of the Asiatic Society of Bengal¹.

Mention must also be made of another Arabic work on Shí'a poets entitled Nasimatu's-Sahar fi-man tashayya'a wa sha'ar ("the Morning Breeze, on those who held the Shí'a faith and composed poetry"), compiled by Yúsuf ibn Yahyá al-Yamaní aṣ-Ṣan'ání, a rare book, hitherto, so far as I know, unpublished, of which I am fortunate enough to possess a manuscript of the second half, containing the letters ط to ع². Only poets who wrote in Arabic are noticed.

Of these books the Rawḍātu'l-Jannát is the most scholarly and comprehensive, but those who read Persian only will Comparison of these works.

derive much instruction and some amusement from the Majálisu'l-Mú'minín, Nujúmu's-Samá, and Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamá. The older "Books of the Men," such as the works of aṭ-Ṭúsí and an-Najáshí, are generally very jejune, and suited for reference rather than reading. As it is with the theologians of the Ṣafawí and subsequent periods that we are chiefly concerned here, a very few words about the older 'ulamá of the Shí'a will suffice, though with their names, titles and approximate dates the student should be familiar. The most important

The founders of Shí'a theology: the "three Muḥammads" and the "four Books."

of these earlier divines are "the three Muḥammads³," al-Kulayní (Muḥammad ibn Ya'qúb, d. 329/941), Ibn Bábawayhi (Muḥammad ibn 'Alí ibn Músá, d. 381/991-2), and the already-mentioned Ṭúsí (Muḥammad ibn Ḥasan, d. 460/

¹ It was printed at the Baptist Mission Press at Calcutta in 1330/1912, and comprises 607 pp.

² For description of another copy see Ahlwardt's Berlin Arabic Catalogue, vol. vi, pp. 502-3, No. 7423.

³ See the Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamá, p. 221 of the Lucknow edition, s.v. Muḥammad Báqir-i-Majlisí.

1067) Of these the first composed the Kaft, the second Man la yahduru hu'l-Faqih (a title which approximates in sense to our familiar "Every man his own Lawyer"), and the third the Istibsr and the Tahdhibu'l-Ahkám, which are known collectively amongst the Shí'a as "the Four Books" (al-Kutubu'l-arba'a)¹, and of which full particulars will be found in the above-mentioned Kashfu'l-Hujub

The three Muhammads"
of later days.

More modern times also produced their "three Muhammads," namely Muhammad ibn Hasan ibn 'Alí . al-Hurr al-'Ámilí (author of the above-mentioned Amali'l-Ámil), Muhammad ibnu'l-Murtadá, commonly known as Mullá Muhsin i Fayz (Fayd) who died about 1090/1679, and Muhammad Báqir-i Majlisí (d 1111/1699-1700)² Each of these also produced a great book, the first the Wasá'il, the second the Wáfi, and the third the Biháru'l-Anwar ("Oceans of Light"), which constitute the "Three Books" of the later time. These seven great works on Shí'a theology, jurisprudence and tradition

Arabic the usual medium of theological works are, of course, like the great bulk of the works of the Muhammadan Doctors and Divines, written in Arabic, which language occupies no less a position in Islám than does Latin in the theological literature of the Church of Rome. Of them space will not permit me to speak further, it is the more

Persian theological works of the later
period

popular Persian manuals of doctrine, whereby the great theologians of the Safawí period sought so successfully to diffuse their religious teachings, which must chiefly concern us here, and even of these it will be impossible to give an adequate account. According to the *Raudátu'l-Jannát*³, Kamálu'd-Dín Husayn of Ardabil, called "the Divine Doctor" (al-

¹ Or al Usulu'l arba'a ("the Four Principles") See Nujumu's-Samá, p 75

² See p 120 supra

³ Vol 1, p 185

Iláhi), a contemporary of Sháh Isma'íl I, "was the first to compose books in Persian on matters connected with the Holy Law according to the doctrine of the Shí'a":

نُقل أَنَّهُ أَوَّلُ مَنْ صَنَّفَ فِي الشَّرْعِيَّاتِ عَلَى مَذْهَبِ الشَّيْعَةِ بِالْفَارْسِيَّةِ

We have already seen¹ what difficulty Sháh Isma'íl experienced on his capture of Tabriz in finding teachers or books to inculcate the doctrines of the creed which he was determined to impose throughout his dominions, and it is not strange, though the fact is often overlooked, that it became necessary to introduce into Persia learned Arabs of the Shí'a persuasion, where such were obtainable.

Two districts furnished the bulk of these: Bahrayn, across the Persian Gulf, and Jabal 'Ámil in Syria². To the divines furnished by each of these two localities a special biographical work has, as we have seen, been devoted, namely the Lil'li'atü'l-Bahrayn and the Amalu'l-'Ámil. Some of them came to Persia totally ignorant of the Persian language, like Sayyid Ni-matu'lláh al-Jazá'irí, who, on reaching Shíráz with his brother, had to obtain from a Persian acquaintance the sentence "Madrasa-i-Manşúriyya-rá mi-khwáhím" ("We want the Manşúriyya College"), and even then each learned only half of this simple phrase and spoke alternately³.

¹ Pp. 54-5 supra.

² See G. le Strange's Palestine under the Moslems, pp. 75-6 and 470.

³ Qizāshü'l-'Ulamá (ed. Lucknow, p. 229; ed. Tīhrán, p. 333):

... پس با پای برهنه آن راه را طی کردیم و من یازده ساله بودم و در وقتِ نماز صبح بشیراز رسیدیم، پس بخانه آن شیخ که با ما بود رفتیم و منزلش از مدرسه منصوریه دور بود و ما می خواستیم که در آن مدرسه منزل کنیم زیرا که بعضی از اقارب ما در آنجا بود، پس آن شیخ گفت که این راه را بگیر و بگوئید که

It is the autobiography of this same Sayyid Nī'matu'llāh, as given in the Qīṣasū'l 'Ulama, which furnishes us with so unusually vivid a picture of the privations and hardships experienced by a poor student of Divinity. He was born in 1050/1640-1 and wrote this narrative when he was thirty-nine years of age¹, "in which brief life," he adds, "what afflictions have befallen me!" These afflictions began when he was only five years old, when, while he was at play with his little companions, his father appeared, saying, "Come with me, my little son, that we may go to the school-master, so that thou mayst learn to read and write, in order that thou mayst attain to a high degree." In spite of tears, protests, and appeals to his mother he had to go to school, where, in order the sooner to escape and return to his games, he applied himself diligently to his lessons, so that by the time he was aged five years and a half he had finished the Qur'an, besides learning many poems. This, however, brought him no relief and no return to his childish games, for he was now committed to the care of a blind grammarian to study the Arabic paradigms and the grammar of Zanjānī. For this blind teacher he had to act as guide, while his next preceptor

Autobiography of a student of theology

First steps in learning

Tyranny of teachers

مدرسہ مصوریہ را میخواستیم و ما فارسی نمی دانستیم پس ما رفتیم و سخن را تقطیع کردیم پس يك كلمه را من صط کردم و كلمه ديكر را آن ديگری صط کرد پس هرکه را که می دیدیم یکی میگفت مدرسہ مصوریہ آن ديگری میگفت که میخواستیم تا نان مدرسہ رسیدیم compelled him to cut and carry fodder for his beasts and mulberry-leaves for his silk-worms. He then sought another teacher with whom to study the Káfiya of Ibnu'l-Hájib, and found an imposing personage dressed in white with an enormous turban "like a small cupola," who, however, was unable to answer his questions. "If you don't know enough grammar to answer these questions, why do you wear this great load on your head?" enquired the boy; whereupon the audience laughed, and the teacher rose up ashamed and departed. "This led me to exert myself to master the paradigms of grammar," says the writer; "but I now ask pardon of God for my question to that believing man, while thanking Him that this incident happened before I had attained maturity and become fully responsible for my actions."

¹ He died, according to the Kashfū'l Hujub, p 70, No 328, in 1130/1718. Since writing this, I have found the Arabic original of this autobiography in one of my MSS (C. 15) entitled Kitābu'l Anwārīn Nu'māniyya, composed by Sayyid Nī'matu'llāh in 1089/1678. It concludes the volume, and occupies ff 329-34.

After pursuing his studies with various other masters, he obtained his father's permission to follow his elder brother to Huwayza. The journey thither by boat through narrow channels amongst the weeds, tormented by mosquitoes "as large as wasps" and with only the milk of buffaloes to assuage his hunger, gave him his first taste of the discomforts of travel. In return for instruction in Jámí's and Járbardí's commentaries and the Sháfiya, his teacher exacted from him "much service," making him and his fellow-students collect stones for a house which he wished to build, and bring fish and other victuals for him from the neighbouring town. He would not allow them to copy his lecture-notes, but they used to purloin them when opportunity arose and transcribe them. "Such was his way with us," says the writer, "yet withal we were well satisfied to serve him, so that we might derive benefit from his holy breaths."

He attended the college daily till noon for instruction and discussion, and on returning to his lodging was so hungry

An ignorant
Professor.

Hardships of travel "in search of knowledge."

that, in default of any better food, he used to collect the melon skins cast aside on the ground, wipe off the dust, and eat what fragments of edible matter remained. One day he came upon his companion similarly employed. Each had tried to conceal from the other the shifts to which he was reduced for food, but now they joined forces and collected and washed their melon skins in company. Being unable to afford lamps or candles, they learned by heart the texts they were studying, such as the Alfyya of Ibn Málík and the Kafya, on moonlight nights, and on the dark nights repeated them by heart so as not to forget them. To avoid the distraction of conversation, one student would on these occasions often bow his head on his knees and cover his eyes, feigning headache.

After a brief visit to his home, he determined to go to Shíráz, and set out by boat for Basra by the Shattu'l-'Arab.

He was so afraid of being stopped and brought back by his father that, during the earlier part of the voyage, he stripped off his clothes and waded behind the boat, holding on to the rudder, until he had gone so far that recognition was no longer probable, when he re entered the boat. Farther on he saw a number of people on the bank, and one of his fellow-passengers called out to them to enquire whether they were Sunnís or Shí'a. On learning that they were Sunnís, he began to abuse them and invoke curses on the first three Calíphs, to which they replied with volleys of stones.

The writer remained only a short while at Basra, then governed by Husayn Páshá, for his father followed him thither to bring him home, but he escaped privily with his brother, and, as already narrated¹, made his way to Shíráz and established himself in the Mansuriyya College, being then only eleven

Study under d'ficulues.

From Basra
to Shíráz.

At College
in Shíráz.

¹ P 360 supra

years of age. He found one of the tutors lecturing on the Alfiyya of Ibn Málík, who, on the conclusion of the lecture, questioned him as to his aims and adventures, and finally, seizing him by the ear and giving it a sharp twist, said, "O my son, do not make thyself an Arab Shaykh or seek for supremacy, and do not waste thy time! Do not thus, that so perchance thou mayst become a scholar."

In this college also the life was hard and the daily allowance of food inadequate, and the writer's brother wished to return home, but he himself deter-Sufferings from cold and hunger.
mined to remain, copying books for a pittance, and working almost all night through the hot weather in a room with closed doors while his fellow-students slept on the roof. Often he had neither oil for his lamp nor bread to eat, but must work by moonlight, faint with hunger, while in the winter mornings his fingers often bled with the cold as he wrote his notes. Thus passed two or three years more, and, though his eyesight was permanently affected by the strain to which it was subjected, he began to write books himself, a commentary on the Káfiya, and another, entitled Miftáhu'l-Labíb, on the Tahdhíb of Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín Muḥammad¹. He now began to extend the range of his studies beyond Arabic grammar, and to frequent the lectures of more eminent teachers from Baghdád, al-Aḥsá and Baḥrayn, amongst them Shaykh Ja'far al-Baḥrání. One day he did not attend this Shaykh's lecture because of the news which had reached him of the death of certain relatives.

When he reappeared on the following day the Shaykh was very angry and refused to give him any further instruction, saying, "May God curse my father and mother if I teach you any more! Why were you not here yesterday?" And, when the writer explained the cause of his absence, he said, "You should have attended the lecture, and indulged in your mourning afterwards", and only when the student had sworn never to play the truant again whatever might happen was he allowed after an interval to resume his attendance. Finally he so far won the approval of this somewhat exacting teacher that the latter offered him his daughter in marriage, an honour from which he excused himself by saying, "If God will after I have finished my studies and become a Doctor ('alim), I will marry." Soon afterwards the teacher obtained an appointment in India, at Haydarábád in the Deccan.

¹ See the Kashfu'l-Hujub, p. 146, No. 725. The author died in 1031/1621-2. He was one of the most notable theologians of the reign of Sháh 'Abbás the Great, and is commonly called in Persia "Shaykh-i-Bahá'í." See p. 407 infra.

Sayyid Ní'matu'lláh remained in Shíráz for nine years, and for the most part in such poverty that often he swallowed nothing all day except water. The earlier part of the night he would often spend with a friend who lived some way outside the town so as to profit by his lamp for study, and thence he would grope his way through the dark and deserted bazaars, soothing the fierce dogs which guarded their masters' shops, to the distant mosque where he lectured before dawn. At his parents' wish he returned home for a while and took to himself a wife, but being reproached by a learned man whom he visited with abandoning his studies while still ill-grounded in the Science of Traditions, he left his parents and his wife (he had only been married for three weeks) and returned to the Mansuriyya College at Shíráz. Soon afterwards, however, it was destroyed by a fire, in which one student and a large part of the library perished, and about the same time he received tidings of his father's death. These two misfortunes, combined with other circumstances, led him to leave Shíráz and go to Isfahán.

Life of a poor student at Shíráz

During his early days at Isfahán he still suffered from the same poverty with which he had been only too familiar in the past, often eating salted meat to increase his thirst, so that the abundance of water he was thereby impelled to drink might destroy his appetite for solid food. The change in his fortune took place when he made the acquaintance and attracted the notice of that great but fanatical divine Mullá Muḥammad Báqir-i-Majlisí, perhaps the most notable and powerful doctor of the Shí'a who ever lived. He was admitted to the house of this famous man and lived with him for four years studying theology, and especially the Traditions¹. Yet in this case familiarity did not breed contempt, for, as the author mentions in his *Anwár-u'-Nu'máníyya*², though specially favoured by this formidable "Prince of the Church," he often, when summoned to his library to converse with him, or to help in the compilation of the Biháru'l-Anwár, would stand trembling outside the door for some moments ere he could summon up courage to enter.

Thanks to this powerful patronage, however, he was appointed lecturer (mudarris) in a college recently founded by a certain Mírzá Taqí near the Bath of Shaykh-i-Bahá'í in Iṣfahán, which post he held for eight years, when the increasing weakness of his eyes and the inability of the oculists of Iṣfahán to afford him any relief determined him to set out again on his travels. He visited Sámarrá, Kázimayn, and other holy places in 'Iráq, whence he returned by way of Shúshtar to Iṣfahán. In 1079/1668-9 his brother died, and ten years later, when he penned this autobiography, he still keenly felt this loss. After visiting Mashhad he returned to Huwayza, where he was living a somewhat solitary and disillusioned life at the time of writing (1089/1678-9). Of his further adventures I have found no record, but his death did not take place until 1130/1718, only four years before the disaster which put an end to the Şafawî Dynasty.

¹ As has been already mentioned (p. 359 supra), this powerful prelate was one of the "three Muḥammads" of the later time, and his great work on Shí'a tradition, the Biháru'l-Anwár, is still accounted in Persia the most authoritative work on this subject.

² See the Kashf-u'l-Hujub, p. 70, No. 328. I have a MS. of this work obtained from the late Hájji 'Abdu'l-Majíd Belshahi and now bearing the class-mark C. 15. As already noted (p. 361), it concludes (ff. 329-34) with the Arabic original of the narrative here given.

I have given in a somewhat compressed form the whole of this illuminating narrative, one of those "human documents" which are so rare in Persian books (though indeed, as already noted on p. 361, it was originally written in Arabic), because it throws so much light on the life of the Persian student of theology, which, for the rest, mutatis mutandis, closely resembles that of the mediæval European student. We see the child prematurely torn from the games and amusements suitable to his age to undergo a long, strenuous, and arid course of instruction in Arabic grammar and philology, reading one grammar after another in an ascending scale of difficulty, with commentaries, supercommentaries, glosses and notes on each; we see him as a boy, now fired with ambition, pursuing his studies in theology and law, half-starved, suffering alternately from the cold of winter and the heat of summer, ruining his eyesight by perusing crabbed texts by the fitful light of the moon, and his digestion by irregular and unwholesome meals, varied by intervals of starvation; cut off from home life and family ties; submerged in an ocean of formalism and fanaticism; himself in time adding to the piles of glosses and notes which serve rather to submerge and obscure than to elucidate the texts whereon they are based; and at last, if fortunate, attracting the favourable notice of some great divine, and becoming himself a mudarris (lecturer), a mutawallî (custodian of a shrine), or even a mujtahid.

But if the poor student's path was arduous, the possible prizes were great, though, of course, attained only by a few.

Value of this "human document."

In the eyes of the Şafawí kings the mujtahid was the representative of the Expected Imám, whose name they never mentioned without adding to the prayer, "May God hasten his glad advent!" ('ajjala 'lláhu faraja-hu !). He had power of life and death. Hájji Şayyid Muḥammad Báqir ibn Muḥammad Taqí of Rasht, entitled Hujjatu'l-Islám ("the Proof of Islám"), is said to have put to death seventy persons for various sins or heresies. On the first occasion, being unable to find anyone to execute his sentence, he had to strike the first ineffective blow himself, after which someone came to his assistance and decapitated the victim, over whose body he then recited the funeral prayers, and while so doing fainted with emotion¹.

Another mujtahid, Áqá Muḥammad 'Alí, a contemporary of Karím Khán-i-Zand, acquired the title of Şúfi-kusi ("the Şúfi-slayer") from the number of 'urafá and darwíshe whom he condemned to death².

Another, Mullá 'Abdu'lláh-i-Túní, induced Sháh 'Abbás the Great to walk in front of him as he rode through the Maydán-i-Sháh, or Royal Square, of Işfahán³, with the object of demonstrating to all men the honour in which learning was held.

Mullá Ḥasan of Yazd, who had invited his fellow-townsmen to expel, with every circumstance of disgrace, a tyrannical governor, was summoned to Tíhrán by Fath-'Alí Sháh to answer for his actions, and threatened with the bastinado unless he disavowed responsibility for this procedure. As he refused to do this, and persisted that he was entirely responsible for what had happened, he was actually tied up to receive the bastinado, though it was not actually inflicted. That night the Sháh was notified in a dream of the extreme displeasure with which the Prophet regarded

¹ Qişaşu'l-'Ulamá (Lucknow ed.), p. 138.

² Ibid., p. 210.

³ Ibid., part ii, p. 54.

the disrespect shown by him to the exponent of his doctrine and law, and hastened next morning to offer his apologies and a robe of honour, which last was refused by the indignant ecclesiastic¹

Mullá Ahmad of Ardabíl, called Muqaddas ("the Saint," died in 993/1585), being asked by one of the King's officers who had committed some fault to intercede for him, wrote to Sháh 'Abbás the Great in Persian as follows²

بانی ملک عاریه عتاس بداند که اگر این مرد اول ظالم بود
اکنون مظلوم میماید چنانچه از تقصیر او بگذری شاید حق
سحانه و تعالی از پاره تقصیرات تو بگذرد
کنه بنده شاه ولایت احمد الاردبیلی

"Let 'Abbás, the founder of a borrowed empire³, know that this man, if he was originally an oppressor, now appears to be oppressed, so that, if thou wilt pass over his fault, perhaps God (Glorious and Exalted is He) may pass over some of thy faults

"Written by Ahmad al Ardabílí, servant of the Lord of Saintship⁴

To this the Sháh 'Abbás replied

لعرص میرساند عتاس که خدماتیکه فرموده بودند بحان مت
داسته بتقدیر رسانید که این محب را از دعای حبر فراموش نکند

کنه کلب آستان علی عتاس

"'Abbás makes representation that he accepts as a spiritual favour and has fulfilled the services which you enjoined on him Do not for get [me] your friend in your prayers !

"Written by 'Abbás, the dog of 'Alí's threshold "

¹ Qisasul 'Ulamá (Lucknow ed), pp 99-100

² This and the following anecdote are from the Qisasul 'Ulamá (Tíhrán ed, p 260, Lucknow ed, p 132)

³ Because it really belongs to the Expected Imám, and is only held by the Sháh as his trustee and vice gerent

⁴ I.e. 'Alí ibn Abí Tálib, the First Imám

Another mujtahid of Ardabíl entitled Muḥaqqiq ("the Investigator" or "Verifier") wrote on behalf of certain Sayyids to Sháh Tahmásp, who, on receiving the letter, rose to his feet, placed it on his eyes, and kissed it, and gave the fullest satisfaction to its demands. Then, because the letter addressed him as "O brother" (Ayyuha'l-Akh), the Sháh caused it to be placed with his winding-sheet and ordered that it should be buried with him, "in order that," said he, "I may argue with the Angels of the Tomb, Munkir and Nakír, that I should not be subjected to their torment."

Still more extraordinary is another anecdote in the same work¹ of how Prince Muḥammad 'Alí Mírzá gave a thou-

A mansion in Paradise bought by a Prince.

sand ṭimáns to each of two mujtahids in return for a paper, duly signed and sealed, promising him a place in Paradise. One of them (Sayyid Ridá ibn Sayyid Mahdí) hesitated to do this, but the Prince said, "Do you write the document and get the doctors of Karbalá and Najaf to witness it, and I will get it (i.e. the mansion in Paradise) from God Most High."

Many similar anecdotes might be cited, besides numerous miracles (karámát) ascribed to most of the leading divines, but enough has been said to show the extraordinary power and honour which they enjoyed. They were, indeed, more powerful than the greatest Ministers of State, since they could, and often did, openly oppose the Sháh and overcome him without incurring the fate which would almost in-

Modern instances of clerical power.

evitably have overtaken a recalcitrant Minister. Nor is this a thing of the past, as is abundantly shown by the history of the overthrow of the Tobacco Concession in 1890-1, which was entirely effected, in the teeth of the Náṣiru'd-Dín Sháh and his Court, and the British Legation, by the mujtahids, headed by Hájji Mírzá Ḥasan-i-Shirází and Hájji Mírzá Ḥasan-i-Ashtiyání, inspired and prompted by that extraordinary man Sayyid Jamálu'd-Dín miscalled "the Afghán"¹ Dr Feuvrier, the Sháh's French physician, who was in Tihrán at the time, gives a graphic account of this momentous struggle in his *Trois Ans à la Cour de Perse*². I have described it fully in my *Persian Revolution of 1905-1909*³, and also the still more important part played by Mullá Muhammad Kazím of Khurásán and other patriotic *mujtahids*⁴ in the Persian struggle for freedom and independence in the first decade of this century of our era. Mullá Muhammad Kázim, a noble example of the patriot priest, deeply moved by the intolerable tyranny and aggression of the then government of Russia, formally proclaimed a jihád, or religious war, against the Russians on December 11, 1911, and was setting out from Karbalá for Persia in pursuance of this object when he died very suddenly on the following day, the victim, as was generally believed, of poison⁵. He was not the only ecclesiastical victim of patriotism, for the Thiqatü'l-Islam was publicly hanged by the Russians at Tabriz on the 'Ashurá, or 10th of Muharram, 1330 (January 1, 1912)⁶, a sacrilegious act only surpassed by the bombardment three months later of the shrine of the Imám Ridá at Mashhad, which many Persians believe to have been avenged by the fate which subsequently overtook the Tsar and his family at the hands of the Bolsheviks.

¹ Qīṣaṣi'l-'Ulamá, ed. Lucknow, p. 32.

The mujtahids and mullás, therefore, are a great, though probably a gradually decreasing force, in Persia, and concern themselves with every department of human activity,

¹ For a full account of him, see my Persian Revolution, ch 1, pp 1-30 etc

² Paris, n d, ch v, pp 307-349

³ Ch 11, pp 31-58

⁴ Ibid, p 262 etc. For facsimiles of fatwá and letter, see pp 421-4

⁵ See my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, p 334.

⁶ Ibid, pp 335-6, and also my pamphlet entitled The Reign of Terror at Tabriz (October, 1912) from the minutest details of personal purification to the largest issues of politics. It is open to any problem into the

The fatwá.

Shí'a Muslim to submit any problem to enter (and they enter) and to ask for a mujtahid, and to ask for a formal decision, or fatwá, conformable to the principles of Shí'a doctrine. Such fatwá may extend to the denunciation of an impious or tyrannical king or minister as an infidel (takfir), or the declaration that anyone who fights against the Hidden Imám. The fact that the greatest mujtahids generally reside at Najaf or Karbalá, outside Persian territory, greatly strengthens their position and conduces to their immunity. To break or curb their power has been the aim of many rulers in Persia before and after the Shafawís, but such attempts have seldom met with more than a very transient success, for the mullás form a truly national class, represent in great measure the national outlook and aspirations, and have not unfrequently shielded the people from the oppression of their governors. And although their scholarship is generally of a somewhat narrow kind, it is, so far as it goes, sound, accurate, and even in a sense critical. The finest Persian scholar I know, Mírzá Muḥammad ibn 'Abdu'l-Wahháb of Qazwín, is one who has superimposed methods acquired in a knowledge of European critical England, France and Germany.

The better side of the "clergy."

On the other hand, apart from corruption, fanaticism and other serious faults, many of the 'ulamá are prone to petty paragement. A well-

The worse side: jealousy and vulgar abuse.

jealousy and mutual dislike, as Malcolm¹ and in the known anecdote, given by that great doctors like *Qīṣāṣu'l-'Ulamá*², shows that in al-'Ámilí could rise Mír Dámád and Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dīn

pp. 258-9.

¹ History of Persia (ed. 1815), vol. i, pp. 181.

² Lucknow ed., second part, pp. 26-7.

above such ignoble feelings, but as the author of the latter work complains, their less magnanimous colleagues were but too prone to call one another fools and asses, to the injury of their own class and the delight of irreligious lay men. Nor was this abuse rendered less offensive by being wrapped up in punning and pedantic verses like this¹

وَلَسْتُ حَذِرًا أَنْ تَكُونَ مُقَدَّمًا ، وَمَا أَنْتَ إِلَّا نِصْفُ صَدِّ الْمَقْدَمِ

"Thou art not worthy to be advanced, nay, thou art nothing more than half of the opposite of 'advanced'!"

The opposite of "advanced" (muqaddam) is "postponed" (mu akhkhār), and the second half of the latter word, khār, is the Persian for an ass. This is a refined specimen of mullā's wit for a much coarser one the curious reader may refer to an interchange of badinage between Mullā Mīrzā Muhammad, Shīrwānī the Turk and Āqā Jamāl of Isfahān recorded in the Qisasu'l-'Ulamā.² That some mullās had the sense to recognize their own rather than their neighbours' limitations is, however, shown by a pleasant anecdote related in the same work³ of Jamālū'd Dīn Muhammad ibn Husayn i-Khwānsarī. As a judge he was in receipt of a salary of four thousand tumāns a year. One day four persons successively put to him four questions, to each of which he replied, "I do not know." A certain high official who was present said to him, "You receive from the King four thousand tumāns to know, yet here to everyone who asks you a question you reply 'I do not know'." "I receive these four thousand tumāns," replied the mullā "for those things which I do know. If I required a salary for what I do not know, even the Royal Treasury would be unable to pay it."

¹ Qisasu'l-'Ulamā, Lucknow ed., second part p. 165, Tīhrān ed., p. 281.

² Ibid., Lucknow ed., second part, p. 52, Tīhrān ed., pp. 200-1.

³ Ibid., Lucknow ed., second part, p. 50, Tīhrān ed., p. 199.

Jurisprudence (fiqh) and theology ('aqá'id), with the ancillary sciences, all of which are based on a thorough knowledge of the Arabic language, normally constitute the chief studies of the "clergy," though naturally there is a certain tendency to specialization, the qádl, or ecclesiastical judge, being more concerned with fiqh, and the theologian proper with doctrine. We must also distinguish between the prevalent Uṣūlī and the once important but now negligible Akhbārī school, between whom bitter enmity subsisted. The former, as their name implies, follow the general "principles" (uṣūl) deducible from the Qur'án and accredited traditions, and employ analogy (qiyás) in arriving at their conclusions. The latter follow the traditions (akhbár) only, and repudiate analogical reasoning. Mullá Muḥammad Amín ibn Muḥammad Sharíf of Astarábád, who died in 1033/1623-4, is generally accounted the founder of the Akhbārī school, and was, according to the *Lí'lí'atü'l-Baḥrayn*¹, "the first to open the door of reproach against the Mujtahids, so that the 'Saved Sect' (al-Firqatu'n-Nájiya, i.e. the Shí'a of the Sect of the Twelve) became divided into Akhbārīs and Mujtahids," and the contents of his book *al-Fawá'idü'l-Madaniyya*² consist for the most part of vituperation of the Mujtahids, whom he often accused of "destroying the true Religion." A later doctor of this school, Mírzá Muḥammad Akhbārī of Baḥrayn, entertained so great a hatred for the Mujtahids that he promised Fath-'Alí Sháh that he would in forty days cause to be brought to Tíhrán the head of a certain Russian general who was at that time invading and devastating the frontier provinces of Persia, on condition that Fath-'Alí Sháh would, in case of his success, "abrogate and abandon the Mujtahids,

"Envoítement" of a Russian general.

¹ Bombay lith., p. 122.

² See the Kashfú'l-Hijub, p. 406, No. 2242. The author wrote the book at Mecca two years before his death.

extirpate and eradicate them root and branch, and make the Akhlbárt doctrine current throughout all the lands of Persia" The Sháh consented, and thereupon the Akhlbart doctor went into retirement for forty days, abstained from all animal food, and proceeded to practise the "envoûtement" of the Russian general, by making a wax figure of him and decapitating it with a sword. According to the story, the head was actually laid before the Sháh just as the period of forty days was expiring, and he thereupon took council with his advisers as to what he should do. These replied, 'the sect of the Mujtahids is one which hath existed from the time of the Imáms until now, and they are in the right, while the Akhlbárt sect is scanty in numbers and weak. Moreover it is the beginning of the Qájár dynasty. You might, perhaps, succeed in turning the people from the doctrine [to which they are accustomed] but this might be the cause of disastrous results to the King's rule, and they might rebel against him. Moreover it might easily happen that Mírzá Muhammad should be annoyed with you, arrive at an understanding with your enemy, and deal with you as he dealt with the Russian 'Ishpukhtur'.' The wisest course is that you should propitiate him, excuse yourself to him, and order him to retire to the Holy Thresholds (Karbalá or ¹ Qisas-i 'Ulamá, Tíhrán ed., p. 132, Lucknow ed., pp. 188-9. The Russian general is here called Ishpukhtur (اشپوچتر), which, as my friend M. V. Minorsky informs me represents "Inspector" (pronounced Išpexlor), and is, perhaps, influenced in its form by the popular etymology ایشی بوق دور (in Ottoman Turkish = در = ایشی بوق) invented by the Turkish speaking Ádharbáyjánís, meaning "his work is dirt." M. Minorsky further informed me that this general's real name was Tsitsianoff, that he was a Georgian, and that the phrase "Have you brought the Inspector's head?" (مگر سر اشپوچتر را آوردی) is still used proverbially to one who presents himself in great hurry and excitement, as though in fulfilment of some very important commission.

Najaf) and stay there ; for it is not expedient for the State that such a person should remain in the capital." This advice Fath-'Alí Sháh decided to follow.

The very dry, narrow and formal divines are called by the Persians Qishrî (literally "Huskers," i.e. externalists), and to these the Akhbârs in particular belong, but also many of the Uşûlîs, like Mîrzâ Ibrâhîm, the son of the celebrated Mullâ Şadrâ, one of the teachers of Sayyid Ni'matu'llâh Jazâ'irî, who used to glory in the fact that his belief was that of the common people, and Mullâ 'Alí Núrí, who used to pray that God would keep him in the current popular faith¹. On the other hand we have the more liberal-minded divines, whose theology was tinged with Philosophy or Latitudinarians, Şúfiism, the Mutakallimîn, who strove to reconcile Philosophy with Religion and closely resemble the School-men of mediaeval Europe, and finally the pure philosophers, like the celebrated Mullâ Şadrâ of Shîráz, who, however little their ultimate conclusions accorded with orthodox theology, had generally had the training of the 'ulamâ and were drawn from the same class.

The literature produced by this large and industrious body of men, both in Arabic and Persian, is naturally enormous, but the bulk of it is so dull or so technical that no one but a very leisured and very pious Shí'a scholar would dream of reading it. The author of the Qişaşu'l-'Ulamâ remarks² that the 'ulamâ often live to a very advanced age, and as their habits are, as a rule, sedentary and studious, and they devote a large portion of their time to writing, it is not unusual to find a single author credited with one or two hundred books and pamphlets. Thus the author of the Qisasu'l-'Ulamā enumerates 169 of his own works, besides glosses, tracts and minor writings¹, of those of Mullā Muhsin-i-Fayd (Fayḍ), 69 by name, but he adds that the total number is nearly 200², of those of Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn Bābawayhi, entitled as-Sadīq, 189³, and so on. Many of these writings are utterly valueless, consisting of notes or glosses on super-commentaries or commentaries on texts, grammatical, logical, juristic or otherwise, which texts are completely buried and obscured by all this misdirected ingenuity and toil. It was of this class of writings that the late Grand Mufti of Egypt and Chancellor of al-Azhar Shaykh Muḥammad 'Abduh, one of the most able and enlightened Muhammadan divines of our time, was wont to say that they ought all to be burned as hindrances rather than aids to learning.

¹ Qişaşu'l-'Ulamâ, Tîhrân ed., p. 248 ; Lucknow ed., second part, p. 107.

² Lucknow ed., p. 65.

The works on Jurisprudence (Fiqh) also, even the best, are as a rule very unreadable to a non-Muslim. What is taught in English universities as "Muhammadan Law" is, of course, only a portion of the subject as understood in the Lands of Islām. The Shar'at, or Holy Law, includes not only Civil and Criminal Law, but such personal religious obligations as Prayer and the Purifications necessary for its due performance, Alms, Fasting, Pilgrimage, and the Holy War (Jihād), which subjects, with their innumerable ramifications and the hair-splitting casuistry applied to all sorts of contingencies arising from them, constitute perhaps one half of the whole. It is curious that, in spite of the neglect of Shī'a theology by European Orientalists, one of the best European books on Muhammadan Jurisprudence treats of Shī'a Law. This is M. Amédée Querry's Droit Musulman Recueil de Lois *concernant les Musulmans Schyites*¹; and the European reader who wishes to form an idea of the subject, with all its intricate, and, to the non-Muslim mind, puerile and even disgusting details, cannot do better than consult this monumental work, which is based on the *Sharāyī'u'l-Islām fī masā'ilī'l-Ḥalāl wa'l-Ḥarām*² of the celebrated Shí'a doctor Najmu'd-Dīn Abu'l-Qāsim Ja'far ibn al-Ḥasan... al-Ḥillī, commonly called al-Muḥaqqiq al-Awwal ("the First Verifier" or "Investigator"), who died in 676/1277-8. Other works of authority, enumerated in the Preface (vol. i, p. vii) were also consulted, as well as leading contemporary Persian jurists, by M. Querry, whose twenty-five years' sojourn in Turkey and Persia, where he occupied important official positions, such as counsellor of the French Legation at Tīhrān, singularly fitted him for the arduous task which he so ably accomplished. An excellent Index of Arabic technical terms explained in the course of the book greatly enhances its value.

¹ Qisasu'l-'Ulamā, Lucknow ed., pp. 77-85.

² Ibid., second part, pp. 112-16.

³ Ibid., second part, pp. 183-6.

Mention should be made in this connection of a Persian catechism on problems of jurisprudence (fiqh) entitled Su'āl u Jawāb ("Question and Answer"), by the eminent mujtahid Ḥájji Sayyid Muḥammad Báqir, whose severity in enforcing the death-penalty in cases where it is enacted by the Ecclesiastical Law has been already mentioned³. This work, composed subsequently to 1236/1820, was very beautifully printed in 1247/1832, apparently at Iṣfahán, under the supervision of Mírzá Zaynu'l-Ábidín of Tabríz, "the introducer of this art into Persia." It comprises 162 ff. of 29.6 × 20.5 c. and 28 lines, and the letters س (su'āl, "question") and ج (jawāb, "answer")

¹ Two vols. of pp. viii+768 and 669 respectively (Paris, Maisonneuve, 1871-2).

² See p. 54, n. 3; supra.

³ See p. 368 supra. His life is given very fully in the Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamá (Lucknow ed., pp. 129-78).

are throughout inserted by hand in red I possess only one volume, which was to have been followed by a second, but whether this was ever completed I do not know¹ The topics are arranged in the usual order, beginning with the personal obligations of purification, prayer, alms, fasting and pilgrimage, and ending with the Kitābu'l-Wad'at, dealing with objects deposited in trust in the hands of another An Introduction on "Principles" (Usul) is prefixed to the whole, and in each book, or section, various problems connected with the topic in question are propounded, with the author's decisions, the whole in the form of dialogue Thus the Introduction begins abruptly, without any doxology, with the following question

Q ' If a person follows the opinions of one of the mujtahids (may God increase the like of them!) during the life of that mujtahid, is it lawful after his death for that person to continue to follow him and act according to his sayings, or not?"

The answer, which fills nearly a page, is to the effect that it is not lawful so to do, and that the person in question should transfer his allegiance to some other mujtahid Numerous authorities are cited in support of this view, amongst them Muhammad Bāqir (presumably al Majlis), Sayyid Muhammad Mahdī, the "Second Martyr" (ash-Shahīdu th-Thāni), and the "Second Verifier" or "Investigator" (al Muhaqqiqu th Thāni)

The "books," or sections, are of very unequal length, that on Prayer occupying nearly 70 ff, and other 'books,' including the last, on Trusts, only half a page Of the latter, which contains only two questions and their answers, the full translation is as follows

¹ The British Museum Library also possesses only this one volume See E Edwards's Catalogue (1922), col 458 The Qisasu'l 'Ulamā gives 1227/1812 as the date of composition, but on f 28^b of the text, line 2, Muharram 1236/Oct 1820 is mentioned as the current date

Q.—"Zayd¹ sends an article in trust to a trustee, bidding him give it to So-and-so. After the arrival of the article, the trustee learns for certain that the article entrusted to him belongs to 'Amr¹, and that the hand of the sender, etc., is the hand of borrowing and usurpation. Moreover 'Amr lays claim to the trust, saying, 'This trust committed to thee is my property.' The trustee also admits the validity of his claim to the property, but says, 'He sent it to me to give it to So-and-so; I will not give it to thee.' Has 'Amr legally power to assume possession of the property and take it from the trustee, or not? And to whom should the trustee surrender the trust, so that he may be cleared of all further responsibility?"

A.—"If what has been penned actually corresponds with the facts of the case, that is to say, if the trustee knows that the property belongs to 'Amr, and that the hand of the sender of it is the hand of usurpation and violence, it is incumbent on the said trustee to surrender such property to its owner, whether the sender gives permission for such surrender or not. For such trustee to say to 'Amr, having knowledge of the fact that the said property really belongs to him, 'I will not give it to thee, in view of the fact that the sender of it bade me give it to So-and-so, not to thee,' is incompatible with the functions of a trustee, and is not conformable to the Holy Law."

Q.—"If Zayd shall have deposited an article in trust with 'Amr, and if nearly seventeen years shall have passed, and if, notwithstanding 'Amr's urgent insistence with Zayd that he should remove the said article, he neglects to do so, and the said article, without any excess or defect of action² [on 'Amr's part], perishes, is 'Amr liable to any penalty, or not?"

A.—"Provided the details as set forth in writing correspond with the facts, there will be no penalty."

This sample of Shi'ā jurisprudence must suffice, but such as desire a further illustration of the matters which pre-occupy the minds of these jurisconsults and doctors may with profit read the narrative of the trial of the Báb at Tabriz for heresy about A.D. 1848, of which an account,

¹ 'Amr and Zayd in Muslim jurisprudence correspond to "John Doe" and "Richard Roe" of English law-books; in grammar to Balbus and Caius; and in common speech to "Tom, Dick, and Harry."

² I.e. without any fault of commission or omission on his part.

based on the principal Persian narratives, will be found in vol II of my Traveller's Narrative, pp 277-90

We turn now to the more interesting subject of Shí'a theology, which has hitherto hardly attracted the attention

Popular it deserves from European Orientalists and can only receive brief and inadequate treatment here It must suffice to sketch in outline the current popular creed, without considering its evolution from early times, and to mention a few of the chief doctrinal works written in Persian during or since the Safawí period For the purpose of this outline, however, I choose not one of the larger, more authoritative and more famous books like the Haqqu'l Yaqín ('Certain Truth') of Mullá Muhammad Báqir-i-Majlisí, but a little manual entitled

'Aqd'idu'sh Shí'a' ('Beliefs of the Shí'a') composed during the reign of Muhammad Sháh Qájár (before the middle of the nineteenth century of our era) by a certain 'Alí Asghar ibn 'Alí Akbar, and lithographed in Persia without indication of place or date. This work, comprising 438 (unnumbered) pages, consists of an Introduction (Muqaddama), five sections called Mishkát, and a Conclusion (Khátima) The contents are briefly as follows

Introduction (Muqaddama)

Sets forth that God has not created mankind in vain, but that they should worship and serve Him, and reap the recompense of their actions in the next world He has sent, to make known to them His Will and Law, numerous prophets, of whom Muhammad is the last and greatest He left behind him the Scripture (the Qur'án) and his holy descendants and representatives for the continued guidance of mankind In these days of the Greater Occultation (Ghaybat-i Kubrá)¹ wherein we live, the true faith is deduced

¹ This began in 260/873-4, when the Twelfth and last Imám disappeared, to return in "the Last Time" from the Qur'án and the sayings and traditions of the Holy Imáms. According to these, three things are required of us: (1) heartfelt belief; (2) oral confession; (3) certain prescribed acts. These are ascertained either by personal investigation and "endeavour" (ijtihád), or by adopting the opinions of such investigator (mujtahid) by conformity to his authority (taqlíd). The author concludes by enumerating a number of heresies to be avoided, such as

Various heresies denounced.

Pantheism (wahdatu'l-wujúd); Apotheosis and Incarnation (ittihád wa hulúl); Determinism or Fatalism (jabr); Antinomianism (sugút-i-'ibádát) consequent on self-mortification and discipline (riyádát); Communism (ibálat)¹; Deification and adoration of the Imáms; denial of the Resurrection of the body, or of any future life; sanction of the use of musical instruments, and of narcotic or intoxicating substances; Metempsychosis (tanásukh); Anthropomorphism (tashbúh), and the like.

Mishkát I (pp. 7-28), in four sections (Miṣbáḥ).

What is to be believed concerning the Essence and Attributes of God.

Belief in the Unity of God (tawḥíd) is fourfold, namely:

Section i. Unity of the Divine Essence (Tawḥíd-i-Dhát).

God is One, without partner, peer or equal; Holy; Perfect; Free from defect; not composite, or capable of being so conceived, imagined, or apprehended; neither Body, nor Light, nor Substance, nor Accident; not located, nor born, nor producing offspring; Invisible both in this world and the next², even to the

The Divine
Essence and Attributes.

¹ Communism was preached in Persia in Sásánian times (sixth Christian century) by Mazdak. From his time until that of the Bábís this accusation has been brought against many heterodox sects.

² Ḥáfiz has accordingly been blamed by one of his critics for the verse:

Prophets, Imáms and Saints, but known to us only by His acts and the signs of His Power, neither eating, nor drinking, nor clothing Himself, exempt from anger, vexation, pain, joy, height, depth, change, progression, or retrogression, Eternal and absolutely independent of all else His Attributes are identical with His Essence, not added to or superimposed on His Essence. These Attributes are for the most part negative and are called Sifat-i-Salbıyya or 'Privative Attributes.'

Here again the author digresses to denounce various heresies of the Sufis, especially the idea that beautiful persons are especially the Mirrors or Tabernacles of God, and the doctrine of Pantheism (Wahdatu'l-Wujud), according to which the relation of Phenomena to Absolute Being is similar to that between the Waves and the Sea, or to sunlight passing through windows of variously coloured glass

Section II Unity of the Divine Attributes (Tarkıf-i Sıfat) These Attributes are of several kinds, namely

(1) "Essential Attributes" (Sifat-i-Dhatiyye), to wit, Life, Power, with its derivative Speech, and Knowledge, with its derivatives Will and Comprehension. To these six some theologians add Eternity and Truth, but these, like Speech, Will and Comprehension, are Secondary Attributes, while Life, Power and Knowledge are primary. (2) The "Privative" or "Negative Attributes" (Sifat-i-Salbıyya), also called the "Attributes of Glory" (Jalál) as opposed to 'Perfection' (Kamál) and این حابِ عاریت که بحافظ سپرد دوست

روزی رهش بسم و تسلیم وی کمر

"This borrowed spirit which the Friend hath entrusted to Háfiz, one day I shall see His Face and surrender it to Him"

¹ Or "Positive" (Thubutiyya), or Sifat-i-Kamál, 'Attributes of Perfection'

"Beauty" (Jamál), are seven qualities from which God is exempt, namely, Compositeness, Corporeality, Visibility, Locality, Association or Partnership, Unreality, and Need. (3) "Effective Attributes" (Ṣifát-i-Fi'lí), or "Attributes of Beauty" (Ṣifát-i-Jamál), are acts which may be ascribed or not ascribed to God at different times and in different circumstances, like "the Provider" (Ráziq), "the Creator" (Khálíq), "the Merciful, the Compassionate" (Rahmán, Rahím), "the Bounteous" (Jawád), and so forth. In this section reference is made to other views entertained by the Ash'arís, the Mu'tazila, the Kirámís, al-Balkhí, an-Najjár, Ḥasan of Baṣra, etc.

Section iii. Creative Unity of God (Tawḥíd-i-Khalq).
 God alone can create, and it is heresy to believe with the Zoroastrians that God creates only what is good, and the Devil what is evil. But God can and does use means to this end, and can delegate His creative powers to Angels or other agents. "The good or evil manifested through God's plenipotentiary servants¹ is not God's act but their act, wherefore they are the recipients of reward or punishment, by reason of the option which they enjoy, so that they themselves, by their own

¹ This passage is so important in connection with the doctrine of Free Will and Predestination that I give it in the original :

وَأَمَّا خَيْرٌ وَ شَرٌّ از بندگان مختار ظاهر میشود کارِ خدا نیست بلکه کارِ بنده است لهذا موردِ ثواب و عقاب میشوند باختیاریکه دارند و بخواهشِ خود بخود میکنند آنها را که خداوند امر و نهی نموده است اگرچه ایشان هم بقدرت و قوتی که ندارند بایشان عطا فرموده است لکن چون اختیار را هم بایشان داد پس ثواب و عقاب را هم قرار داد و اما خدا خالقِ خیر و شر است و بنده فاعل و کننده اوست، باری چون [این] رساله بجهة عوام است محلّ کلام با [ما؟] اینجا نیست،

volition, do those things which God hath commanded or forbidden. For although they act by virtue of a power and strength which they do not in themselves possess, but which God hath conferred upon them, yet, since He hath given them this option, He hath also assigned to them rewards and punishments. Yet God is the Creator of Good and Evil, while His servant is but the agent and doer thereof. Since, however, this treatise is designed for the common people, it would be out of place for us to discuss this matter [more fully] here."

The author next proceeds to refute certain opinions entertained by the extreme Shi'a (Ghulāt), such as that 'Alī can create, with or without God's permission, or that he is the "Assigner of Daily Bread" (Qasimū'l-Arzaq), or that God obtained his permission to create the universe, or that he put his hand under his prayer-mat and brought forth in it the heavens and the earth. It may, however, be believed, as is implied in sundry traditions, that on the Day of Judgement God will leave "the Reckoning" with 'Alī or other of the Imāms, and will accept their intercession, and the like. Hence 'Alī is entitled "the Face of God" (Wajhu'llāh), "the Hand of God" (Yadu'llāh), "the Gate of God" (Bābu'llāh), and the like.

It is also necessary to believe in al-Biddā, or God's sovereign Will, that He does what He pleases, and that He can create what He pleases "without material or period" (bila mādda wa mudda), that is, from nothing in the twinkling of an eye.

Section iv. Unity of Worship (Tawhīd i-'Ibādāt). Worship is the exclusive prerogative of God, and of the Divine Essence, not of the Attributes. To worship an Attribute or Name (such as "the Word of God") apart from the Essence is unbelief, while to worship an Attribute in conjunction with the Essence is polytheism. This is of two sorts, patent and latent. The Refutation of the Ghulāt

*Tawhīd i-
'Ibādāt*

former includes the external worship of idols, trees, stars, the sun and moon, fire and human beings ; or of symbols, such as crucifixes or pictures of holy persons ; the latter includes excessive devotion to wife or child, or worldly wealth, or ambition, or hypocritical ostentation of piety. The visitation of the Ka'ba at Mecca and the Tombs of the Holy Imáms is, however, permitted ; as also bowing down before kings or holy and learned men, provided there be not actual prostration (sujúd), and that no worship be intended.

Mishkát II (pp. 28-31).

What is to be believed concerning the Justice of God.

"It is necessary to believe that God is just, not a tyrant, and that at no time hath He acted, or doth He or will He act, unjustly towards any one. This is a fundamental article of our Faith, and whosoever holds the contrary is eternally damned." Thus begins this section, of which the most interesting portion again deals with the question of Free Will and Predestination. "It is also necessary to believe that God neither compels His creatures to act in a given way (jabr, 'compulsion'), nor allows them unrestricted choice (tafwíd), but pursues a course intermediate between these two : that is to say that He has created them equally capable of both good and evil, so that they neither act under such compulsion that their deeds are in reality God's deeds, nor can they do what they do by their own strength and power without God's assistance. The former belief is Determinism or Fatalism (jabr) and the latter Free Will (tafwíd). The correct view is that, whatever they do, they do voluntarily, not by compulsion and constraint, although God furnishes them with the power, means, and instruments, and has indicated to them the paths of good and evil, so that whoever elects to do good becomes deserving of reward, while he who elects to do evil becomes deserving of punishment."

Free Will and Predestination.

The author illustrates this by the example of a carpenter's apprentice, who, having been taught his craft and furnished with the necessary tools, is bidden by his master to make a window of a certain size and description. If instead of this he makes a door, he cannot excuse himself by pleading that his master taught him the craft and gave him the tools which enabled him to make the door. Such is the case of man if he misuses the powers and limbs which God hath given him. Here follows the well known story¹ of the sceptic whose three questions were answered by a darwīsh who struck him on the head with a clod, but here Abu Hanīfa and Buhlul (the "wise fool") take the parts of the sceptic and the darwīsh respectively.

The authors theory that God created the hearts of believers, unbelievers, and waverers each from a different clay, "Knowing before He created them that the believer by reason of his belief would be good, and the unbeliever by reason of his unbelief bad, and so creating each of the appropriate substance, so that there might be no question of compulsion" (jabr), is not very convincing.

Mishkāt III (pp 32-45)

On the Prophetic Function, general and special

Section 1 The general Prophetic Function (Nubuwwat
 : 'amma) The number of the true prophets antecedent to Muhammad, "the Seal of the Prophets and the last of them," is variously stated as from 140 to 124 000. It is necessary to believe that these, whatever their actual number, were true and immaculate (ma'sum), that is, that during the whole of their lives they were guilty of no sin, major or minor, that they all enunciated the same essential truths, and that the revela-

¹ It is included in the extracts at the end of Forbes's Persian Grammar, No 67, pp 12-13

tions which they received were essentially identical, though in detail the later abrogate the earlier, to wit, the Qur'án the Gospel, and the Gospel the Pentateuch (Tawráh). These three, together with the Psalms of David (Zubúr) and the Books of Abraham (Ṣuḥuf), are the principal Scriptures, but the total number of revealed books is estimated by some as 104 and by others as 124. Of the Prophets sent to all mankind (mursal) four (Adam, Seth, Enoch or Idrís and Noah) were Syrians; five (Húd, Ṣálih, Shu'ayb, Ishmael and Muḥammad) were Arabs, and the remainder of the Children of Israel. The five great Prophets called Ulu'l-'Azm are Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus and Muḥammad.

Section ii. The Special Prophetic Function [of Muḥammad] (Nuburwwat-i-Kháṣṣa). It is necessary to believe

The Prophet-hood of Muḥammad.

that Muḥammad was the last of all the Prophets, and that anyone after him who claims to be a prophet is an unbeliever and should be killed by the Muslims. Also that in every virtue and excellence he surpasses all other beings; that his "Light" (Núr-i-Muḥammad) was created thousands of years before all other creatures; that he was sent not only to all mankind but to the Jinn; and that his doctrine and law abrogate all preceding ones.

Section iii. What is to be believed touching the Qur'án. It is the last and greatest of revealed Scriptures, abrogating all others, and is the miracle of Muḥammad, though not the product of his mind; it is temporal (ḥadthi), not eternal (qadím); was revealed in the pure Arabic language (as were all the Scriptures, though each prophet received his revelation in the language of his people), and was sent down on the Laylatu'l-Qadr ("Night of Worth") in its entirety from the Preserved Tablet (Lawḥ-i-Mahfúz), but was revealed by Gabriel in instalments, as occasion arose, over a period of 23 years.

The Qur'án.

Neither men nor Jinn, though all should combine, can produce the like of the Qur'an, or even one chapter or verse of it. It contains all truth and all knowledge, and the full interpretation of it is known only to God, the Prophet, and the Imáms, and those "firmly established in Knowledge" to whom they have imparted it. The original Qur'an is in the keeping of the Hidden Imám, and has undergone no change or corruption.

Section iv The Prophet's Attributes. He was "illiterate" (ummi), having never studied or received instruction from men or Jinn, he cast no shadow, a cloud used to overshadow his head, he could see behind his back as well as before his face, he was luminous to such a degree that in his presence on the darkest night his wives could find a lost needle without the aid of lamp or candle. His birth was heralded and accompanied by miracles, enumerated in detail. He was immaculate (ma'sum), and the most excellent of all beings. Gabriel was really his servant, and 'Azrá'il (the Angel of Death) could not approach him to receive his soul without his permission. He was neither a poet (shá'ir), nor a magician (sáhir) nor a liar (kadhídhab), nor a madman (díwána), and to assert any of these things is blasphemy. He had five souls or spirits, of which the first three (called Ruh-i mudraj, Rúh quwwat, and Ruh-i-shahwat) are common to all men, the fourth, Ruh-i-imán, "the Spirit of Faith," is peculiar to true believers, while the last, "the Holy Spirit" (Rúhu'l-Quds), belongs to the Prophet alone, and his successors, the Holy Imáms.

Section v The Prophet's Miracles. These included the Cleaving of the Moon (shaqq'il-qamar), knowledge of the Past, the Future, and the Unseen, raising the dead, knowledge of 72 out of the 73 Names of God, whereof not more than twenty were known to any previous Prophet, and the like. He saw Character of the Prophet.

Miracles of the Prophet

Paradise and Hell with his own eyes, and ascended into Heaven in his material body, clad in his own clothes, and wearing his sandals, which he would have put off on approaching God's Throne, but was forbidden by God to do so.

Section vi. The Prophet's Ascension (Mi'ráj). He ascended in his material body to the Station of "Two bow-shots or less¹," a point nearer to God than that attained by Enoch or Jesus or any angel or archangel. To assert that this Ascension was allegorical, or within himself, or spiritual and esoteric, is heresy.

Section vii. Sundry other beliefs concerning the Prophet. He was "a mortal man to whom revelations were made" in various ways mediate and immediate. He combined in himself the functions of Apostle (Rasûl), Prophet (Nabî), Imám, and Muhaddith, by which is here meant one who sees and holds converse with the Angels. His intercession for sinners will be accepted in the Day of Resurrection; and God has bestowed on him, within certain limits, authority to command and prohibit, and to add to the obligations imposed by God in such matters as prayer and fasting. He explicitly appointed his cousin and son-in-law 'Alí ibn Abí Tálíb to succeed him; but to assert that Gabriel took the Revelation from a well in a plain, and, receiving permission from God to see who was the author, looked into the well and saw that it was 'Alí; or that Gabriel mistook Muḥammad for 'Alí and brought the Revelation to him by mistake, are blasphemous heresies.

¹ Qur'án, liii, 9.

² Ibid., xviii, 110.

Mishkát IV (pp 45-71)

On the Imamate

Section 1 Enumeration of the Twelve Imáms of the Ithnè-'ashariyya or "Sect of the Twelve," and refutation of the Sunnís, who recognize Abu Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthmán as the Khulafá, or successors and vicegerents of the Prophet, of the Kaysániyya, who accept Muhammad ibnu'l-Hanafiyya, a son of 'Alí by another wife than Fátíma, as Imám, of the Zaydiyya, who accept Zayd ibn Hasan, of the Isma'íliyya, who accept Isma'il in place of his brother Musà al Kázim, of the Aftahiyya, who accept 'Abdu'lláh al-Aftah, another son of Ja'far as-Sádiq the sixth Imám, and so forth. The Kaysánís, Zaydís, Isma'ílís, Tá'usís, Aftahís and Wáqífís all belong to the Shí'a, but not to the "Sect of the Twelve," and they will all be tormented in Hell for their error, though they are Muslims, as are even the Sunnís, who are therefore pure, wherefore, according to the prevailing view, it is not lawful to interfere with their lives, wives or property, though some Shí'a doctors hold the contrary view.

Section 11 Knowledge of the Prophet and Imams This section is entirely historical or quasi-historical, giving the dates of the births, deaths, and chief events in the lives of Muhammad and the Twelve Imáms.

The Prophet Muhammad was born on Friday 17th (or 12th) of Rabí' 1 in the "Year of the Elephant," in the year 1021 of Alexander, and in the Seventh year of the reign of Anusharwán "the Just." He lived 63 years, of which 53 were spent at Mecca and ten at al Madína, and his "Mission" began when he was forty years old. He had nine (or 12, or 15) wives and two concubines, four sons, Qásim, Táhir and Tayyib by Khadíja, and Ibráhm by Mary the Copt, and three daughters, Fáṭima (who married 'Alí), and Zaynab and Ruqayya, who were married to 'Uthmán. He died (poisoned by a Jewess of Khayṭar, as asserted) on Monday the 27th or 28th of Ṣafar, and was buried at al-Madína.

'Alí ibn Abí Ṭálíb was the immediate legitimate successor of the Prophet and the First Imám, though not formally recognized as Khalífa until after the deaths of Abú Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthmán (whom the Shí'a regard as usurpers). He waged three great wars, with the Qásīṭn ("wrong-doers"), i.e. Mu'áwiya the Umayyad and his partisans; the Nákithín ("troth-breakers"), i.e. 'Á'isha, Ṭalḥa and Zubayr; and the Máriqín ("rebels"), i.e. the Khárijites. He was assassinated by Ibn Muljam on Ramaḍán 21 at the age of sixty-three. He married twelve wives after the death of Fáṭima and had seventeen sons and nineteen daughters. His father Abú Ṭálíb was inwardly a believer, though he made no outward profession of Islám. 'Alí is supposed to have been the twelfth of the Awṣiyá (executors, trustees, or vicegerents) of Jesus Christ.

Fáṭima was the daughter of the Prophet by Khadíja, and the wife of 'Alí, to whom she bore three sons (al-Ḥasan, al-Ḥusayn and Muḥassin), and two daughters (Zaynab the elder and Umm Kulthúm). She died, aged about eighteen, on the 3rd of Jumádà ii, A.H. 11 (26 August, 632).

Ḥasan ibn 'Alí, the Second Imám, was born in Sha'bán or Ramaḍán, A.H. 3 (January or March, 625), resigned the position of Khalífa to Mu'áwiya, to safeguard himself and his followers, after he had held it for ten years and a half, and died of poison administered to him by Ja'da the daughter of al-Ash'ath ibn Nafis, known as Asmá, at the instigation of Mu'áwiya, nine years and a half later. He is said to have had 60 wives, besides concubines, but others say 300 or even 600,

'Alí ibn Abí
Ṭálíb, the First
Imám.

Ḥasan ibn 'Alí,
the Second
Imám.

of whom he divorced so many that he earned the nick-name of al-Mitlaq ("the great divorcer"), and to have had fifteen sons and two daughters, though here again there is much difference of opinion. The best known of his numerous titles is al-Mujtaba.

Husayn ibn 'Alī, the Third Imám, was born only six months (sic) after his brother Hasan, had five wives besides concubines, six sons, 'Alī Akbar, who succeeded him as Imám, 'Alī Awsat, 'Alī Asghar, Muhammad, Ja'far and 'Abdu'llah, and three daughters, Fátimatu'l Kubrà, Sakína and Fátimatu's-Sughrà. Account of his death at Karbalá on Muharram 10, A H 61 (October 10, 680) with 72 of his kinsmen and partisans at the age of 56, 57 or 58. Of his titles the best known is "the Chief of Martyrs" (Sayyidu'sh-Shuhada).

'Alī ibn Husayn, the Fourth Imam, commonly known as Zaynu'l-'Abidin and Sayyid-i-Sajjád. His mother was the daughter of Yazdigird, the last Sasánian King of Persia. Her name was Shahrbanu, or, according to others, Ghazála or Salama. He was born in 36/656-7 or 38/658-9. He had one wife, his cousin Umm 'Abdu'lláh, daughter of al-Hasan, besides concubines. He had sixteen children (seven or twelve sons, and nine or four daughters). One of his sons, Zayd, was killed by the Umayyad Caliph Hishám ibn 'Abdu'l-Malik, who is also said to have poisoned him in 94/712 when he was fifty seven years of age.

Muhammad Báqir, the Fifth Imám, was born in A H 57 or 58 (A.D. 676-8), and is said to have been poisoned by the Umayyads in 104/722 or 107/726-7. [From this point onwards there are so many discrepancies and conflicting statements that a more rigorous abridgment seems desirable. Thus the age of this Imám is given as 57 or 58, or even 78, all of which,

Husayn ibn Al
the Third
Imám

Alī Zaynu'l
Abidin the Fourth Imám

Muhammad
Báqir the Fifth Imám

especially the last, are absolutely incompatible with the dates given for his birth and death.]

Ja'far aş-Şádiq, the Sixth Imám, born 80/699-700, poisoned by the 'Abbásid Caliph al-Manşúr in 148/765-6.

He took advantage of the internecine strife between the Umayyads and 'Abbásids to carry on an active propaganda for the Shí'a doctrine, which is therefore often called after him "Ja'farí."

Músà al-Kázim, the Seventh Imám, born 129/746-7, poisoned by Hárúnu'r-Rashíd in 180/796-7.

'Alí ar-Ridá, the Eighth Imám, poisoned by al-Ma'mún in 203/818-9, and buried at Mashhad.

Muhammad Taqí, the Ninth Imám, born 195/810-11, poisoned by his wife at the instigation of the Caliph al-Mu'tasim in 220/835.

'Alí Naqí, the Tenth Imám, born in 212/827-8, poisoned in 245/868 at the instigation of the Caliph al-Mu'tazz.

Hasan al-'Askarí, the Eleventh Imám, born 232/846-7, poisoned in 260/873-4 at the instigation of the Caliph al-Mu'tamid.

The Imám Mahdí, also called Qá'imu Áli Muḥammad, Hujjatu'lláh and Baqiyyatu'lláh, the Twelfth and last

Imám, born in 255/869 by Narjis Khátún to Hasan al-'Askarí, disappeared in 260/873-4, is still living and will return "in the last Days" to establish the Shí'a faith and "fill the earth with justice after it has been filled with iniquity."

Section iii. Attributes of the Imáms. It is necessary to believe that the Imáms were created from one pre-existing

Light; that all blessings and all knowledge of God come through them; that through them

the universe lives and moves and has its being; and that they are in every respect the most excellent of beings after the Prophet Muḥammad, and superior to all other Prophets and to the Angels, though subject to all human needs and functions. They are also immaculate (ma'sum) innocent of any sin, small or great, co equal, endowed with every virtue, knowledge and power. Their birth was not as that of ordinary mortals, and, like the Prophet, they were born circumcised. After many further amplifications of the Imáms' perfections, the author proceeds to warn his readers against certain opinions of the Ghulát, or most extreme Shí'a, who would put them above the Prophet and even deify them.

Mishkát V¹ (pp 71-85)

Beliefs connected with Death, Judgement and the Hereafter

Section 1. Death. The Angels, the Prophet and the Imáms are present at every death bed, whether of a believer or an unbeliever. When the spirit leaves the body, it attaches itself to a subtle invisible body (qalib-Death. 1 mithál-1 latíf) which is a simulacrum of the material body in the intermediate world or "World of the Barrier" ('Álam 1 Barzakh). To believe, as do some of the common people, that these disembodied spirits enter the crops of green birds or lamps attached to the Throne of God ('Arsh) is an error. This disembodied spirit watches the body it has quitted and the preparations for its burial, urging haste if it be a believing spirit, and delay if unbelieving, but none hears or heeds its appeal. It also sees its place in Heaven or Hell, as the case may be. A believer's death is not always easy, nor an unbeliever's hard. The Prophet's description of the Angel of Death, whom he saw during his Night Ascent to Heaven.

¹ Like so many Persian books, the actual divisions of this book do not correspond with the Table of Contents, which indicates five main divisions, each called Mishkát, while only four such headings actually occur in the text. This section is described as Section (Mishkát) iv of Mishkát IV, but it introduces a quite new topic and should, I am convinced, be called, as I have called it, Mishkát V.

Section ii. The Questioning of the Tomb. When the body has been buried and the mourners have dispersed, the spirit returns to the body to undergo the Questioning of the Tomb (Su'ál-i-gabr) at the hands of the Angels Munkir and Nakír, whose terrible aspect is described. If the deceased is a believer and gives satisfactory answers to their questions on his beliefs, they leave him in peace, saying, "Sleep as the bride sleeps in her bridal chamber," and they enlarge his Tomb as far as the eye can see, and open from it a door into Paradise, so that the air of Paradise enters it and gladdens the occupant. But if he is an unbeliever, they revile him and beat him with their clubs, and fill the tomb with fire; and he cries out in agony, so that if men and Jinn could hear, they would die of terror. But the animals hear, and that is why a sheep grazing or a bird gathering grain will suddenly stop and shiver and listen intently. Those of the Shí'a who are buried at Karbalá are said to be exempt from this Questioning, and some believe that the whole plain of Karbalá, rid of all impurities, including the bodies of unbelievers and hypocrites, will be bodily transferred to Paradise. The good deeds and kindnesses of the dead may take the form of a beautiful companion who will bear them company in the tomb and dispel their loneliness¹.

Section iii. The Squeezing of the Tomb. It is not certain whether all are subject to this, or only the unbelievers. This squeezing is not confined to those who are buried in the ground, for those who are hanged, drowned or eaten by wild beasts are equally subject to it. After the Questioning and the Squeezing, the spirit again leaves the material body and reunites with the subtle invisible body. Opinions differ as to whether this last always existed within the material body, or apart from it in the "World of Similitudes," or is specially created for each spirit at the moment of dissolution.

¹ This affords an interesting parallel to the Zoroastrian belief set forth in the Arda Viráf náma.

Section iv¹. Concerning the Intermediate World ('Ālam-i-Barzakh) Barzakh means something intermediate between two other things, in this case a state or world between this life and the next, more subtle than the former and more gross than the latter

The World of the Barrier "

Some identify it with the World of Similitudes ('Ālam-i-Mithal), others believe it to exist in this world, but in an Eighth Clime outside the Seven Climes, called *Ard-i-Huwarqilya*² The Terrestrial Paradise is in the Wadi's-Salam in the western part of this region, and the Terrestrial Hell in the *Wadi Barahūt*³, in the eastern part In these places respectively the souls of the Blessed and the Lost congregate and experience pleasure or pain, and when a new spirit arrives they let it rest for a while to recover from the "Questioning" and the "Squeezing," and then interrogate it as to the friends who survived them on earth, whether they be still living or dead

Section v⁴. The departed spirits visit their former homes on earth to watch their families and friends, some daily, some weekly, some monthly, some yearly, some only once in several years Some say they come in the form of green birds and perch on the roof or walls of the house and talk, but the living do not notice or attend to them because of their preoccupation with the things of this world. The spirits of the Blessed see only the

State of the
departed before the Resurrection

¹ This is headed Misbāh v (of Mishkāt IV), and the numbering of the sections begins again, but it appears to me really to constitute Section iv of Mishkāt V

² Cf the Jism i Huwarqilyā't of the Shaykhis, mentioned in my Traveller's Narrative, vol II, p 236

³ See Qazwini's Āthārul-Buldān, p 25, also Halévy in the Journal Asiatique for Oct Dec 1883, pp 442-54, and Yāqut's Mu'jamul Buldān, vol I, p 598

⁴ Entitled Section II of Misbāh v (of Mishkāt IV)

good things which befall, or are wrought by, their families and friends. Some say that they come on a particular day, on Monday at noon, or on Thursday, or on Friday. If their friends remember them, offering good works, prayers or fasting as a present to them, they are pleased ; the happiness of the Blessed is increased, and the torments of the Lost alleviated thereby. "Therefore, my dear friend," says the author, "you must not forget the departed in this world, but must strive, so far as in you lies, to send presents to them." The Earthly Paradise (Bihisht-i-Dunyâ) is a place of rest and peace, there is no sorrow or weeping, nor any obligation to pray or fast.

Section vi¹. On the spirits of the wicked. These are also permitted from time to time to visit their homes, but they see only the evil done by their friends, and strive to warn them, but cannot, and return to the Earthly Hell more miserable than before. Discussion as to the state after death of the children of believers and unbelievers, the ignorant and feeble-minded, and the insane ; and concerning the Recording Angels. According to some, the male children of believers are, after their death, committed to the care of Abraham, and the female children to that of the Virgin Mary.

State of the wicked after death.

Conclusion (Khâtima)² (pp. 85-132).

Beliefs connected with the Return of the Twelfth Imâm.

Section i. On his Occultation (Ghaybat). Three Occultations are distinguished, entitled "Lesser," "Greater" and "Least." The "Lesser Occultation" (Ghaybat-i-Sughrà) began on the 8th of Rabl' i, 260 (Jan. 1, 874), lasted 69 years, and ended with

The "Occultation" (Ghaybat) of the Imâm.

¹ Entitled Section iii etc., as in the preceding footnote.

² This, I believe, is how the title should stand, but it is actually described as Misbâh vi of Mishkât IV. See p. 395, n. 1, supra.

the death of the last of the four *wakíls*¹ who maintained communication between the Hidden Imám and his followers in 329/940-1. Then began the "Greater Occultation" (Ghaybat-i-Kubrâ), wherein no one has direct access to the "Hidden Imám," and wherein we are now living. The "Least Occultation" (Ghaybat-i-Asghar) will last only from noon on the Friday succeeding his "Return"

The 5th ens of the Last Time.

(Raj'at), when he will behead the preacher (Khattâb) at Mecca and forthwith disappear again, until the morning of the next day (Saturday). The time of the Advent or "Return" of the Imám is known to God alone, but it will be heralded by numerous signs, of which forty-eight or more are enumerated by our author, and of which the most celebrated are the coming of the wicked and hideous Sufyânî, whose army the earth will finally swallow up; the appearance of a figure in the sun, the multiplication of misleading divines and lawyers and of poets; the abounding of tyranny and oppression, the appearance of Antichrist (Dajjâl) riding on his Ass, the assembling of 313 chosen supporters of the Imám in Táliqân of Khurásân, etc. After a "reign of the Saints" lasting seventy years, the Imám will die, poisoned by a woman named Malíha, and the Imám Husayn will return to earth to read the Burial Service over him. This is the beginning of what is called the "Lesser Resurrection" (Qiyámat-i-Şughrâ), when the ¹ I.e. Agents or Representatives, also called "Gates" (Bâb, pl. Abwâb). The avoidance of this last title by the author is probably intentional, for he wrote in 1263/1847, just when Mírzâ 'Alí Muḥammad's claim to be the Bâb was creating so great a stir in Persia. See my Traveller's Narrative, II, pp. 226-34 and 296-8.

The "Lesser Resurrection."

² Many particulars concerning the "Occultations," the "Gates," and the claims to communicate with the Hidden Imám advanced by the Shaykhís and Bábís, denounced as heretics by our author, are given in the notes (especially D, E and O) at the end of vol. II of my Traveller's Narrative, to which the reader is referred.

Prophet and all the Imáms, as well as their chief antagonists, shall return to earth for a while, and fight their battles over again, but with a different result, since the unbelievers shall be uniformly defeated. In this first temporary Resurrection only those who are purely believers or unbelievers (Mu'min-i-Khális or Káfir-i-Khális) will come to life. Then they will again disappear from the face of the earth, and, after forty days' anarchy and confusion, the tribes of Gog and Magog (Yájúj u Májúj) will burst through the Wall (Sadd) which keeps them back, and will overrun the earth, and eat up all the grass and herbs, and drink up the rivers.

The "Greater Resurrection" (Qiyámat-i-Kubrâ), when all the dead shall be raised to life in the same bodies they had while on earth, re-created by God's Power as a broken brick can be re-made from its original materials, will be inaugurated by the blast of Isráfil's trumpet, which shall draw into itself all the spirits of the quick and the dead, so that no living thing shall remain on earth save the "Fourteen Immaculate Ones" (Chahárdah Ma'sûm)¹. Then, when their bodies have been re-created, Isráfil will again blow his trumpet, and the spirits will emerge from it like a swarm of bees, and fly each one to its own body. All animals will also be raised to life to undergo the Reckoning and be judged for their acts of violence towards one another. Then the Balance (Mizân) will be set up for the weighing of the good and bad acts of each soul, and the scroll of each man's deeds, written down by the Recording Angels Sá'iq and Shahíd, will be placed in his hand.

The Seven Hells (Jihannam, Sa't'r, Saqar, Jahám, Lazzá, Hutama and Háwiya) are next enumerated, whereof the first is for Muslims who died in sin without repenting, and who will be released when adequately punished; the second for the Jews;

The Seven
Hells.

¹ I.e. the Prophet, his daughter Fátima, and the Twelve Imáms.

the third for the Christians, the fourth for the Sabaeans, the fifth for the Magians, the sixth for the idolatrous Arabs, and the seventh for the hypocrites. Unbelievers will remain in Hell for ever, but some on account of their virtues, will remain there without suffering torment, as for example, Khusraw Anusharwán on account of his justice, and Hátim of Tayy on account of his generosity.

Next follows a description of the Bridge of Sirát, "finer than a hair, sharper than a sword, and hotter than fire," which spans Hell, and over which everyone must pass, even the Prophets and Imáms and Saints, to reach Paradise. A detailed descrip-

The Bridge of Sirát

tion of a very material Paradise succeeds, which in turn is followed by an account of the Purgatory or intermediate state called al-A'ráf. This is said to be a beautiful meadow or high ground situated on the Bridge of Sirát, and peopled by the spirits of the feeble minded, illegitimate children, and those who are neither good enough for Heaven nor bad enough for

Purgatory
(A'ráf)

Hell. By the intercession of the Prophet or the Imáms some of these will be subsequently admitted to Heaven. Other heavenly delights described, such as the Water of Kawthar, the "Lote-tree of the Limit" (Sidratu'l Muntahá) and the Tubá tree. When every soul has been assigned its place in Heaven, Hell or al-A'ráf, Death will be led forth in the form of a black sheep and slain, to show that henceforth there is neither fear nor hope of death.

Paradise

Conclusion (Khátima)¹ (pp 132-138)

[Section II] On the meaning of Unbelief (Kufr) and Belief (Iman). Five meanings of Kufr in the Qur'an are distinguished, and three chief kinds in ordinary life, namely, spiritual (galbí), verbal (qawlí), and actual (fi'lí). Three kinds of Imán are also distinguished, and Imán is distinguished from Islám. Sunnís and Shí'a not of the "Sect of the Twelve" are believers (mu'mín), but not Muslims; they are not unclean, but will remain for ever in Hell-fire. The apostate (murtadd) from Islám is deserving of death, nor is his repentance accepted in this world, though, according to some theologians, it may be accepted in the next. But from the convert to Islám who reverts to his original faith repentance may be accepted; and a woman who apostasizes should not be killed, but imprisoned and beaten until she repents or dies in prison. The book ends with a description of five kinds of Faith and six kinds of Repentance.

¹ This is so headed, but see pp 381 and 398 supra. This section might be called "Epilogue."

Such in outline is the Shí'a creed of contemporary Persia in its crudest and most popular form. It would be interesting to trace the evolution of that creed from the earliest times of Islám, to compare (so far as the available materials allow) the historical with the legendary Imáms, and to contrast in detail the beliefs, both doctrinal and eschatological, of the Shí'a and the Sunnís. This, however, transcends the scope of this book, even had the preliminary work indispensable to such a study been adequately done. Even amongst the orthodox and formal (qishrí) mujtahids and mullás these doctrines must often have been held in a form less crude and childish than that outlined above, though they may have deemed it wiser to leave the popular beliefs undisturbed, and to discourage speculations which might become dangerous amongst a people only too prone to scepticism and heresy. Taking only the broad divisions of theological and philosophical thought in Persia, we may distinguish in each field three main types; amongst the theologians the Akhbárís, the Usúls (or Mujtahids), and the Shaykhís; amongst the philosophers the Mutakallimín or School-men,

Belief and unbelief.

Broad divisions of religious thought in Persia.

the Falásifa or Hukamá (Philosophers pure and simple), and the philosophical Súfis. Of all these Gobineau's¹ account is still the most clear, lively and concise which I have met with in any European language, though it cannot be certainly affirmed that its accuracy is equal to its clarity. Thus he credits the Akhbáris, generally regarded as the strictest sect of the Shí'a, with a certain latitudinarianism to which they can hardly lay claim, and describes the Shaykhís as "not altogether rejecting the idea of the Resurrection of the Body," when it was precisely their doctrine of the "subtle body" (or Jism-i-Huwarqilyá)² which especially laid them under suspicion of heresy. The doctrines of the Shaykhís, moreover, definitely prepared the way for the still more heretical doctrines of the Bábís who were outside the pale of Islám while the Shaykhís were just within it and counted many influential followers in high places. Of the Philosophers and Súfis more will be said in another chapter, but as to the theologians we shall do well to bear in mind Gobineau's dictum³ "Il ne faut pas perdre de vue que si l'on peut, approximativement, classer les trois opinions ainsi que je le fais, il est nécessaire pourtant d'ajouter qu'il est rare que, dans le cours de sa vie, un Persan n'ait point passé de l'une à l'autre et ne les ait point toutes les trois professées." Mullá Muhammad Báqir-i-Majlisí, one of the greatest, most powerful and most fanatical mujtahids of the Safawí period, found it necessary to apologize for the tolerant and even sympathetic attitude assumed by his father Mullá Muhammad Taqí-i-Majlisí, not less distinguished than himself as a theologian, towards

¹ Les Religions et les Philosophies dans l'Asie Centrale (2nd ed., Paris, 1866), pp 28-33 for the three theological parties, pp 63-111 (ch iv) for the Súfis and the Philosophers

² See my Traveller's Narrative, vol II, p 236

³ Op cit pp 32 3

the Šúfis. "Let none think so ill of my father," he says¹, "as to imagine that he was of the Šúfis. Nay, it was not so, for I was intimately associated with my father in private and in public, and was thoroughly conversant with his beliefs. My father thought ill of the Šúfis, but at the beginning of his career, when they were extremely powerful and active, my father entered their ranks, so that by this means he might repel, remove, eradicate and extirpate the roots of this foul and hellish growth (in Shajara-i-Khabítha-i-Zaqqúmiyya). But when he had extinguished the flames of their infamy, then he made known his inner feelings, for he was a man of the utmost virtue and piety, ascetic and devout in his life," etc.

Yet Mullá Muḥammad Báqir, in spite of his formalism and fanaticism, his incredible industry in writing books in simple and easily intelligible Persian in order to popularize the Shí'a doctrines, and his ruthless persecution of the Šúfis, is credited with posthumous gleams of a higher humanity². One saw him in a dream after his death and asked of him, "How fares it with you in that world, and how have they dealt with you?" He answered, "None of my actions profited me at all, except that one day I gave an apple to a Jew, and that saved me."

The Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamá contains 153 biographies of eminent divines, of whom the following twenty-five appear to me the most interesting and important. They are here arranged, as far as possible, chronologically, the serial number of each biography in the book being indicated in brackets after the name³.

¹ Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamá, Lucknow ed., part ii, p. 19.

² Ibid., part i, p. 216. The author discredited the tale, which is described as widely current. As regards this theologian's literary activity, he is said on the same page to have been accustomed to write 1000 "bayts," i.e. 50,000 words, daily.

³ They are numbered in both editions in the abjad notation, e.g. Kulaynī as صو (96); Najjāshī as قلب (132), etc.

I. Pre-Şafawî divines.

- 1 Muhammad ibn Ya'qub al-Kulaynî (No 96), entitled Thiqatü'l-Islam, author of the Kaßt, d 329/941.
- Ten great divines of the pre Şafawî
period
- 2 Muhammad ibn 'Alî ibn Husayn ibn Mûsâ ibn Bâbawayhî of Qum, called Şadûq (No 95), d 381/991-2 Of his works 189 are enumerated in the Qisasü'l-'Ulamâ, the most important being that entitled Man la yahduruhu'l-Faqîh, which, like the Kaßt mentioned in the last paragraph, is one of the "Four Books"
- 3 Muhammad ibn Muhammad ibn Nu'man ibn 'Abdu's-Salâm al-Harithî, commonly called Shaykh-i-Mufid (No. 97), d 413/1022 The Qisas enumerates 171 of his works
- 4 Sayyid Murtadâ, entitled 'Alamu'l-Hudâ (No 98), d 436/1044 He was the great-great-grandson of the Seventh Imam, Mûsâ al-Kâzım
- 5 Ahmad ibn 'Alî an-Najjâshî (No. 132), d 455/1063 He was a disciple of the Shaykh i-Mufid, and the author of the well known Kitabu'r-Rijâl
- 6 Muhammad ibn Hasan ibn 'Alî at-Tûstî, called Shaykhu't-Tâ'ifa (No 100), d 460/1067 He was the third of the older "three Muhammads" (the others being Nos 1 and 2 supra), and the author of two of the "Four Books," the Tahdhîbu'l-Ahkâm and the Istîbsar, and of the well-known Fihrist, or Index of Shí'a books
- 7 Nasîrü'd-Dîn i-Tustî, entitled Muhaqqiq ("the Investigator"), even more celebrated as a philosopher and man of science than as a theologian (No. 90), d 672/1274 His most famous works are the Akhlaq i Nasîrî on Ethics, the Astronomical Tables called Zîj i-Ilkhânî, compiled for Hulagu Khân the Mongol, and the Tayrîd on Scholastic Philosophy, a favourite text for the countless host of commentators and writers of notes and glosses
- 8 Najmu'd-Dîn Ja'far ibn Yahya, known as Muhaqqiq-i-Awwal ("the First Investigator"), author of the Shara- ji'ul-Islám (No. 89), born 638/1240-1, died Muharram 726/Dec. 1325. As a youth he showed some poetic talent, which was, however, sternly repressed by his father, who told him that poets were accursed and poetry incompatible with a devout life.

9. Hasan ibn Yûsuf ibn 'Alî ibnu'l-Muṭahhar al-Ḥillî, commonly called 'Allâma-i-Ḥillî ("the Sage of Ḥilla") (No. 88), died in the same month and year as the above-mentioned Muḥaqqiq-i-Arṣwal, who was ten years his senior. Of his works 75 are enumerated in the Qisâs. 'Allâma-i-Ḥillî came of a great family of theologians, which produced in a comparatively short period ten mujtahids. His father was one, and his son, entitled Fakhrul-Muḥaqqiqîn (No. 86), another.

10. Shaykh Shamsu'd-Dîn Muḥammad ibn Makki... al-'Amîlî, called Shahîd-i-Awwal ("the First Martyr") (No. 82), was put to death at Damascus about midsummer 786/1384¹ by judgement of the two Qâdîs Burhânu'd-Dîn the Mâlikî and Ibn Jamâ'a the Shâfi'î.

II. Şafawî and post-Şafawî divines.

11. Nûru'd-Dîn 'Alî ibn 'Abdu'l-'Âlî, known as Muḥaqqiq-i-Thânî ("the Second Investigator") (No. 84), came to Persia from Karak, his native place, and was highly honoured and esteemed by Shâh Ṭahmâsp I. He died in 940/1533-4.

Divines of the Şafawî and post-
Şafawî periods.

12. Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad, called Muqaddas-i-Ardabîlî "the Saint of Ardabil" (No. 83), was highly honoured by Shâh 'Abbâs the Great. He died in 993/1585.

13. Mîr Muḥammad Bâqir-i-Dâmâd (No. 77), the grandson of Muḥaqqiq-i-Thânî (No. 11 supra), also stood high in the favour of Shâh 'Abbâs, and died in 1041/1631-2.

¹ This is the date given in the Qisâs, but the Lû'lû'atu'l-Baḥrayn gives 780/1378-9.

Concerning his book the Širdtu'l-Mustaḡīm ("the Straight Path") a Persian poet composed the following epigram:

صراط المستقیم مر داماد¹ مسلمان نشود کافر میباد¹

He himself wrote poetry under the takhallus, or pen-name, of Ishráq

14 Shaykh Muhammad Bahá'u'd-Dínal-'Ámilí, commonly called Shaykh-i-Bahá'í (No. 37), was equal in fame, influence and honour with the above-mentioned Mír Dámád, these two being amongst the men of learning who gave most lustre to the court of Sháh 'Abbás the Great. The literary activities of Shaykh-i-Bahá'í, who was born near Ba'labakk in 953/1546, and died in 1031/1622, were not confined to theology. In that subject his best-known work is the Jámi'-i-'Abbási, a popular Persian manual of Shí'a Law, which he did not live to complete. He also compiled a great collection of anecdotes in Arabic named the Kashkul ("Alms-bowl"), a sequel to his earlier and less-known Mikhldt. He also wrote several treatises on Arithmetic and Astronomy, and composed the Persian mathnawí poem entitled Nán u Halud ("Bread and Sweetmeats")

15 Muhammad ibn Murtadà of Káshán, commonly known as Mullá Muhsin-i-Fayḍ (No. 76), though reckoned "a pure Akhbá'í" (اخباری صرف), and detested by Shaykh Ahmad al-Ahsá'í the founder of the Shaykhí sect, who used to call him Must' ("the Evil-doer") instead of Muhsin ("the Well-doer"), was in fact more of a mystic and a philosopher than a theologian. His best-known theological work is probably the Abwábu'l-Jann ("Gates of Paradise"), composed in 1055/1645. Ten years later he went from Káshán to Shíráz to study philosophy with Mullá Sadrá, whose daughter he married. He was also a poet, and in the

¹ "May the Musulmán not hear nor the unbeliever see Mír Dámád's Širdtu'l-Mustaḡīm"

*Majma'u'l-Fuṣṣah*¹ the number of his verses is said to amount to six or seven thousand.

16. Mīr Abū'l-Qāsim-i-Findariskī, though omitted from the Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamā, was accounted "the most eminent philosopher and Šūfī of his time, and stood high in the estimation of Shāh 'Abbās I, whom he is said, however, to have scandalized by his habit of mixing with the lowest orders and attending cock-fights?" He spent some time in India in the reign of Shāh-Jahān and died in Iṣfahān about 1050/1640-1.

17. Mullā Ṣadru'd-Dīn Muḥammad ibn Ibrāhīm of Shīrāz, commonly called Mullā Ṣadrā, is unanimously accounted the greatest philosopher of modern times in Persia. That in the Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamā no separate article should be devoted to one whose life was a constant conflict with the "clergy," and whose clerical disguise was even more transparent than that of his teachers Mīr Dāmād and Shaykh-i-Bahā'ī, is not surprising, but much incidental mention is made of him in this and other similar works, like the Lū'lū'atu'l-Baḥrayn, and his teaching affected theology, notably that of the Shaykhī school², in no small degree. His death is placed by the Rawḍātu'l-Jannāt about 1070/1660³, but by the Lū'lū'atu'l-Baḥrayn twenty years earlier.

18. 'Abdu'r-Razzāq-i-Lāhijī, like Mullā Muḥsin-i-Fayḍ, was a pupil of Mullā Ṣadrā. His two best-known works, both in Persian, are the Sar-māya-i-Imān ("Substance of Belief") and the Gawhar-i-Murād ("Pearl of Desire"). He

¹ Tīhrān lith. ed. of 1295/1878, vol. ii, pp. 25-6.

² Rieu's Persian Catalogue, p. 815. See also p. 258 supra.

³ Shaykh Aḥmad al-Aḥsā'ī commentated his Mashd'ir and other works (Rawḍātu'l-Jannāt, p. 331), but, according to the Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamā (Lucknow ed., p. 48), regarded him as an infidel.

⁴ This is given by the Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamā as the date of his son Mīrzā Ibrāhīm's death. The earlier date 1050/1640-1 is therefore more probable for the father.

سید محمد
رفیع علی احمد

۱۱۱

ہوئی تھی

عبد الله بن
زكريا بن
عبد الله بن
عبد الله بن

السواذ دا مع صاحب الشرف
كتبه العبد المذنب المذنب المذنب
فان لم امل

این تکرار خط در هر باب صدر الدین قهر بن ابراهیم لقوامی شیرازی شیر صدر را
که شرح حال ایشان صفحه ۳۳۱ در کتاب ضرورت النجات در تاریخ
یکهزار و سیصد و شش در طهران الطببع سیده مندرج وفات در هزار و شصت و هفت
از به است

Autograph of Mullî Sadrá of Shíráz, the Philosopher shared with Shaykh Tabarsí, the author of the Mayma'u'l-Bayán, the curious belief in the "essential meaning" of words, by which he meant that there existed a real relation between the sound and meaning of every word, so that having heard the sound of a strange word it was possible by reflection to conjecture the sense¹.

The last six persons mentioned were all philosophers as well as, or even more than, theologians. The following, except the last, Hájji Mullá Hádí, are all Shí'a divines of the strictest type.

19 Mullá Muhammad Taqí-i-Majlisí (No. 36) is said to have been the first to compile and publish Shí'a traditions, which he received from the Muhaqqiq-i-thání, in the Safawí period. Allusion has already been made to his alleged Súfí proclivities. He died in 1070/1659-60, a date expressed by the ingenious chronogram² :

افسر شرع اوتاد بی سرو پا گشت فضل

"The crown of the Holy Law fell scholarship become headless and footless"

By removing the "crown," i.e. the initial letter, of شرع, and the "head" and "foot," i.e. the initial and final letters of فضل, we get the three letters ع ر ص = 800 + 200 + 70 = 1070.

20 Mulla Muhammad Bâqir-i-Majlisí (No. 33), son of the above, who has been already mentioned repeatedly in this chapter, was even more famous than his father. His great work is the Bihârul-Anwâr ("Oceans of Light"), an immense compilation of Shí'a traditions, but he composed many other works, of which the following are in Persian: 'Aynul-Hayât ("the Fountain of Life"), Mishkâtul-Anwâr ("the Lamp of Lights"), Hilyatul-Muttaqín ("the Ornament of the Pious"), Hayátul-Qulub ("Life of Hearts"), not completed; Tuḥfatu's-Zā'irīn ("the Pilgrims' Present"); Jalā'u'l-'Uyūn ("the Clearing of the Eyes")¹, etc. He died, as already stated, in 1111/1699-1700.

¹ Qisasul-'Ulamá, Lucknow ed., second part, p. 123.

² These data are from the Rawddatul-Jannat, pp. 129-31. The notice in the Qisas is very incomplete.

21. Sayyid Muḥammad Mahdī of Burūjird, entitled Baḥru'l-'Ulūm ("the Ocean of Learning") (No. 27), was born in 1155/1742-3, and appears to have died about 1240/1824-5.

22. Sayyid Muḥammad Bāqir ibn Sayyid Muḥammad Taqī of Rasht, entitled Hujjatu'l-Islām (No. 26), has been already mentioned for his severity in inflicting punishments for infractions of the Sharī'at. He was wealthy as well as influential, and, according to the Rawḍātu'l-Jannāt (p. 125), spent 100,000 "legal ḍinārs" in building a great mosque in the Bīdābād quarter of Iṣfahān. He was born about 1180/1766-7, went to 'Irāq to pursue his studies at the age of sixteen or seventeen, returned to Iṣfahān in 1216 or 1217 (1801-3), and died on Sunday the 2nd of Rabī'ī, 1260 (March 23, 1844). According to his namesake, the author of the Rawḍātu'l-Jannāt, his death was mourned for a whole year by the people (presumably the devout and orthodox only!), because none after him dared or was able to enforce the rigours of the Ecclesiastical Law to the same extent. By a strange coincidence, the "Manifestation" of Mīrzā 'Alī the Bāb, and the subsequent rise of that heresy which did so much to weaken the power of the orthodox Shī'ā faith, took place just two months after his death.

23. Shaykh Aḥmad ibn Zaynu'd-Dīn ibn Ibrāhīm al-Aḥsā'ī, the founder of the Shaykhī school or sect, spent most of his life at Yazd, whence he went by way of Iṣfahān to Kirmānshāh. There he remained until the death of the governor of that city, Prince Muhammad 'Alí Mírzá, son of Fath-'Alí Sháh, who favoured him and invited him to make his abode there. He then retired to the Holy Shrines of 'Iráq, where he composed most of his numerous works, of which the most famous are the Sharh'u's Ziyárat'l-Kabtra and the Sharh'u'l-Fawá'id. He vehemently opposed Mullá Sadrá, Mullá Muhsin i-Fayd, and the Sufís, but was himself denounced as a heretic by Hájjí Mullá Muhammad Taqí of Qazwín, whose death at the hands of a Bábí assassin about A.D. 1847 earned for him the title of "the Third Martyr" (Shahíd i-Thálith). Shaykh Ahmad died in 1243/1827-8, being then nearly ninety years of age¹.

¹ Rawḍātu'l-Jannāt, pp. 118-24.

² The ḍinār in modern Persia is of merely nominal value, and 100,000 (= 10 Tūmāns) are only worth £.2 to £.4, but originally the ḍinār was a gold coin worth about 10 francs, and this latter is presumably what is here intended.

24 Mullá Ahmad i-Niráqí, who died of cholera in 1244/1828-9, was a poet as well as a theologian, and composed a Persian poem entitled Taqdís in imitation of the Mathnawí of Jalálu'd-Dín Rumi. His poetical name was Safa'í, and an article is consecrated to him in the Majma'u'l-Fuṣaha (vol. II, p. 330).

25 Hájjí Mulla Hádt of Sabzawár², the last great Persian philosopher, also wrote poetry under the nom de guerre of Asrár. He was born in 1212/1797-8 and died in 1295/1878.

¹ Most of these particulars are taken from the Rawdátu'l-Jannát, pp. 25-7.

² For an account of his life furnished by one of his disciples, see my Year amongst the Persians, pp. 131-43.

CHAPTER IX.

PROSE WRITERS UNTIL A.D. 1850.

Oriental writers on the art of rhetoric classify prose writings, according to their form, into three varieties, plain ('ári'), rhymed (muqaffá), and cadenced (musajja').

Varieties of Prose.

We may divide them more simply into natural and artificial. To us, though not always to our ancestors, as witness the Euphuists of Elizabethan days, artificial prose is, as a rule, distasteful; and if we can pardon it in a work like the Arabic Maqámát of al-Ḥarírí or the Persian Anwár-i-Suhaylí, written merely to please the ear and display the writer's command of the language, we resent it in a serious work containing information of which we have need. It is a question how far style can be described absolutely as good or bad, for tastes differ not only in different countries but in the same country at different periods, and a writer deemed admirable by one generation is often lightly esteemed by the next, since, as the Arab proverb says, "Men resemble their age more than they do their fathers¹."

Ornate prose in historical works condemned.

But when a serious historian takes a page to say what could be easily expressed in one or two lines, we have a right to resent the wilful waste of time inflicted upon us by his misdirected ingenuity. Before the Mongol Invasion in the thirteenth century Persian prose was generally simple and direct, and nothing could be more concise and compact than such

Early simplicity.

books as Bal'amí's Persian version of Ṭabarí's great history, the Siyásat-náma of the Nizámu'l-Mulk, the Safar-náma of Násir-i-Khusraw, the Qábús-náma, or the Chahár Maqála. Mongol, Tartar and Turkish influences seem to have been uniformly bad, favouring as they did flattery and bombast. The historian Wassáf, whose chronicle was presented to Úljáytu in AD 1312¹, was the first great offender, and unhappily served as a model to many of his successors. In recent times there has been a great improvement, partly due to the tendency, already remarked in the case of verse, to take as models the older writers who possessed a sounder and simpler taste than those of the post-Mongol period, and partly to the recent development of journalism, which, if not necessarily conducive to good style, at least requires a certain concision and directness. In point of style, arrangement, and, above all, documentation the quite recent but little known "History of the Awakening of the Persians" (Ta'rikh-i-Bidart 31-Iráníyan) of the Názimu'l-Islám of Kirmán (1328/1910), unfortunately never completed, is in comparably superior to the more ambitious general histories of Ridá-qulí Khán and the Lisánu'l-Mulk (the Supplement to Mirkhwánd's Rawdatu's-Safa and the Nasikh-u't-Tawd-ríkh) compiled some fifty years earlier.

Of prose works written simply to display the linguistic attainments and rhetorical ingenuities of the authors I do not propose to perpetuate the memory, or to say more than that, when they embody historical and other matter of sufficient value to render them worth translating, they should, in my opinion, if they are to be made tolerable to European readers, be ruthlessly pruned of these flowers of eloquence. As an instance I will take one passage from that very useful and by no means very florid history of the early Safawí period the Alsanu't Ta'warikh (985/1577-8), of which I have made such extensive use in the first part of this volume. It describes the war

Corruption under Mongol and other foreign do-min on.

Recovery in recent times

An instance of misplaced
floridity

¹ See my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, pp. 67-8 waged on the blind Sháhrukh Dhu'l-Qadar by Muḥammad Khán Ustájlú in the spring of 914/1508-9, and begins thus¹:

در بهار كه سلطانِ گل با حشمت و تجمل روی بتاخت الوس
ریاحین آورد و بزخمِ پیکانِ خار جنودِ شتوی را از گلزار منہزم گردانید

بر آمد ز کوسِ سحابیِ خروش،

در آمد سپاہِ ریاحین بجوش،

ریخِ خویش را ابرِ درہم کشید،

بدعویِ کمانہای رستم کشید،

بر آورد شاخِ شگوفہ عَلم،

ریاحین بیاراست خیل و حشم،

ز ژالہ پیِ فرقِ افراسیاب²،

بدامانِ کشانِ سنگِ ہر سو سحاب،

خانِ محمد استاجلو بہ ییلاقِ ماردین نزول فرمود،

"In the spring, when the Rose-king with pomp and splendour turned his face to attack the tribes of the Basil, and, with thrusts of his thorn-spear, drove in rout from the Rose-garden the hibernal hosts—

A roar³ arose from the cloud-drums, the army of the basils was stirred;

The cloud contracted its brows, and drew Rustam-bows⁴ for the contest;

The flowering branches raised their standards, the basils prepared their cavalry and their hosts;

The cloud in its skirts bore in every direction hail-stones for the head of Afrásiyáb—

Khán Muḥammad Ustájlú encamped in summer quarters at Márdín."

¹ F. 75^a of Mr A. G. Ellis's MS.

² This reading is conjectural. The MS. has افسر سحاب, which is obviously wrong, since it is neither sense nor verse.

³ I.e. the spring thunder.

⁴ The rainbow is called "Rustam's bow" (Kamán-i-Rustám) in Persian.

All this could much better be said in one line

در بهار خان محمد استاحلو به ییلاق ماردین برول فرمود

"In the spring Khán Muhammad Ustájlu encamped in summer quarters at Márdín"

Graceful poetic fancies are all very well in their proper place, but in a serious history they are inappropriate and irritating. The trouble is that, as has been remarked already, nearly all literary Persians, and consequently historians, are poets or poetasters, and they unhappily find it easier and more entertaining to mix poetry with their history than history with their poetry, even their professedly historical poetry. In discussing the later prose literature of Persia I shall therefore confine myself to what has substantial value apart from mere formal elegance, and shall treat of it, according to subject, under the five following headings

Classification of prose works

- (1) Theology
- (2) Philosophy
- (3) The Sciences—mathematical, natural and occult
- (4) History—general, special and local
- (5) Biography and autobiography, including travels

I THEOLOGY

Theology in Persia during the period with which we are dealing—that is from the establishment of the Safawí dynasty to the present day, means Shí'a theology, and by extension the semi heterodox doctrines of the Shaykhís and the wholly heterodox doctrines of the Bábís and Bahá'ís. A large portion of this theological literature—in older times almost all, and even now a considerable amount—is in Arabic, the sacred language of Islam and of the Qur'án, and much of it in all Muslim countries is almost unreadable, save for a few professional

Theological literature

theologians, and, it may be added, quite unprofitable. Some learned man writes a theological, philological, or logical treatise which achieves renown in the Colleges where the 'ulamá get their mediaeval training. Some one else writes a commentary on that treatise; a third produces a super-commentary on the commentary; a fourth a gloss on the super-commentary; a fifth a note on the gloss; so that at the end we are confronted with what the immortal Turkish wit Khoja Naṣru'd-Dín Efendí called "soup of the soup of the soup of the hare-soup," a substance devoid of savour or nutriment, and serving rather to conceal than to reveal its original material. Shaykh Muḥammad 'Abduh, late Grand Muftí of Egypt and Chancellor of the University of al-Azhar, than whom, perhaps, no more enlightened thinker and no more enthusiastic lover of the Arabic language and literature has been produced by Islám in modern times, used to say that all this stuff should be burned, since it merely cumbered bookshelves, bred maggots, and obscured sound knowledge. This was the view of a great and learned Muhammadan theologian, so we need not scruple to adopt it; indeed the more we admire and appreciate the abundant good literature of Islám, the more we must deplore, and even resent, the existence of this rubbish. In reading the lives of the 'Ulamá in such books as the Rawḍātu'l-Jannát and the Qisāṣu'l-'Ulamá we constantly find a theologian credited with forty, fifty, or sixty works of this type, which nobody reads now, and which, probably, no one but his pupils ever did read, and they only under compulsion. Even to enumerate these treatises, were it possible, would be utterly unprofitable.

The great achievement of the Shí'a doctors of the later Safawí period, such as the Majlisís, was their popularization of the Shí'a doctrine and historical Anschauung in the vernacular. They realized that to reach the people they must employ the language of class of books.

A worthless

Popular theological works in Persian.

the people, and that in a simple form, and they reaped their reward in the intense and widespread enthusiasm for the Shí'a cause which they succeeded in creating. We have already seen¹ how few Shí'a books were available when Sháh Isma'íl first established that doctrine as the national faith of Persia, and, according to the Rawddtu'l-

Achievement of the Majlisí

*Jaundt*², Mullá Muhammad Taqí Majlisí was

"the first to publish the Shí'a traditions after the appearance of the Safawí dynasty" His even more

Works of Mullá
Muhammad
Báqir r-i Majlísí

eminent son Mullá Muhammad Báqir compiled on this subject the immense Biháru'l-Anwár ("Oceans of Light") in Arabic, and in Persian the following works³ 'Aynu'l-Haydt ('the Fountain of Life'), containing exhortations to renunciation of the world,

Mishkádu'l Anwar ("the Lamp of Lights"), Hilyatu'l-

Muttaqín ("the Ornament of the Pious"), on example and conduct, Hajátu'l Qulub ("the Life of Hearts") in three parts, the first on the Prophets before Muhammad, the second on the Prophet Muhammad, and the third on the Twelve

Imáms, but only part of it was written and it was never completed, Tuhfatu'z Zú'irín ("the Pilgrims' Present"),

Jald'u'l-Uyun ("the Clearing of the Eyes"), Miqbásu'l-

Masábith, on the daily prayers, Rabí'u'l Asábil ("the Spring of Weeks'), Zádu'l Ma'ád ("Provision for the Hereafter"), and numerous smaller treatises. Oddly enough one of the most notable of his Persian theological works, the Haqqu'l-

Yaqín ("Certain Truth"), which was compiled in 1109/1698, and beautifully printed at Tíhrán so early as 1241/1825, is omitted from this list. The late M. A. de Biberstein Kazi mirskí began to translate this book into French, but abandoned his idea, sent his manuscript translation to me, and urged me to continue and complete the work he had begun,

¹ Pp 54-5 supra

² Tíhrán lithographed ed of 1306/1888, p 129

³ Ibid., p 119

a task which, unfortunately, I have never had leisure to accomplish, though it would be well worth the doing, since we still possess no comprehensive and authoritative statement of Shí'a doctrine in any European language.

The basic works of the Shí'a faith, namely the Qur'án (the Word of God) and the Traditions (the sayings and deeds of the Prophet and the Imáms), are naturally in Arabic. The numerous Persian religious treatises may be roughly classified in three groups—the doctrinal, the historical, and the legal. In practice doctrine and history are almost inevitably intermixed, especially in the sections dealing with the Imámate, where attempts are made to prove that the Prophet intended 'Alí to succeed him; that Abú Bakr, 'Umar and 'Uthmán were usurpers of his rights; that the Imáms were twelve in number, no more and no less, and that they were the twelve recognized by the "Sect of the Twelve" (Ithnà-'Ashariyya) and none other. Thus while the earlier sections of these doctrinal works dealing with God and His Attributes border on Metaphysics, the later sections are largely composed of historical or quasi-historical matter, while the concluding portions, dealing with Heaven, Hell, the Last Judgement, and the like, are eschatological.

The style of these books is generally very simple and direct, and totally devoid of rhetorical adornment, but commonly affects an imitation of the Arabic idiom and order of words, not only in passages translated from that language, but throughout, as though these theologians had so steeped their minds in the Qur'án and the Traditions that even when using the Persian language the thought must follow Arabic lines. The following example, taken from the beginning of the second volume of the *Ḥaqqu'l-Yaqín*¹, will suffice to illustrate this peculiarity:

Simple style of
these works.

¹ Tíhrán printed ed. of 1241/1825, f. 142^b.

مقصد بهر در اثبات رجعت است^۱ بدانکه از جمله اجماعات شیعه بلکه ضروریات مذهب حق فرقه^۲ مُحَقِّقَه حَقِیَّتِ رجعت است یعنی پیش از قیامت در زمان حضرت قایم^۳ جمعی از بیکان بسیار نیک و بدان بسیار بد دنیا بر میگردند بیکان برای آنکه ندیدن دولتِ ائمه^۴ خود دیده‌های ایشان روشن گردد و بعضی از حرای بیکهای ایشان در دنیا بایشان برسد و بدان از برای عقوبت و عذاب دنیا و مشاهده^۵ اصعاف آن دولتی که میخواهند ناهل بیت رسالت^۶ برسد و انتقام کشیدن شیعیان از ایشان و سایر مردم در قبرها میماند تا در قیامت محشور شوند چنانچه در احادیث بسیار وارد شده است که رجوع نمیکند در رجعت مگر کسی که محص ایمن داشته باشد یا محص کفر اما سایر مردم پس ایشانرا بحال خود میگذارد^۷

"Maqsad IX' establishing the 'Return' (Raj'at)

"Know that of the number of those things whereon the Shí'a are agreed, nay, which are of the essentials of the true doctrine of that Truth pursuing body, is the 'Return' That is to say that in the time of His Holiness the Qa'im¹, before the Resurrection, a number of the good who are very good and of the bad who are very bad will return to the world, the good in order that their eyes may be brightened by seeing the triumph of their Imáms, and that some portion of the recompense of their good deeds may accrue to them in this world, and the bad for the punishment and torment of the world, and to behold the double of that triumph which they did not wish to accrue to the Imáms, and that the Shí'a may avenge themselves on them But all other men will remain in their tombs until they shall be raised up in the general Uprising, even as it has come down in many traditions that none shall come back in the 'Return' save he who is possessed of pure belief or pure unbelief, but as for the remainder of mankind, these will [for the time being] be left to themselves'

It is true that here the sentence most Arabian in construction may be the literal translation of a tradition not given in the original Arabic, which must evidently run something like this :

¹ "He who shall arise," i.e. the Imám Mahdí or Messiah of the Shí'a

لا يرجع في الرجعة إلا من له محض الإيمان او محض الكفر

but the influence of Arabian syntax is constantly apparent.

Another class of Shí'a theological writings consists of polemical works directed against the Sunnis, the Šúfis, the Shaykhís, the Bábís and Bahá'ís, and the Christians. The Sunnis are naturally attacked in

Polemical works against—

(1) The Sunnis.

all manuals of doctrine with varying degrees of violence, for from Nádír Sháh downwards to Abu'l-Ḥasan Mírzá ("Hájji Shaykhu'r-Ra'ís"), an eager contemporary advocate of Islamic unity¹, no one has been able to effect an appeasement between these two great divisions of Islám, and a more tolerant attitude in the younger generation of Persians, so far as it exists, is due rather to a growing

(2) The Šúfis.

indifference to Islám itself than to a religious reconciliation. Attacks on the Šúfis, especially on their Pantheism (Wahdatu'l-Wujúd), are also often met with in general manuals of Shí'a doctrine, but several independent denunciations of their doctrines exist, such as Áqá Muḥammad 'Alí Bihbihání's *Risála-i-Khayrátiyya*², which led to a violent persecution of the Šúfis and the death of several of their leaders, such as Mír Ma'sum, Mushtáq 'Alí and Núr 'Alí Sháh³; and the Maṭá'inu's-Šúfiyya of Muḥammad Raff' ibn Muḥammad Shaff' of Tabríz, composed in 1221/1806⁴. The latter even has recourse to the Gospels to prove his case, quoting Christ's saying "Beware

¹ His pamphlet on the "Union of Islám" (Ittiḥádu'l-Islám) was lithographed at Bombay in 1312/1894-5.

² Composed in 1211/1796-7. See the full and interesting account of the work in Rieu's Persian Catalogue, pp. 33-4.

³ For a full account of these events, see Malcolm's History of Persia, ed. 1815, vol. ii, pp. 417-22.

⁴ Of this I possess a good MS. dated 22 Jumádá ii, 1222 (27 Aug. 1807).

of them which come to you in sheep's clothing (suf, wool), but within they are ravening wolves "

The Islamo Christian controversy has also produced a considerable literature in Persian, which has been discussed by Professor Samuel Lee in his Controversial Tracts on Christianity and Mohammedanism (Cambridge, 1824) Several such works were written in the first quarter of the seventeenth century by Sayyid Ahmad ibn Zaynu'l-'Ábidín al-'Alawí, one in refutation of Xavier's Á'ina i-Haqq-numá ("Truth-revealing Mirror ") and another directed against the Jews Later the proselytizing activities of Henry Martyn the missionary called forth replies from Mírzá Ibráhím and others¹.

The Shaykhí sect or school derived its origin and its name from Shaykh Ahmad ibn Zaynu'd-Dín al-Ahsá'í, a native not of Persia but of Bahrayn, who died, according to the *Rawdátu'l Jannát*², at the advanced age of ninety in 1243/1827-8, and was succeeded by Sayyid Kázim of Rasht, who numbered amongst his disciples both Sayyid 'Alí Muhammad the Báb, the originator of the Bábí sect, and many of those who subsequently became his leading disciples, and Hájjí Muhammad Karím Khán of Kirmán, who continued and developed the Shaykhí doctrine. This doctrine, essentially a rather extreme form of the Shí'a faith, was accounted heterodox by several eminent mytahids, such as Hájjí Mullá Muhammad Taqí of Qazwín, the uncle and father-in law of the celebrated Bábí heroine Qurratu l-'Ayn, whose hostility to the Shaykhís and Bábís ultimately cost him his life, but earned for him from the orthodox Shí'a the title of the "Third Martyr" (Shahíd i Thálith)³ Some account of the

¹ See my Cat of Pers MSS in the Camb Univ Library (1896), pp 7-13

² Pp 25-6, of the Tíhrán lithographed edition of 1306/1888

³ See vol II of my Traveller's Narrative, pp 197-8 and 310-12

Shaykhís and their doctrines, sufficient for the ordinary student of Persian thought, is given in Note E (pp. 234-44) at the end of the second volume of my *Traveller's Narrative*¹. Shaykh Aḥmad was the author of numerous works, all, I think, in Arabic, of which the titles are given in the Rawḍātu'l-Jannát (p. 25), which asserts amongst other things that he held the Ṣúfis in great detestation, notwithstanding his own unorthodox views on the Resurrection. Naturally the pantheistic and latitudinarian opinions of these mystics are distasteful to dogmatic theologians of every kind, whether orthodox Shí'a or Sunnī, Shaykhí, Bábí and Bahá'í, or Christian. Henry Martyn evidently felt that he had far more in common with the ordinary fanatical mullá of Shíráz than with the elusive and eclectic Ṣúfí. The later Shaykhís and Bábís, though both derive from a common source, hold one another in the utmost detestation; and at least one of the doctors of theology who examined and condemned the Báb at Tabríz towards the end of the year A.D. 1847, Mullá Muḥammad Mámaqání, belonged to the Shaykhí school².

The Bábí-Bahá'í movement, of which the effects have now extended far beyond the Persian frontiers even to America, has naturally given rise to a far more extensive literature, which forms a study in itself, and

(5) The Bábís
and Bahá'ís.

which I have discussed elsewhere³. Of the Báb's own writings the Persian Bayán and the Dalá'il-i-sab'a ("Seven Proofs") are the most important of those composed in Persian⁴. Bahá'u'lláh's Íqán ("Assurance")

¹ See also A.-L.-M. Nicolas, Essai sur le Cheikhisme (Paris, 1910), pp. 72. A list of Shaykh Aḥmad's writings is given.

² See Traveller's Narrative, vol. ii, p. 278.

³ Traveller's Narrative, vol. ii, pp. 173-211; Materials for the Study of the Bábí Religion, pp. 175-243.

⁴ French translations of both have been published by the learned and impartial A.-L.-M. Nicolas.

is the earliest reasoned apology, and was written before he advanced his claim to be "He whom God shall manifest" His later "Tablets" (Alwáh), many of which are in Persian, are innumerable, amongst them the "Epistles to the Kings" (Al-wáh-i Saldtín) are the most interesting and important. There is also an abundant Azalí literature, and each dichotomous schism has given rise to a fresh crop of controversial pamphlets. Of systematic refutations of the Bábi and Bahá'í doctrines in Persian the most elaborate are the Ihqdqu't-Haqq ("Verification of the Truth") of Áqá Muhammad Taqí of Hamadín¹, composed about 1326/1908, and the *Minháju't-Talibín*² of Hájjí Husayn-qulí, an Armenian convert to Islám, lithographed at Bombay in 1320/1902. The Bábis and Bahá'ís have developed a somewhat distinctive style of their own in Persian which possesses considerable merits. Some of Bahá'u'lláh's "Tablets" (Alwáh) addressed to Zoroastrian enquirers are even written in pure Persian without admixture of Arabic. Their most important works, like the Kitáb-i Aqdas ("Most Holy Book"), are, however, written in Arabic. From the point of view of style, both in Persian and Arabic, an immense improvement was effected by Bahá'u'lláh, for the style of Mírzá 'Alí Muhammad the Báb was, as Gobineau says, "terne, raide, et sans éclat," "dull, stiff, and devoid of brilliance."

2. PHILOSOPHY.

Philosophy (Hikmat, Filsafa) is defined by the Muslims as "a knowledge of the true essence of things, as they really are, so far as is possible to human capacity"

Divisions of Philosophy

It is divided into two branches, the theoretical (nazarí), and the practical ('amali). The former comprises Mathematics (Riyádiyyát), Natural Science ('Ilmu't-Tabí'at), and Metaphysics (Má wará'ba'd or fawq at-Tabi'at); the latter Ethics (Tahdhibu'l-Akhlāq), Economics (Tadbiru'l-Manzil), and Politics (Siyāsatu'l-Mudun). The three best-known Persian treatises on Practical Philosophy, namely the Akhlāq-i-Nāṣirī, Akhlāq-i-Jalālī, and *Akhlāq-i-Muḥsinī*¹, all belong to the period preceding that which we are now discussing, and I do not recollect any important Persian work on the subject which has appeared since. We may therefore confine our attention here to the first, or theoretical, branch of Philosophy, and in this section to Metaphysics, which on the one hand borders on Theology, and on the other on Science. It is generally admitted that a very close connection existed between the Shī'a and the Mu'tazila² in early 'Abbāsīd times, and it is well known that the latter were the most enlightened and philosophic of the theological schools of Islām, and that in particular they were the champions of Free Will against the rigid Determinism which subsequently triumphed, to the great detriment of the intellectual development of the Muhammadan world. Those sections of Shī'ite theological works which treat of the Nature and Attributes of God are, therefore, of a more philosophical character than is commonly the case in Sunnī books of a similar type.

¹ Materials, pp 189-90

² Ibid., pp 196-7

Shī'a and Mu'tazila.

Muslim Philosophy, like Muslim Science, admittedly and avowedly owes almost everything to the Greeks. Its development from the middle of the eighth century of the Christian era, when under the early 'Abbāsīd Caliphs the work of translating into Arabic the works of the most eminent and celebrated Greek thinkers began, down to the deadly blow inflicted on Islamic civilization by the Mongol Invasion and the destruction of

Debt of Muslim philosophers to the Greeks.

¹ See my Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion, pp. 442-4.

² See de Boer's Hist. of Philosophy in Islam, translated by E. R. Jones (London, 1903), pp. 33, 43, 72 and 84; and Goldziher's Vorlesungen über der Islam (Heidelberg, 1910), pp. 234 et seqq.

Baghdád and the 'Abbásid Caliphate in the middle of the thirteenth century, has been repeatedly traced by European scholars. For a broad general view, characterizing the chief exponents of the different schools of Islamic thought, Dr T. J. de Boer's History of Philosophy in Islam, translated into English by E. R. Jones, may be recommended to the general reader. It will be observed that only one of the thinkers mentioned in that book, Ibn Khaldun (b. A.D. 1332 at Tunis, d. A.D. 1406 at Cairo), flourished after the fall of the 'Abbásid Caliphate, and he was a unique and isolated phenomenon, "without forerunners and without successors".

The question we have to answer here is, has Persia, which in earlier times produced so large a proportion of the so called "Arabian Philosophers", produced any metaphysician of note since the beginning of the sixteenth century? To answer this question one would need to combine with a competent knowledge of Arabic and Persian a grasp of the history and subject-matter not only of "Arabian" but of Greek Philosophy (and, indeed, of Philosophy in general) to which I cannot lay claim. This, indeed, constitutes the difficulty of judging the value of the scientific literature of Islám. How many of those who admire the Persian quatrains of 'Umar Khayyám can follow M. Woepcke in the appreciation of his Arabic algebraical treatises? A knowledge of Arabic does not suffice to enable us to decide whether ar-Rázi or Ibn Siná (Avicenna) was the greater physician. Much valuable work of this technical character has been done in Germany, by Dr E. Wiedemann of Erlangen (Optics, Physics, etc.), Dr Julius Hirschberg of Berlin (Ophthalmology), Dr Max Simon (Anatomy), and others, but very much remains to determining the value of later

*Difficulty of
Persian philosophical systems*

¹ De Boer, op. laud., p. 208

² So called merely because they wrote in Arabic, at that time exclusively, and even now to a considerable extent, the learned language of Islám, as Latin was of Christendom be done, and few scholars are competent to undertake it. As regards Philosophy in Persia during the last three or four centuries, all one can say is that half a dozen thinkers have established a great reputation amongst their countrymen, but how far this reputation is deserved is a question which has not yet received a satisfactory answer. These thinkers are, in chronological order, as follows: (1) Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín al-'Ámilí (d. 1031/1622); (2) Mír Dámád (d. 1041/1631-2); (3) Mullá Šadrá (d. 1050/1640-1); (4) Mullá Muḥsin-i-Fayḍ (d. after 1091/1680); (5) Mullá 'Abdu'r-Razzáq al-Láhijí; and, in quite modern times, (6) Hájji Mullá Hádí of Sabzawár (d. 1295/1878).

Now Muslim philosophers are of two sorts, those whose philosophy is conditioned by and subordinated to revealed

Religion, and those whose speculations are not so limited. The former are the Mutakallimín or Ahl-i-Kalám, the Schoolmen or Dialecticians¹;

the latter the Hukamá (pl. of Hakím) or Falásifa (pl. of Faylasúf), the Philosophers proper. Of the six persons mentioned above, Mullá Šadrá certainly and Hájji Mullá Hádí possibly belong to the second class, but the four others to the first. These four, however, if less important from the point of view of Philosophy, were in other ways notable men of letters. Biographies of all of them except Mullá Hádí, who is too modern, are given in the Rawḍatu'l-Jannát, or the Qišaṣu'l-'Ulamá, from which, unless otherwise stated, the following particulars are taken.

The first five were more or less contemporary, and are, to a certain extent, interrelated. Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín and Mír Dámád both enjoyed considerable influence and stood in high favour at the court of Sháh 'Abbás the Great, yet there was no jealousy between them, if we may believe the pleasing anecdote about them and the Sháh related by Sir

¹ See de Boer, op. cit., pp. 42-3.

John Malcolm¹ Mullá Sadrá was the pupil of both of them², while Mullá Muhsin i-Fayd and Mullá 'Abdu'r-Razzáq al-Láhiǵ were both his pupils and his sons-in-law.

1 Shaykh Baha'u'd-Dín al-'Ámilí.

Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín Muhammad ibn Husayn ibn 'Abdu's-Samad al-Háarithí al-'Ámilí al-Hamdání al-Jab'í was one of the numerous Shí'a doctors who came to Persia from Jabal 'Ámil in Syria, whence he derived the nisba by which he is commonly

Shaykh i Bahá'
b 953/1546
d 1031/1622

known, though by the Persians he is most often spoken of as "Shaykh-i-Bahá'í". His father Shaykh Husayn, a disciple of Shaykh Zaynu'd-Dín "the Second Martyr" (Shahíd-i-Thání), came to Persia after his master had been put to death by the Turks for his Shí'ite proclivities, bringing with him the young Bahá'u'd-Dín, who applied himself diligently to the study of Theology in all its branches, Mathematics and Medicine. His teachers included, besides his father, Mulla 'Abdu'lláh of Yazd, a pupil of Jalálu'd Dín i-Dawání, the author of the Akhláq i-Jalálí, who was in turn a pupil of the celebrated Sayyid-i-Sharíf-i-Jurjání. In Mathematics he studied with Mullá 'Alí Mudhahhib ("the Gilder") and Mullá Afdal of Qá'in, while in Medicine he was the pupil of 'Ala'u'd-Dín Mahmud³. In due course he attained great celebrity as a theologian and jurist, and became Sadr or Shaykhul-Islam of Isfahán. After a while he was possessed with the desire to make the pilgrimage to Mecca, and on his homeward journey visited, in the guise of a darwísh, Mesopotamia, Egypt, the Hijáz and Palestine, and made the acquaintance of many learned men and eminent doctors and mystics.

¹ Hist of Persia (ed 1815), vol 1, pp 558-9. The anecdote occurs in the Qisasu'l 'Ulamá and in the Rawdātu'l Jannát, p 115.

² Rawdātu'l Jannát, p 331.

³ Some account of him is given in vol 1 of the Ta'rikh i 'Álam árá yí 'Abbásí amongst the notices of eminent men of the reign of Sháh 'Abbás, whence some of the particulars here given concerning Shaykh-i Bahá'í and Mír Dámád are also derived.

Shaykh-i-Bahá'í was born at Ba'labakk in Syria on Muḥarram 17, 953 (March 20, 1546), and died on Shawwál 12, 1031 (August 20, 1622). His principal works are the Jámi'-i-'Abbásí, containing legal decisions (fatáwá); the Zubda; the Miftaḥu'l-Faláh; the Tashríḥu'l-Aflák ("Anatomy of the Heavens"); the Khu-láṣatu'l-Hisáb on Arithmetic; the Kashkúl ("Beggars' Bowl"), a large miscellany of stories and verses, the latter partly in Persian¹; a similar work called the Mikhlát; also a Persian mathnawí poem entitled Nán u Ḥalwá ("Bread and Sweetmeats") describing his adventures during the pilgrimage to Mecca, and another entitled Shír u Shakar ("Milk and Sugar"). Extracts from these poems, as well as from his ghazals, are given in the Majma'u'l-Fuṣaḥá (vol. ii, pp. 8-10).

2. Mír Dámád.

Mír Muḥammad Báqir of Astarábád, with the pen-name of Ishráq, commonly known as Dámád ("son-in-law"), a title properly belonging to his father Sayyid Muḥammad, whose wife was the daughter of the celebrated theologian Shaykh 'Alí ibn 'Abdu'l-'Alí, pursued his earlier studies at Mashhad, but spent the greater part of his life at Iṣfahán, where, as we have seen, he stood in high favour with Sháh 'Abbás the Great, and where he was still living when the author of the Ta'ríkh-i-'Álam-árá-yi-'Abbásí wrote in 1025/1616. He died in 1041/1631-2. Most of his writings were in Arabic, but he wrote poetry in Persian under the takhalluṣ of Ishráq. He seems to have had a taste for Natural History as well as Philosophy, for, according to the Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamá, he made an observation hive of glass in

Mír Dámád
d. 1041/1631-2.

Observes the habits of bees.

¹ These Persian verses are omitted in the Cairo ed. of 1305/1887-8, but are contained in the Ṭihrán lithographed ed. of 1321/1903-4.

سراط الرواه الكرمه عمدا بل الدرايه والمامله الطاهره
 امدادى ناسح محمديه دعواه المبطن الشام للقاء العالمه
 اعلى معالى كاسحاه قال وكل بساء وجره ساء
 الكرمه الى الله العلى بها الكرمه العلى كاد الله عساه
 2 رابع عشر محمديه اولم محمديه وسعده ساء لصله محمديه

نواب الزان واكمه لولا اوله او طاهره

وصله عليه محمد الزان الطاهر

Autograph of Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín i 'Ámilí order to study the habits of bees. It is stated in the same work that after his death his pupil and son-in-law Mullá Sadrá saw him in a dream and said, "My views do not differ from yours yet I am denounced as an infidel and you are not. Why is this?" "Because," replied Mír Dámád's spirit, "I have written on Philosophy in such wise that the theologians are unable to understand my meaning, but only the philosophers, while you write about philosophical questions in such a manner that every dominie and hedge priest who sees your books understands what you mean and dubs you an unbeliever."

Mír Dámád
more cautious than Mullá Sadrá.

3 Mullá Sadrá of Shíráz

Sadru'd Dín Muhammad ibn Ibráhím of Shíráz commonly known as Mullá Sadrá, was the only son of an aged and otherwise childless father. On his father's death he left Shíráz and went to Isfahán, where, as we have seen, he studied with Shaykh-i-Bahá'í and Mír Dámád, from both of whom he held ijásas, or authorizations to expound their works. He subsequently retired to a village near Qum, where he lived a secluded and austere life, engaged in profound meditations on Philosophy. He is said to have made the Pilgrimage to Mecca on foot seven times, and to have died at Basra on his return from his seventh journey in 1050/1640-1, leaving a son named Ibráhím who did not follow his father's doctrine but denounced and controverted it, boasting that "his belief was that of the common people." To these meagre particulars of Mullá Sadrá's life, derived from the Rawdátu'l-Jannát (pp 331-2) and the Qisasu'l-'Ulamá, I can only add that it is clear from some expressions in the Preface to his Asfár that he suffered a good deal at the hands of the orthodox divines, and that Shaykh Ahmad Ahsá'í, the founder of the Shaykhí school, wrote commentaries on two of his works, the Hik-

Mullá Sadrá
d. 1050/1640-1

His influence on Shaykhí and Bábi theology

matu'l-'Arshiyya and the Mashá'ir. Shaykh Muḥammad Iqbál is therefore probably right when he says¹ that "the Philosophy of Ṣadrá is the source of the metaphysics of early Bábfism," and that² "the origin of the philosophy of this wonderful sect must be sought in the Shí'a sect of the Shaykhís, the founder of which, Shaykh Aḥmad, was an enthusiastic student of Mullá Ṣadrá's philosophy, on which he had written several commentaries."

The two most celebrated of Mullá Ṣadrá's works, all of which, so far as I know, are in Arabic, are the Asfár-i-

His chief works. Arba'a, or "Four Books³," and the Shawáhidu'r-

Rubúbiyya, or "Evidences of Divinity." Both have been lithographed at Tīhrán, the first in two folio volumes in 1282/1865, the second, accompanied by the commentary of Hájji Mullá Hádí of Sabzawár, without indication of date or place of publication. Amongst his other works which I have not seen the Rawdātu'l-Jannát (p. 331) enumerates a Commentary on the Uṣúlu'l-Káfi, the Kitábu'l-Hidáya, notes on the metaphysical portion of Avicenna's Shifá, a Commentary on the Hikmatu'l-Ishrāq (presumably that of the celebrated and unfortunate Shaykh Shihábu'd-Dín-Suhrawardí, known, on account of his execution for heresy, as al-Maqtúl), the Kitábu'l-Wáridáti'l-Qalbiyya, the Kasru Aṣnámi'l-Jáhiliyya, or "Breaking of the Idols of Ignorance," several commentaries on various portions of the Qur'án, etc.

Of Mullá Ṣadrá's philosophical doctrines, in spite of their

¹ Development of Metaphysics in Persia (Luzac, London, 1908), p. 175.

² Ibid., p. 187.

³ Gobineau has misunderstood Asfár (which is the plural of Sifr, "a book," not of Safar, "a journey") when he writes (Rel. et Philos., 1866, p. 81), "Il a écrit de plus quatre livres de voyages." In the same way he mistranslates the title of one of the Bábf's earlier works, the Ziyárat-náma ("Book of Visitation") as "un journal de son pèlerinage."

high reputation in Persia, I know of only two brief and necessarily superficial accounts in any European language. The Comte de Gobineau devotes several pages¹ to them, but his information was probably entirely derived orally from his Persian teachers, who were very likely but ill-informed on this matter, since he concludes his notice with the words "la vraie doctrine de Moulla-Sadra, c'est-à-dire d'Avicenne," while the *Raw-dātu'l-Jannât*² explicitly states that he was an Isīrdqī ("Illuminatus" or Platonist) and strongly condemned the Aristoteleans or Peripatetics (Mashshā'ūn), of whom Avicenna was the great representative.

The other shorter but more serious account of Mullá Sadrá's doctrine is given by Shaykh Muhammad Iqbál, formerly a pupil of Dr McTaggart in this University of Cambridge, and now himself a notable and original thinker in India, in his excellent little book entitled *Development of Metaphysics in Persia: a contribution to the History of Muslim Philosophy*³, p 175, but he devotes much more space (pp 175-95) to the modern Hájji Mullá Hádī of Sabzawár, whom he regards as Mullá Sadrá's spiritual successor, and who, unlike his master, condescended, as we shall presently see, to expound his ideas in Persian instead of in Arabic. It may be added

Shaykh Muhammad Iqbál's account.

¹ Les Religions et les Philosophies, etc. (1866), pp. 80-92.

² P. 331. The passage runs in the original:

كان... منقحاً اساساً الاشراق بما لا مزيد عليه و مفتحاً ابواب
الفضيحة على طريقة المشاء و الرواق

³ London, Luzac and Co, 1908 Muhammad Iqbál has set forth his own doctrines (which, as I understand them, are in the main an Oriental adaptation of Nietzsche's philosophy) in a short Persian math-nawī poem entitled Asrār-i-Khudī, lithographed at the University Press, Lahore, and translated into English with an Introduction and Notes by my friend and colleague Dr R. A. Nicholson (The Secrets of the Self, London, Macmillan & Co, 1920) that Mullá Şadrá speaks with great respect of that eminent Maghribí Shaykh Muḥyi'd-Dín ibnu'l-'Arabí, whose influence, non-Persian though he was, was probably greater than that of any other thinker on the development of the extremer forms of Persian philosophical-mystical speculation.

Influence of Shaykh Muḥyi'd-
Dín ibnu'l-
'Arabí.

4. Mullá Muḥsin-i-Fayḍ of Káshán.

Muḥammad ibn Murtaḍà of Káshán, commonly called Muḥsin with the poetical pen-name of Fayḍ, was a native of Káshán, and, as already said, the favourite pupil and son-in-law of Mullá Şadrá. In the Rawḍātu'l-Jannát (pp. 542-9) and the Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamá much fuller notices of him are given than of his master, and, since he was not only a theologian and a philosopher but likewise a poet of some note, he is also mentioned in the Riyādu'l-'Arifín (pp. 225-6) and the Majma'u'l-Fuṣahá (ii, 25-6). His literary activity was enormous: according to the Qīṣaṣu'l-'Ulamá he wrote nearly two hundred books and treatises, and was surpassed in productivity by hardly any of his contemporaries or predecessors except Mullá Muḥammad Báqir-i-Majlisí. Sixty-nine of these works, of which the last, entitled *Sharḥu's-Şadr*¹, is autobiographical, are enumerated in the Qīṣaṣ, but fuller details of them are given in the Rawḍát (pp. 545-6), where the dates of composition (which range between 1029/1620 and 1090/1680) are in most cases recorded. His age at this latter date, which is also notified as the year of his death, is stated as eighty-four², so that he must have been born about 1006/1597-8. Of one of his works, the Mafátiḥu'sh-Sharáyí, I possess

Mullá Muḥsin-i-
Fayḍ, d. about 1091/1680.

His prodigious literary activity.

¹ It was written in 1065/1654-5. See Rawḍātu'l-Jannát, p. 546. It is wrongly entitled Sharḥ-i-Şuwar in the Indian lithograph of the Qīṣaṣ.

² Rawḍātu'l-Jannát, pp. 542 and 549.

الشرطية الواقع ونحو المأزاة الكافية فيه ثبوت محاليتها بما هي مأزاة وفتنة واصل لئلا يتركها
 لا يجرم بالمأزاة المحبلة بين الأمرين أريد به أنه بعد الحاح المحل لا لا يجرم بالمأزاة منه وبين الأمرين
 وحده فيها نسبة التبرؤ ووجه ما بين محال وبين الأمرين غيرهما قطعاً بما على قسم من الحكم بالمأزاة
 محله الحكم بأنه لو وجد كذا الوجه كذا أو ما يقتضي وجود المحل كذا أن يبدل الاوضاع أو ما يقتضي
 سداً للحكم منه لا سيما في عالم الواقع وظواهره وآثاره من أحد المحال لغيره لا كما كان الأمر على
 حتى يظهر المحال من جهة الأمر لا الزمان على نفس وأما على الغير فلا فرق بينهما كما يظهر على بطلان احتمال
 اختلف فحيد لا يبرأ لا تعرف بصدق الشرطية المستعملة فيها والحكم باستخدام مقدماتها تاليها بما لا
 المذكور ولا مجال للتكادف وسعها لا احتمال المذكور أنفاً وهو لا يجتمع إلا بعد المذكور ويكون من الاعتراف بالحق
 وبعد الاعتراف بصدق الشرطية ضمن الهيئات المحال في الواقع فنعلم المقدم الصالح في الواقع ونظير
 الاخذ المذكور كما كان على نفس الأمر وأما على الغير وشيئاً من الشرطية لا يجرم للعقل بها في الواقع
 على القول المذكور أي العقل لا يكتفي بجرم باستخدام المحال شرراً غير شره من جهة وقوعه في شره
 أصلاً وهو لا يخطأه ولا ريب في ثبوت كونها من الصواب كسبة العبد من جهة حسن جفره

فمأزاة

what appears to be an autograph copy, made in 1042/1632-3, now bearing the class mark C. 18.

When Mullá Muhsin wished to leave his home in Káshán and go to Shíráz to study under the celebrated theologian Sayyid Májid of Bahrayn, his father opposed this project, and it was finally agreed to take an augury (tafa'ul) from the Qur'án, and from the poems ascribed to the first Imám 'Alí ibn Abí Talib. The former yielded the verse (ix, 123) "if a part of every band of them go not forth, it is that they may diligently instruct themselves in Religion", the latter the following lines rendered particularly apposite by the words suhbatu Majidi, "the society of some noble one," which might in this case be taken as referring particularly to the above-mentioned Sayyid Májid

His travels in search of knowledge

An apposite
augury

تَعَرَّبَ عَنْ الْأَوْطَانِ فِي طَلَبِ الْعُلَى،

و سَافَرَ فِي الْأَسْغَارِ حِمْسَ فَوَائِدْ،

تَفَرَّحَ هِمًّا وَ آكْتَسَابَ مَعِيشَةٍ،

و عِلْمًا وَ آدَابًا وَ صَحَّةً مَاحِدْ،

فَأِنْ قِيلَ فِي الْأَسْغَارِ ذَلٌّ وَ مُحَّةٌ،

و قَطَعَ الْعِيَادِي وَ ارْتَكَبَ الشَّدَائِدْ،

مَمُوتَ الْعَتَى حَيْرٌ لَهُ مِنْ قِيَامِهِ،

نَدَارَ هَوَايَ بَيْنَ دَلٍّ وَ حَاسِدْ،

"Go abroad from the home lands in search of eminence, and travel, for in travel are five advantages

The dissipation of anxiety, the acquisition of a livelihood, knowledge, culture, and the society of some noble one (májid)

And if it be said, 'In travels are humiliation and trouble, the traversing of deserts and the encountering of hardships,'

Yet the death of a brave man is better for him than his continuance in the mansion of abasement, between humiliation and an envious rival "

After these clear indications, Mullá Muḥsin's father no longer opposed his desire to go to Shīrāz, where he pursued his studies not only with the aforesaid Sayyid Mājīd, but also with Mullá Ṣadrā. It is difficult to accept the statement of the Qīṣaṣ that this took place in 1065/1654-5, for this would make him nearly sixty years of age before he began his serious studies with Mullá Ṣadrā or married his daughter.

Mullá Muḥsin is described in the Qīṣaṣ as a "pure Akhbārī" (Akhhārt-jī-Šīrf), a Ṣūfī, and an admirer of Shaykh Muḥyi'd-Dīn ibn al-'Arabī. Shaykh Aḥmad Aḥsā'ī, who, as we have seen¹, wrote commentaries on two of the books of his master Mullá Ṣadrā, detested him, and used to call him

Antagonism between Shaykh
Aḥmad Aḥsā'ī
and Mullá Muḥsin.

Muṣṭ ("the ill-doer") instead of Muḥsin ("the well-doer"), and to speak of the great Shaykh as Mumtū' d-Dīn ("the Slayer of Religion") instead of Muḥyi' d-Dīn ("the Quickener of Religion"). According to an absurd story in the Qīṣaṣ, Mullá Muḥsin was chosen by Shāh 'Abbās to

Mullá Muḥsin triumphs over a Christian missionary.

confute a Christian missionary sent by the "King of the Franks" to convert the Persians. The sign offered by this missionary was that he would specify any article held in the closed hand of his opponent². Mullá Muḥsin chose a rosary (tasbīḥ) made of clay taken from the tomb of the Imām Ḥusayn. The Christian hesitated to speak, but, when pressed, said, "It is not that I cannot say, but, according to the rule I observe, I see that in thy hand is a portion of the earth of Paradise, and I am wondering how this can have come into thy possession." "Thou speakest truly," replied Mullá Muḥsin, and then informed him what he held, and bade him abandon his own faith and accept Islām, which, according to the narrator, he was constrained to do. Though extremely pious in most respects, Mullá Muhsin scandalized the orthodox by his approval and sanction of singing. His best-known Persian compilation is probably the Abvdu'l-Jannán ('Gates of Paradise') composed in 1055/1645, on prayer and its necessity¹, but few of his numerous writings have been published or are now read, and at the present day, at any rate, his name is more familiar than his works.

¹ Pp. 429-30 supra.

² This is called khaby, and thought-reading ḍamīr. See my translation of the Chāhar Maqāla, p. 64 and n. 2 ad calc., and pp. 130-1.

5. Mullá 'Abdu'r-Razzag-i-Lahijí

The subject of this notice resembled Mullá Muhsin in being a pupil and son-in law of Mullá Sadrá and a poet, who wrote under the pen-name of Fayyád, but his writings, though much fewer in number, are more read at the present day. The best known are, perhaps the philosophical treatise in Persian entitled Gawhar-i-Muráá ('the Pearl of Desire'), and the Sar mayá-i-Ímán ('Substance of Faith'), also in Persian, both of which have been lithographed. The notices of him in the Rawdátu'l-Jannát (pp 352-3) and the Qisasu l-'Ulamá are short and unsatisfactory. The latter grudgingly admits that his writings were fairly orthodox, but evidently doubts how far they express his real convictions and how far they were designed from prudential motives to disguise them, thus bearing out to some extent the opinion expressed by Gobineau².

I have been obliged to omit any further notice than that already given³ of the somewhat elusive figure of Mír Abu'l-Qásim i-Findariskí, mentioned by Gobineau⁴ as one of the three teachers of Mullá Sadrá, because, apart from the brief notices of him

Mullá Abdur
Razzáq i Lahijí

His Gawhar-i-Muráá

Mír Abu'l
Qásim i Findariskí

¹ Not to be confounded with a later homonymous work on Ethics

² Op laud, pp 91-2

³ See pp 257-8 and 408 supra

⁴ Op laud, p 82

contained in the *Riyādu'l-'Arifin*¹ and the Majma'ul-Fuṣṣahā, in both of which the same poem is cited, and the passing reference in the *Dabistān*² to his association with the disciples of Kaywān and adoption of sun-worship, I have been unable to discover any particulars about his life or doctrines. He appears to have been more of a ṣāḥib than a philosopher, and probably felt ill at ease in the atmosphere of Shī'a orthodoxy which prevailed at Iṣfahān, and hence felt impelled to undertake the journey to India. He must, however, have subsequently returned to Persia if the statement in the Riyādu'l-'Arifin that his tomb is well known in Iṣfahān be correct.

Gobineau (op. laud., pp. 91-110) enumerates a number of philosophers who succeeded Mullā Ṣadrā down to the time of his own sojourn in Persia, but most of them have little importance or originality, and we need only mention one more, who was still living when Gobineau wrote, and whom he describes as "personnage absolument incomparable."

6. Ḥājji Mullā Hādī of Sabzawār.

It is not, however, necessary to say much about this celebrated modern thinker, since his philosophical ideas are somewhat fully discussed by Shaykh Muḥammad Iqbāl at the end of his *Development of Metaphysics in Persia*³, while I obtained from one of his pupils with whom I studied in Tih-rān during the winter of 1887-8 an authentic account of his life, of which I published an English translation in my *Year amongst the Persians*⁴. According to this account, partly derived from one of his sons, Ḥājji Mullā Hādī the son of Ḥājji Mahdī was born in 1212/1797-8, studied first in his native town of Sabzawār, then at Mashhad, then at Iṣfahān

Ḥājji Mullā
Hādī of Sabzawār,
b. 1212/1797-8,
d. 1295/1878.

¹ Pp. 165-6.

² Shea and Troyer's translation (London, 1843), vol. i, pp. 140-1.

³ Pp. 175-95.

⁴ Pp. 131-4.

with Mullá 'Alí Nurí Having made the pilgrimage to Mecca, he visited Kirmán, where he married a wife, and then returned to Sabzawár, where the remainder of his life was chiefly spent until his death in 1295/1878 His best-known works, written in Persian, are the Asráru'l Hikam ("Secrets of Philosophy") and a commentary on difficult words and passages in the Mathnawí, in Arabic he has a versified treatise (Manzuma) on Logic, another on Philosophy, commentaries on the Morning Prayer and the Jawshan-i-Kabír, and numerous notes on the Shawáhidu r-Rububiyya and other works of Mullá Sadrá He also wrote poetry under the pen name of Asrár, and a notice of him is given in the Riyádu'l-'Arifín (pp 241-2), where he is spoken of as still living and in the sixty third year of his age in 1278/1861-2, the date of composition Most of his works have been published in Persia in lithographed editions

3 THE SCIENCES—MATHEMATICAL, NATURAL AND (OCCULT)

As stated above¹, Mathematics (Riyádiyyát) "the Disciplinary" and Tabi'íyyát the Natural Sciences, in conjunction with Metaphysics (Ma'wá'at or Ma'ba'dát Tabi'at) constitute the subject matter of the theoretical or speculative branch of Philosophy, of which, therefore, they form a part It is probable that to this manner of regarding them is partly due the unfortunate tendency noticeable in most Muslim thinkers to take an a priori view of all natural phenomena instead of submitting them to direct critical observation The so called 'Arabian,' i.e. Islamic, Science was in the main inherited from the Greeks, its Golden Age was the first century of the 'Abbásid Caliphate (A D 750-

Evolution of Arabian Science and its connection with
Philosophy

¹ Pp. 423-4 supra

850), when so much trouble and expense was incurred by the Caliphs, especially al-Manşúr, Hárúnu'r-Rashíd and al-Ma'mún, to procure good and faithful Arabic translations of the great Greek philosophers, naturalists and physicians; and the great service it rendered to mankind was to carry on the Greek tradition of learning through the Dark Ages of Europe down to the Renaissance.

So much is generally admitted, but there remains the more difficult and still unsolved question whether the Arabs

What, if anything, did the Arabs add to what they inherited from the Greeks?

were mere transmitters of Greek learning, or whether they modified or added to it, and, in this case, whether these modifications or additions were or were not improvements on the original. This question I have endeavoured to answer in the case of medical science in my *Arabian Medicine*¹, but I was greatly hampered by insufficient acquaintance with the original Greek sources. For such investigation, whether in the Medicine, Mathematics, Physics, Astronomy or Chemistry of the Muslims, three qualifications not often combined are required in the investigator, to wit, knowledge of the science or art in question, knowledge of Arabic (and, for later writers, of Persian and even Turkish), and knowledge of Greek. In the case of the "Arabian" (i.e. Muslim) physicians the conclusion at which Eminence of Rhazes (ar-Rází) as an observer.

I arrived (already reached by Dr Max Neuburger in his monumental *Geschichte der Medizin*²) was that Rhazes (Abú Bakr Muḥammad ibn Zakariyyá ar-Rází, i.e. a native of Ray in Persia) was, as a physician, far superior to the more celebrated and popular Avicenna (Ibn Síná), and was, indeed, probably the greatest clinical observer who ever existed amongst the Muslims. The notes of actual cases which came under his observation, as recorded in parts of his great "Continens"

¹ Pp. viii + 138, Cambridge University Press, 1921.

² Vol. ii, Part i, pp. 168 et seqq.

(al-Hdwt), have an actual and not merely a historical or literary value; and even from his methods of treatment it is possible that here and there a hint might be obtained. Avicenna was more logical, more systematic, and more philosophical, but he lacked the Hippocratic insight possessed by his great predecessor.

In my Arabian Medicine I sketched the history of the art amongst the Muslims from its beginnings in the eighth century of our era down to the twelfth, but made no attempt to follow it down to the period which we are now considering. The Mongol Invasion of the thirteenth century, as I have repeatedly and emphatically stated, dealt a death-blow to Muslim learning from which it has not yet recovered. Medical and other quasi-scientific books continued, of course, to be written, but it is doubtful if they ever approached the level attained under the early 'Abbásid Caliphs and maintained until the eleventh, and, to some extent, until the thirteenth century of our era. That they added anything which was both new and true is in the highest degree improbable, though I cannot claim to have carefully investigated the matter. A long list of these books is given by Dr Adolf Fonahn in his most useful work entitled *Zur Quellenkunde der Persischen Medizin*¹, which has pointed the way for future investigators. Of these later works the most celebrated is probably the Tuhfatu'l-Mu'minin, compiled for Sháh Sulaymán the Şafawí by Muḥammad Mú'mín-í-Ḥusaynî in A.D. 1669. It deals chiefly with Materia Medica, and there are numerous editions and manuscripts, besides translations into Turkish and Arabic².

What has been said about Medicine holds good also of Zoology, Botany, Chemistry, etc., and in a lesser degree of Mathematics, Astronomy and Mineralogy. Fine work has been done in some of these subjects by experts who also possessed an adequate knowledge of Arabic.

¹ Leipzig, 1910, pp. v+152.

² See Fonahn, op. laud, pp. 89-91. See also B.M.P.C., pp. 476-7.

How far did the Muslim scientists observe for themselves?

I will only instance Woepecke in Algebra, Wiedemann in Mechanics, Hirschberg in Ophthalmology, and, amongst younger men, Holm-yard in Chemistry. All these, I think, have come to the conclusion that the standard attained by the best Muslim investigators surpassed rather than fell short of what is generally supposed. Yet it is often difficult to assure oneself that direct observation, which is the foundation of true science, has played its proper part in ascertaining the phenomena recorded. Dr Badhlu'r-Rahmán, now Professor of Arabic in the Oriental College at Lahore, when he was a Research Student in this University, took as the instincts in ants.

Al-Jáḥiẓ on

subject of his studies the works of al-Jáḥiẓ, who, on the strength of his great book on animals, the Kitābu'l-Hayawán, is often regarded as one of the leading naturalists of the Arabs¹. At my request this able and industrious young scholar devoted especial attention to the question whether the writings of this author afforded any proof that he had himself observed the habits of any of the animals about which he wrote. A passage was ultimately found which seemed conclusive. In speaking of instinct al-Jáḥiẓ says that when the ant stores corn for food it mutilates each grain in such a way as to prevent it from germinating. After numerous fruitless enquiries as to the truth of this statement, I finally ascertained from Mr Horace Donisthorpe, one of the chief British authorities on ants, that it was correct, and I began to hope that here at last was proof that this old Muslim scholar had himself observed a fact of Natural History apparently unknown to many modern Zoologists. Unhappily I subsequently discovered the same statement in Pliny, and I am afraid it is much more likely that it reached al-Jāhīz by tradition rather than by direct observation.

¹ E.g. by Fr. Wüstenfeld in his Geschichte der Arabischen Aerzte und Naturforscher (Göttingen, 1840), pp. 25-6 (No. 65). Carl Brockelmann's view is correct (Gesch. d. Arab. Litt., i, p. 152), but his criticism of Dr L. Leclerc's remarks on the subject (Hist. de la Médecine Arabe, i, p. 314) hardly appears justified.

In each of the "Arabian" sciences the same question arises and demands an answer which only one thoroughly versed in the scientific literature of the ancients can give. Does Ibnu'l-Baytār's great Arabic work on medicinal plants, for example, contain any information not to be found in Dioscorides? Be the answer what it may, it is doubtful

Modern European Science
in Persia.

whether the later Muslim writers on these various sciences ever surpassed, or even equalled, their predecessors. In quite recent times, especially since the foundation of the Dāru'l-Funūn, or Polytechnic College, at Tih-rān early in the reign of Nāsiru'd-Dīn Shāh, numerous Persian translations or adaptations of European scientific works have been made, but these are entirely exotic, and can hardly claim to be noticed in a work on Persian Literature. A number of them are mentioned in my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, pp 154-66, under the heading "Modernising Influences in the Persian Press other than Magazines and Journals." But of those Persians who since the middle of the nineteenth century have successfully graduated in the European schools of science, I know of none who has hitherto made a reputation for original research.

In conclusion a few words must be said about the Occult Sciences, excluding Astrology and Alchemy, which are in the East hardly to be separated from Astronomy and Chemistry. Alchemy is called in Arabic and Persian Kīmīya, and the names of four other Occult Sciences, dealing with Talismans, Necromancy, and the like, are formed on the same model Līmīya, Hīmīyā, Sīmīya, and Rīmīyā, the initial letters being derived from the words Kulluhu Sirr (كله سر), "All of it is a Mystery." The book entitled Asrār-i-Qāsimī ("Secrets of Qāsim")¹ in Persian, and the Shamsu'l-Ma'ārif ("Sun of Knowledges")² of the celebrated Shaykh al-Būnī in Arabic, may be regarded as typical of this class of literature, but to the uninitiated they make but arid and unprofitable reading. Ibn Khaldūn is the only Muslim writer I know of who has sought to discover a philosophical and rational basis for these so-called sciences, and his ideas have been collated with the theories of modern Psychical Research in a most masterly manner by Professor Duncan Black Macdonald in his interesting and suggestive book entitled *The Religious Attitude and Life in Islam*³. I have always kept an open mind as to the reality of the powers claimed by Occultists, and, when opportunity offered, have always gone out of my way to investigate such manifestations. Disappointment has invariably been my portion, save in two cases: a "magician" whom I met in Kirmān in the summer of 1888, who, amidst much vain boasting, did accomplish one feat which baffled my comprehension⁴; and the late Shaykh Ḥabīb Aḥmad, author of an astonishing work in English entitled *The Mysteries of Sound and Number*⁵, who, if nothing more, was an amazingly skilful thought-reader.

The Occult Sciences

4. HISTORY—GENERAL, SPECIAL AND LOCAL.

It must be admitted, with whatever unwillingness and regret, that in the art of historical compilation the Persians

¹ Lithographed at Bombay in 1885 and 1894.

² I possess the lithographed edition of 1318/1900, but others have appeared in India and Egypt.

³ University of Chicago Press, 1909.

⁴ See my Year amongst the Persians, pp. 453-5.

⁵ London, Nichols & Co., 1903; pp. xiv + 211.

fall far short of the Arabs, who, indeed, excel in this branch of literature. The earlier Muslim annalists like Tabarí, with their verbatim narratives by eye-witnesses of the events recorded transmitted orally through carefully scrutinized chains of traditionists, are not only singularly graphic but furnish us, even

Superiority of the Arabs to the Persians
as historians.

at this distance of time, with materials for history of which, thanks to these isnáds, it is still possible to estimate the authenticity, even if our judgement as to the strength of the respective links in the chain does not always agree with that of Muslim critics. The later Arab historians selected, condensed, and discarded these somewhat wearisome if valuable isnáds, but their narrative, as a rule, continues to be crisp, concise, graphic and convincing. The best of the earlier Persian historians, down to the thirteenth century, though lacking the charm of the Arabian chroniclers, are meritorious and trustworthy. The bad taste of their Tartar and Turkish rulers and patrons gradually brought about a deterioration both of style and substance,

Deplorable
influence of the Ta'rikh-i Wajih

very noticeable between Juwaynî's Ta'rikh-i-Jahân-gushây (completed about 658/1260) and its continuation, the Ta'rikh-i-Wassâf (completed in 712/1312), which, as already observed¹, exercised an enduring evil influence on subsequent historians in Persia. Of later Persian histories I have met with few equal to a history of the Caliphate by Hindúsháh ibn Sanjar ibn 'Abdu'lláh aş-Sáhibí al-Kírání, composed in

A Persian version of the Kitábul-
Fakhri

724/1324 for Nusratu'd-Dín Ahmad the Atábak of Luristán, and entitled Tajdribu's-Salaf ("Experiences of Yore"). This, however, is entirely and avowedly based on the delightful

Arabic history of Şafíyyu'd-Dín Muḥammad ibn 'Alí al-'Alawí aş-Ṭíqtaql, composed in 701/1302, commonly known as the *Kitābu'l-Fakhrī*¹, but here entitled Munyatū'l-Fudalā fi Tawārīkhi'l-Khulafā wa'l-Wuzarā ("the Desire of Scholars on the History of the Caliphs and their Ministers"). That it never appealed to the debased taste which we are here deploring is sufficiently shown by the fact that not only has it never been published, but, so far as I know, it is represented only by my manuscript, G. 3 (copied in 1286/1870), and one other (dated 1304/1886-7) in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris².

¹ P. 413 supra.

It would be a wearisome and unprofitable task to enumerate the many Persian historical works composed during the last four centuries. Of the histories of special periods the most important have been not only described but freely quoted in the first part of this volume, notably the Ṣafwatū's-Ṣafā for the life of Shaykh Ṣafīyyu'd-Dīn from whom the Ṣafawī kings were descended; the monograph on Shāh Isma'īl described by Sir E. Denison Ross in the J.R.A.S. for 1896, pp. 264-83; the Aḥsanu't-Tawārīkh, completed in 985/1577-8 by Ḥasan-i-Rúmlú; and the Ta'rikh-i-'Ālam-ārā-yi-'Abbāsī of Iskandar Munshi, composed in 1025/1616. There are other monographs on the later Ṣafawī period, such as the Fawā'id-i-Ṣafawīyya (1211/1796-7) and the Tadhkira-i-Āl-i-Dāwūd (1218/1803-4), which I would fain have consulted had they been accessible to me. For the post-Ṣafawī period we have several excellent European accounts which render us less dependent on the native historians, some of whose works moreover (e.g. the Ta'rikh-

¹ Originally edited by Ahlwardt from the Paris MS. 895 (now 2441) and published at Gotha in 1860. A revised text was published by H. Derenbourg at Paris in 1895, and there are at least two cheap and good Egyptian editions. A French translation by Emil Amar has been published by the Société des Études Marocaines (Paris, 1910).

² See Blochet's Cat. des Mscr. Persans etc. (Paris, 1905), vol. i, p. 251 (Schefer 237 = Suppl. Pers. 1552).

*i-Zandiyya*¹ and the *Mujmalu't-Ta'rikh-i-Ba'd-Nadiriyya*²) have been published in Europe, while others, such as the Durra-i-Nadiri of Mirzá Mahdí Khán of Astarábad, are easily accessible in Oriental lithographed editions. These monographs contain valuable material and are indispensable to the student of this period, but they are generally badly arranged and dully written, and further marred by the florid and verbose style of which we have just been complaining.

For the general histories of our present period, from Khwándamír's Habtu's-Siyar (929/1523) at the beginning to Ridá-qulí Khán's Supplement to the Rawdatu's-Safá and Lisánu'l-Mulk's Ndsikhu't-Tawárikh at the end, with the very rare Khuld-i-Bartn (1071/1660-1) in the middle,

Poor quality of most of the Persian general histories

there is even less to be said, since, though for events contemporary with their authors they have the same value as the monographs just mentioned, for the earlier periods they are not even good or judicious abstracts of the carelessly selected authorities from whom they derive their information. They are, moreover, histories not of the Persian people but of the kings, princes and nobles who tyrannized over them and contended with one another for the spoils; wearisome records of bloodshed, violence and rapine from which it is hard to derive any general concepts of value³. Only by diligent and patient study can we extract from them facts capable of throwing any real light on the religious, political and social problems which a historian like Ibn Khaldún would have handled in so masterly a manner.

There are, however, hopeful signs of improvement in

¹ Ed. Ernst Beer, Leyden, 1888.

² Ed. Oskar Mann, Leyden, 1891.

³ Compare Mr Vincent Smith's judicious remarks on this subject in his monograph on Akbar, pp. 386-7.

recent times. Poor Mírzá Jání of Káshán, though a merchant without much literary training, wrote his *Nuqtatu'l-Káf*¹ on the history of the Bábí sect, of which in 1852 he was one of the proto-martyrs, with violence and passion indeed, but with knowledge, in plain and simple language without that florid rhetoric which we find so intolerable; while the unfinished "History of the Awakening of the Persians" (Ta'rikh-i-Bidárt-yi-Írániyán) of the Náẓimu'l-Islám of Kirmán², with its ample documentation and endeavour to estimate personal characteristics and influence on political events, seems to me to stand on an altogether higher level than any preceding Persian historical work composed during the last six or seven centuries.

Signs of improvement in modern times.

5. BIOGRAPHY, AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

Muslim writers have always evinced a great partiality for biography, which may be general, dealing with the lives of eminent men of all sorts, like Ibn Khallikán's Wafayátu'l-A'yán ("Obituaries of Notable Men") and the Rawḍātu'l-Jannát, of which I have made such extensive use in the latter part of this volume, the former composed in the thirteenth, the latter in the late nineteenth century, and both in Arabic; and the ambitious but unfinished modern Persian Náma-i-Dánish-warán ("Book of Learned Men") compiled by a committee

Biography popular with the Muslims.

¹ Published in 1910 as vol. xv of the "E. J. W. Gibb Memorial" Series.

² This work was published in lithographed fasciculi, and, so far as it has reached me, comprises the Introduction (Muqaddama) of 273 pp.; vol. i, completed on the 20th of Dhu'l-Qa'da, 1328 (Nov. 23, 1910), which carries the narrative down to what is called the Hijrat-i-Şughrá (December, 1905), and comprises 256 pp.; and vol. ii, completed at the end of Şafar, 1330 (Feb. 18, 1912), comprising 240 pp. Whether there is any likelihood of the work being completed I do not know.

of some half a dozen scholars, of which the first volume was lithographed at Tīhrān in 1296/1879 and the second in 1312/1904-5¹. More often such works treat of the biographies of some particular class of men, such as Ministers, Physicians, Poets or Theologians, or they follow a geographical or a chronological arrangement, merging on the one hand into geography and on the other into history Khwāndamīr's Dastur-i'l Wuzarā ('Models for Ministers')², composed, according to the chronogram implicit in the title, in 915/1509-10, affords us a Persian example of the first type falling at the beginning of the period reviewed in this volume For the Physicians and Philosophers no Persian work approaches the level of al Qiftī's Ta'rikhu'l Hukamā' and Ibn Abī Usaybi'a's Uyūnu'l-Anbā fī Ṭabaqātī'l Aṭibbā', both composed in the thirteenth century of our era, a period so rich in Arabic biographical works Biographies of poets, on the other hand, abound in Persian, especially in the later period, since Shāh Isma'īl's son Sām Mīrzā set the fashion with his Tuhfa ʿi-Sāmī (a continuation of Dawlatshāh's 'Memoirs of the Poets') compiled in 957/1550 Eminent representatives of the Shī'a sect, both Arabs and Persians of every category from kings to poets, form the subject-matter of the very useful Majālisul Mu'minin ('Assemblies of Believers'), the author of which, Sayyid Nuru'llāh of Shushtar, was flogged to death in 1019/1610-11 by order of Jahāngīr at the instigation of the Sunnīs, and who is therefore called by his fellow believers the "Third Martyr" (Shahīd ʿi Thāliṭh)³

¹ See my Press and Poetry in Modern Persia, pp 165-6

² Compare Rieu (B M P C), p 335 I have a good modern MS professedly collated with the original in 1268/1851-2, now marked J 11

³ Edited by Professor Julius Lippert (Leipzig, 1903)

⁴ Printed in Cairo in two volumes in 1299/1882

⁵ See Rieu (B M P C), pp 337-8

Of the older geographico-biographical works the Āthārū'l-Bilād ("Monuments of the Lands") of Zakariyyā ibn Muḥammad ibn Maḥmūd al-Qazwīnī¹, and the Persian Haft Iqlīm ("Seven Climes"), composed in 1028/1619 by Amīn Aḥmad-i-Rāzī, are typical specimens². Monographs on different provinces or cities of Persia are also fairly common, and generally include notices of the more eminent natives of the region discussed. Of modern biographical works produced in Persia I have made extensive use, especially in the chapter on the Theologians, of the Arabic Rawḍātu'l-Jannāt fī Aḥwālī'l-Jannāt.

'Ulamā wa's-Sādāt ("Gardens of Paradise, on the circumstances of Men of Learning and Leading"). This comprehensive work, which deserves to be better known, contains some 742 notices of eminent Muslim scholars, saints and poets, ancient and modern, and was compiled by Muḥammad Bāqir ibn Ḥājji Amīr Zaynu'l-'Ābidīn al-Mūsawī of Khwānsār in the latter half of the nineteenth century. A good lithographed edition (except that, as usual, it has no Index) appeared at Tīhrān in 1306/1888. The notices are arranged in alphabetical order, not very strictly observed, under personal names, such as Aḥmad, 'Alī, Muḥammad, etc., which, of course, are seldom the names by which those who bear them are commonly known. Thus the Muḥammads, who fill the greater part of the fourth and last volume and comprise a hundred and forty-three articles, include the great Shī'a theologians generally referred to as al-Kulaynī, Ibn Bābawayhi and

¹ Edited in the original Arabic by F. Wüstenfeld (Göttingen, 1848), and followed in the succeeding year by the same author's "Wonders of Creation" ('Ajā'ibu'l-Makhlūqāt).

² In the Haft Iqlīm the biographical element preponderates. Unfortunately it remains unpublished, though a critical edition was begun by Mawlawī 'Abdu'l-Muqtadir, of which, so far as I know, only the first fasciculus (pp. x+114) has been printed at Calcutta in 1918.

Shaykh-i-Musid; the historians Tabarí and Shahristání; the scientists Rází and Bírúní; the thinkers Fárábí, Ghazálí and Muhyí'd-Dín ibnu'l-'Arabí; and the Persian poets Saná'í, Farídu'd-Dín 'Attár and Jalálu'd-Dín Rúmí, nor is any subordinate plan, chronological or other, discernible within these sections, so that the owner of the book who wishes to consult it regularly is compelled to make his own Index or Table of Contents.

The other book which I have constantly consulted as to the lives of the theologians is the Persian Qisaṣu'l-'Ulamá ("Stories of the Doctors") of Muhammad ibn Sulaymán of Tanakábun, who wrote it in 1290/1873¹. It contains about a hundred and fifty biographies of Shí'a divines, and is more readable, if less accurate, than the work previously mentioned. Another useful Persian book on the same subject is the Nujūmu's-Samá ("Stars of Heaven") composed by Mírzá Muhammad 'Alí in 1286/1869-70², dealing with the Shí'a doctors of the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth centuries of the hijra (seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth of the Christian era). There exist also two special monographs in Arabic on the Shí'a divines of Bahrayn and Jabal 'Ámil, the Lí'lí'atu'l-Bahrayn ("Pearl of Bahrayn") of Shaykh Yúsuf ibn Ahmad al-Bahrání, who flourished in the eighteenth century; and the Amalu'l-'Amil fi 'Ulamá'i Jabal 'Ámil ("the Hoper's Hope, on the Doctors of Mount 'Ámil"), by Muhammad ibn Hasan ibn 'Alí... al-Hurr al-'Ámilí, who belongs to the previous century.

Mention must also be made of another modern biographical work of a somewhat special character, which, though the work of a Persian, is written in Turkish. This is the Khatt u Khattátán ("Writing and Writers")¹, a history of the art of Calligraphy and its votaries by the learned Mírzá Ḥabíb of Iṣfahán, who spent the latter period of his life in Constantinople, where he was a member of the Anjuman-i-Ma'árif, or Turkish Academy.

¹ I possess two lithographed editions, one, the second Tihrán edition, published in 1304/1886; the other, apparently at Lucknow, in 1306/1888-9

² Lithographed at Lucknow in 1303/1885-6

These are but a selection of the more useful or less known biographical works, of which many more will be found described in Rieu's, Ethé's, and other catalogues of Persian manuscripts. Of autobiographies the most notable is that of Shaykh 'Alí Ḥazín, which contains one of the few first-hand Persian accounts of the Afghán Invasion and fall of Iṣfahán in A.D. 1722. Travels are a special form of autobiography, in which His late Majesty Náṣiru'd-Dín Sháh indulged freely.

An account of the mission of Farrukh Khán Amínu'l-Mulk to London and Paris at the close of the Anglo-Persian War in 1857-8 was written by one of his staff, Mírzá Ḥusayn ibn 'Abdu'lláh, but has never been published². It concludes with a description of the French Departments of State and Public Institutions. More valuable and varied in its contents is the Bustánu's-Siyáhat ("Garden of Travel") of Hajji Zaynu'l-'Ábidín of Shírwán³, who wrote it in 1247/1831-2. In a brief autobiography under the heading Shamákhí he tells us that he was born in mid-

¹ A very nicely printed edition of this book was published at Constantinople in 1305/1887-8.

² My MS. K. 7, copied in 1276/1860 for Prince Bahman Mírzá Bahá'u'd-Dawla, came to me amongst the Schindler MSS. Concerning Farrukh Khán's mission, see R. G. Watson's History of Persia 1800-1858, pp. 456 et seqq.

³ Lithographed at Tíhrán in 1310/1892-3. See Rieu (B.M.P.S.), pp. 99-101, Nos. 139 and 140, and B. Dorn in Mélanges et Extraits, vol. iii, pp. 50-59.

Sha'bán, 1194 (August 15, 1780), and was taken to Karbalá, where he thenceforth made his home, when only five years old. He travelled extensively in 'Iráq, Gílán, the Caucasus, Ádharbáyján, Khurásán, Afghánistán, India, Kashmír, Badakhshán, Turkistán, Transoxiana, the Persian Gulf, Yaman, the Híjáz, Egypt, Syria, Turkey in Asia and Armenia, and in Persia also visited Tíhrán, Hamadán, Isfahán, Shíráz and Kirmán. He was a Shí'ite and a darwísh of the Order of Sháh Ni'matu'lláh, and in this double capacity made the acquaintance and enjoyed the friendship of many eminent doctors ('ulamá) and "gnostics" ('urafá). The author, a man of intelligence and a keen observer, does not give a continuous narrative of his travels, but arranges his materials under the following heads:

Chapter I. Account of the Prophet, his daughter Fá'tima, and the Twelve Imáms.

Chapter II. Account of certain doctors, gnostics, philosophers, poets and learned men.

Chapter III. On sundry sects and doctrines.

Chapter IV. Geographical account of towns and villages visited by the author in Persia, Turkistán, Afghánistán, India, parts of Europe and China, Turkey, Syria and Egypt, the names of these places being arranged alphabetically.

Promenade (Sayr). Prolegomena on the arrangement of this Garden, and on certain matters connected therewith.

Rose-bed (Gulshan). Countries and persons to describe which is the ultimate object of the book, arranged alphabetically in twenty-eight sections, corresponding with the letters of the Arabic alphabet.

Spring (Bahár), containing four Rose-bowers (Gulzár):

- (i) On the interpretation of dreams ;
- (ii) Names of certain halting-places of the author on his travels ;
- (iii) Various anecdotes ;
- (iv) Conclusion.

The book contains a great deal of miscellaneous biographical and geographical information, which, owing to the alphabetical arrangement generally observed, and the very full table of contents prefixed, is fairly accessible to the reader. The author was full of curiosity, and, though unable to visit Europe, lost no opportunity of cultivating the society of European travellers and acquainting himself with the peculiarities of their countries by hearsay. Under the article Firang (pp. 385-7) he discusses the general characteristics of the chief European nations, amongst whom he puts the French first, the Austrians second, and the English third; and he gives a long account of his conversations with an Englishman whom he calls "Mr Wiklís" (مستر وکلیس)¹ and with whom he became acquainted at 'Azímábád. He also cultivated the society of the Austrian ambassador at Constantinople, who invited him to visit his country, "but," he concludes, "since there was no great spiritual advantage to be gained by travelling in that country, I declined." More valuable is his account of the various religions and sects of Asia, in which he treats, amongst other matters, of the Zoroastrians, Mazdakites, Jews, Christians, Hindús, Šúfis and Ghulát (extreme Shí'a).

It would be impossible to notice here the many excellent books of reference, historical, biographical and geographical, which have been produced in Persia since the middle of the nineteenth century. Many of them, it is true, are for the most part compiled and condensed from older works, both Arabic and Persian, but some contain valuable new matter, not to be found elsewhere. Something must, however, be said as to certain peculiarities connected with this later literature and with the world of books in modern Persia.

European students of Persian are, as a rule, unless they have lived in that country, accustomed to think in terms of manuscripts, and to turn to Dr Rieu's admirable catalogues of the British Museum MSS for information as to literary history. But since the introduction into Persia of printing and lithography, especially since about 1880, the importance of the manuscript literature has steadily diminished, the more important books written being either transferred to stone or set up in type from the original copy. This printed and lithographed literature has not hitherto received nearly so much attention as the older manuscript literature, and it is often impossible to obtain ready and trustworthy information as to the authors and contents of these modern books. The recent publication of Mr Edwards's *Catalogue of the Persian printed books in the British Museum*¹ marks a great step in advance of anything previously accomplished, but the notices are necessarily very brief, and contain, as a rule no particulars about the authors and only the most general indication of the character of their works. What is needed is a catalogue raisonné of Persian books composed during the last century and lithographed or printed in Persia, for it is much easier, for reasons which will be stated immediately, to ascertain what has been published in Persian in Turkey, Egypt and India.

¹ Perhaps a corruption of Wilkins (والكنس).

The fact is that the Persian book trade is in the most chaotic condition. There are no publishers or booksellers of substance, and no book-catalogues are issued. Most books have no fixed price or place of sale, many have no pagination, hardly any have indexes or tables of contents. Often books comprising several volumes change their size and shape, their plan, and even their nature as they proceed, while the author not unfrequently changes his title. Let us take as an illustration a few of the numerous works of reference published under the name of Mírzá Muhammad Hasan Khán, who successively bore the titles of San'ûd-

¹ London, 1922. 968 columns. The works are arranged under their authors, but there is a General Index of Titles and a Subject Index.

Dawla, Mú'tamanu's-Sultán, and I'timádu'd-Dawla, and was the son of Hájji 'Alí Khán of Marágha, originally entitled Hájibu'd-Dawla and later I'timádu's-Saltána. Now first of all it is very doubtful whether these books were really written by Şaní'u'd-Dawla at all; at any rate it is commonly asserted that he coerced various poor scholars to write them, and ascribed the authorship to himself¹, proceedings of which the latter must be regarded as wholly reprehensible, whatever may be said in extenuation of the former. In 1293/1876 he published the first volume of the Mirátu'l-Buldán ("Mirror of the Lands"), a geographical dictionary of Persian towns and villages, largely based on Yáqút's well-known Arabic Mu'jamu'l-Buldán, containing the first four letters of the alphabet (ا to ت). Of this volume, however, there appear to have been two editions, the first ending with the notice of Tabríz and containing 388 pages, the second, published a year later (1294/1877), extending to Tíhrán, and containing 606 pages. Having reached Tíhrán, however, the author, growing tired, apparently, of geography, decided to continue his work as a history of the reigning king Náşiru'd-Dín Sháh, and to add at the end of each remaining volume a Calendar and Court Directory for the current year. Vol. ii, therefore, comprises the first fifteen years of the Sháh's reign (298 pp.) and the Calendar (45 pp.) for the year of publication (1295/1878). Vol. iii continues on the same lines, and contains the years xvi-xxxii of the current reign (264 pp.) and the Calendar (50 pp.). At this point, however, the author seems to have remembered his original plan, and in vol. iv he continues the geographical dictionary with the next two letters of the alphabet (ث and ج), at which point he reverts to history, and gives an account of the events of the year of publication (1296/1879), followed by the annual Calendar. Moreover, in order to celebrate this reconciliation of geography and history, the size of this fourth volume is suddenly enlarged from $10\frac{1}{2} \times 6\frac{3}{4}$ inches to $13\frac{1}{2} \times 8\frac{1}{4}$ inches.

¹ See my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, pp. 156 and 164-6.

By this time the author appears to have grown weary of the "Mirror of the Lands," for after a year's rest he began the publication of a new book entitled Muntazam i-Násirí, of which also three volumes appeared in the years 1298-1300/1881-3. Of these three volumes I possess only the first and the third. The first contains an outline of Islamic history from A H 1-656 (A D 622-1258), that is, of the history of the Caliphate (pp 3-239), followed by an account of the chief events of the solar year beginning in March, 1880, both in Persia and Europe (pp 239-57), and the usual Calendar and Court Directory (42 pp). The third volume contains a history of the reigning Qájár dynasty from 1194/1779 to 1300/1882 (pp 32-387), followed again by the Calendar for the last mentioned year.

Next year the author began the publication of a new work in three volumes entitled Matla'u'sh-Shams ("the Dawning place of the Sun"). This opens with a perfunctory apology for the incomplete condition in which the "Mirror of the Lands" was left. However, says he, since the next two letters of the alphabet are ha (ح) and khá (خ) and since Khurásán is the most important province beginning with the latter, and since His Majesty Násiru'd Dín Sháh, whose faithful servant he is, and to whom this and his other works are dedicated, had recently made the journey thither in order to visit the holy shrine of the Imám 'Alí Ridá at Mashhad, he has decided to devote this book to an account of that province, which, since it lies to the East, is hinted at in the title. In the first volume (published in 1301/1884) he accordingly describes the route to Mashhad by way of Damáwand, Fíruzkuh, Bistám, Bujnurd and Quchán, giving a full account of each of these places and the intervening stations

Matla'u'sh-Shams A H
1301 3 (A D
1884-6).

The second volume (published in 1302/1885) contains a detailed description of Mashhad, its monuments, its history from 428/1036 to 1302/1885, the most notable men to whom it has given birth, a monograph on the eighth Imám 'Alí Ridá, and in conclusion (pp. 469-500) a valuable list of the books contained in the Mosque library. In the midst of all this topographical matter is inserted (pp. 165-216) the text of Sháh Tahmásp's diary, of which such free use was made in a previous chapter¹. The third volume (published in 1303/1886) contains an account of the Sháh's return journey by the ordinary Pilgrim route through Nishápúr, Sabzawár, Sháhrúd, Dámghán and Samnán, with full descriptions of these and the intervening stations, and biographical notices of eminent men connected with each. A Sál-náma, or Calendar and Court Directory for the current year, completes each volume, and it is only fair to add that the price of each is stated on the last page as twelve gráns, at that time about seven shillings.

Henceforward most of Muḥammad Ḥasan Khán's numerous works included a Sál-náma, or "Year Book" for the current year, placed at the end of each volume and having a separate pagination. His biographies of eminent Muslim women, entitled Khayrátt^{un} Ḥisán^{un}, published in three volumes in the years 1304-7/1887-90, lacks this addition, which is, however, found in the Kitábu'l-Ma'áthir wa'l-Áthár (published in 1306/1888-9), on the Memorabilia of forty years of the reign of Náṣiru'd-Dín Sháh, an invaluable book of reference for students of the history, biography and evolution of modern Persia down to the date of publication. The plan of a geographical dictionary was taken up by another writer, Muḥammad Taqí Khán called Ḥakím, who in 1305/1887-8 published, under the title of Ganj-i-Dánish ("the Treasure of Learning"), a com-

Other works by the same author.

The Ganj-i-Dánish of "Ḥakím."

¹ See pp. 84 et seqq. supra.

plete Encyclopaedia of Persian place-names comprising 574 large pages. One welcome feature of this book is that the author prefixes a long list of the authorities and books of which he made use in his compilation. This includes a number of European (including ancient Greek) works.

These Persian lithographed books, notwithstanding their shortcomings, are, as a rule, pleasant to handle, well written, well bound, and printed on good paper. Some of them, like the Khatt u Khattátán ('Calligraphy and Calligraphists') of Mírzá yí-Sanglákh, and the excellent edition of the Mathnawí with Concordance of Verses (Kashfú'l Abyat) associated with the name of 'Alá'u'd-Dawla, are really beautiful books, while almost all are far superior to the Indian lithographs. They are, however, hard to obtain in Europe, and indeed anywhere outside Tíhrán, Tabríz and perhaps Isfahán. Even the British Museum collection is very far from complete, while my own collection, originally formed by purchase in Persia¹, owes much to the fact that I was able to add to it a number of volumes from two very notable Persian libraries, those of the late M. Charles Schefer and of the late Sir A. Houtum-Schindler. As has been already said, few greater services could be rendered to Persian scholarship than the proper cataloguing and describing of these lithographs, and the devising of means to place them on the European book market. Since lithography can be carried on with simple apparatus and without any great technical skill or outlay of money, it is often practised by comparatively poor scholars and bibliophiles, who print very small editions which are soon exhausted, so that many books of this class rank rather with manuscripts than with printed books in rarity and desirability².

¹ For a list of the books I bought in Persia in the autumn of 1888, see my Year amongst the Persians, pp. 554-7.

² Compare p. 551 of the book mentioned in the preceding footnote.

CHAPTER X.

THE MOST MODERN DEVELOPMENTS (A.D. 1850 ONWARDS).

I have endeavoured to show that under the Qájár Dynasty, especially since the middle of the nineteenth century, the old forms of literature, both prose and verse, took on a fresh lease of life, and, so far from deteriorating, rose to a higher level than they had hitherto reached during the four centuries (roughly speaking A.D. 1500–1900) with which we are dealing in this volume. We must now consider three or four quite recent developments due in the first instance to what Mírzá Muḥammad ‘Alí Khán “Tarbiyat,” the real author of my Press and Poetry in Modern Persia (pp. 154–66), calls “Modernizing Influences in the Persian Press other than Magazines and Journals.” Amongst these he assigns an important place to the various scientific text-books compiled by, or under the supervision of, the numerous Europeans appointed as teachers in the Dáru’l-Funún and the Military and Political Colleges in Tíhrán from A.D. 1851 onwards, and the Persian translations of European (especially French) books of a more general character, such as some of Molière’s plays and Jules Verne’s novels, which resulted from an increased interest in Europe and knowledge of European languages. Of such books, and of others originally written in Persian in this atmosphere, he gives a list containing one hundred and sixty-two entries, which should be consulted by those who are interested in this matter. The Revolution of A.D. 1906, with the remarkable development of journalism which it brought about, and the increase of facilities for printing resulting from this, gave a fresh

Modernizing influences.

The Dáru’l-Funún.

impulse to this movement, which, checked by the difficulties and miseries imposed on Persia by the Great War, seems now again to be gathering fresh impetus. What we have to say falls under three heads, the Drama, Fiction and the Press, of which the first two need not detain us long.

The Drama.

The only indigenous form of drama is that connected with the Muharram mournings, the so-called "Passion Plays" discussed in a previous chapter¹, and even in their case it is not certain that they owe nothing to European influence. Three at least of Molière's plays (Le Médecin malgré lui, Le Misanthrope, and another entitled The Ass, which I think must be intended for L'Étourdi) have appeared in Persian translations, but are seldom met with, and seem never to have attained any great popularity. I possess only Le Misanthrope, printed at Constantinople in the Taswîrû'l-Afkâr Press in 1286/1869-70. The title is rendered as Guzârîsh-i-Mardum-gurîz ("the Adventure of him who fled from mankind"), the characters are Persianized, and the text is in verse and follows the original very closely, though occasionally Persian idioms or proverbs are substituted for French. Here, for instance, is the rendering—in this case a paraphrase—of the "Vieille chanson" in Act I, Scene 2:

"Si le roi m'avait donné
Paris, sa grand' ville,
Et qu'il me fallût quitter
L'amour de ma mie,
Je dirais au roi Henri
'Reprenez votre Paris,
J'aime mieux ma mie, o gai!
J'aime mieux ma mie!'"

¹ Pp 172-94 supra

گر بیک موی تُرک شیرازی،
 بدهد پادشه بمن شیراز،
 گویم ای پادشاه گرچه بُود،
 شهر شیراز شهر بی انباز،
 تُرک شیراز کافی است مرا،
 شهر شیراز خویش بستان باز،

The following Persian version of Act II, Scene 7, if compared with the original, will give a fair idea of the translator's method. The characters are Mu'nis (Alceste), Fatima (Célimène), Laylá (Éliante), Náṣih (Acaste), Na'im Beg (Philinte) and Farrásh (un garde de la Maréchaussée):

مؤنس (به پیش فراش می‌رود) ... چه هست فرمایش؟
 بیا به بینم!

فراش دارم دو حرف با سرکار،
 مؤنس توان دو حرفِ خودت را کنی بلند اظهار،
 فراش رئیس دیوان آن را که بنده‌ام فراش،
 مرا بدست بدادست حکم حاضر باش،
 بتو...

مؤنس بکه؟ بمن؟

فراش آری بتو،

مؤنس برای چه کار،
 فراش بحرفِ مفتِ (امیدی) و حضرتِ سرکار،
 فتنه بناصح: چسان؟

ناصح امیدی و او گشته‌اند دست و بغل،
 بچند شعر که نگذاشته‌است وقع و محل،
 کنون ز پیش بخواهند بست وارهٔ کار،

- مؤس من و مدافعه هرگز نمیکنم اقرار،
 ناصح و لیک حکم چنین رفته هین بحسب ازها،
 مؤس میان ما چه بخواهند داد صلح و صفا،
 بحکمهای بزرگان مگر بود تسبیق،
 که شعرهای بد مردمان کی تصدیق،
 از آنچه گفته‌ام انکار بیست زان مرحو، بد است هرچه بخواهی
- ناصر و لیک مصیون بو،
 مؤس نمیتوان گذرم شعرها پر و پوچ است،
 ناصح قبول رای تو بخواهم و حای خواهش هست، برو! مؤس
- میروم اما نمیتوان ابد
 ز رای خویش نگردم
- ناصر برو تو خود بسما،
 مؤس مگر بحکم شهی خاص گردد و مسوب،
 که شعرهای ستیریده یافت ناید خوب،
 و گرنه فاش بگویم که شعرهاش بدند،
 شاید اینکه چنین شاعران ندار کشد،
 (به نعمان بگ و نعیم بگ همین که دید میبندند)
 حقیقه که چنین سحره هر بود گمان،
 که بوده باشم و هستم نکان!
- ناصر رواں شوهاں!
 فتیه کجا شمارا ناید
 مؤس روم ولی در دم
 نیآیم ایضا تا کش مکش برار هم

No indication of the translator's identity appears on the title-page of my edition, nor is there any prefatory matter. Curiously enough, in the very same year in which this Persian version of Le Misanthrope was published (1286/1869-70) Aḥmed Vefîq (Aḥmad Wafîq) Pasha printed his Turkish translations of George Dandin, Le Médecin malgré lui, and *Le Mariage Forcé*¹, while Tartufe appeared in Turkish somewhat later².

In 1291/1874 there was lithographed in Ṭihrán a volume containing seven Persian plays with an Introduction on the educational value of the stage by Mírzá Ja'far Qarāja-dághí's plays. These plays were originally written in Ádharbáyjání Turkish by Mírzá Fath-'Alí Darbandí, and were published in Tiflis about A.D. 1861. Five of them have been republished in Europe, with glossaries, notes and in some cases translations. These are (1) the Wazír of Lankurán, text, translation, vocabulary and notes, by W. H. D. Haggard and G. le Strange (London, 1882); (2) Trois Comédies traduites du dialecte Turc Azeri en Persan et publiées... avec un glossaire et des notes par C. Barbier de Meynard et S. Guyard (Paris, 1886); (3) Monsieur Jourdan, with translation, notes, etc. edited by A. Wahrmund (Vienna and Leipzig, 1889). The three comedies contained in No. 2 are the "Thief-catching Bear" (Khirs-i-qúldúr-básán), "the Advocates" (Wukalá-yi-Muráfa'a), and "the Alchemist" (Mullá Ibráhím Khalíl-i-Kímiyá-gar). The two remaining plays, hitherto unpublished in Europe, are "the Miser" (Mard-i-Khasís) and "Yúsuf Sháh the Saddler"³.

¹ E. J. W. Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry, vol. v, p. 14.

² Ibid., p. 59 and n. 1 ad calc.

³ "The Alchemist" was translated by G. le Strange in the J.R.A.S. for 1886 (pp. 103-26); "Yúsuf Sháh" in the same Journal for 1895 (pp. 537-69) by Colonel Sir E. Ross; and the text of the same was published in 1889 at Madras by E. Sell. See E. Edwards's Catalogue of the Persian printed books in the British Museum, 1922, col. 207-8.

Three more plays, written at a date unknown to me, by the late Prince Malkom Khán, formerly Persian Minister in London, were partly published as a feuilleton (ḡá-waraq) in the Tabriz newspaper Ittihad ("Union") in 1326/1908. A complete edition, from a copy in the library of Dr F. Rosen, the well-known scholarly German diplomatist, was published in 1340/1921-2 by the "Kaviani" Press in Berlin. These plays are (1) the "Adventures of Ashraf Khán, Governor of 'Arabistán, during his sojourn in Tíhrán in 1232/1817", (2) the "Methods of Government of Zamín Khán of Burújird," placed in the year 1236/1820-1, and (3) "Sháh-qulí Mírzá goes to Karbalá and spends some days at Kirmánsháh with the Governor Sháh Murád Mírzá."

Finally in 1326/1908 there appeared at Tíhrán a bi-weekly newspaper called "the Theatre" (Tiyátr) which published plays satirizing the autocratic régime. I possess only a few numbers, containing part of a play entitled "Shaykh 'Alí Mírzá, Governor of Maláýir and Túysirkán, and his marriage with the daughter of the King of the Fairies."

These are all the Persian plays I have met with¹. All are comedies, and all are satires on the administrative or social conditions of Persia. In the "Wazír of Lankurán" a rather weak and common-place love-story is combined with the satire, but generally speaking this element is lacking, and the object of the writer is simply to arouse dislike and contempt for the old-fashioned methods of government. In other words, these productions, like the "Travels of Ibráhím Beg," of which we shall shortly have to speak, are primarily political pamphlets rather than plays. Hardly one of them has ever been acted on the stage, and none has produced an effect comparable to Kemál Bey's Turkish play *Waṭan, yakhod Silistra*¹. In short the drama has not succeeded in establishing itself in Persia even to the extent which it has done in Turkey.

¹ Since this was written I have come across a little comedy entitled "Ja'far Khán comes from Europe" (جعفر خان از فرنگ آمده) by Hasan Muqaddam, printed at Tíhrán and actually performed there about two years ago.

The Novel.

Of stories after the style of the "Arabian Nights" or the more popular and indigenous "Husayn the Kurd" there is

The Novel. in Persia no end, but of the novel properly so called there is even less to be said than of the drama. Two rather ambitious attempts in this direction have recently come under my notice, and it is characteristic of recent tendencies to glorify Zoroastrian Persia that both of them deal with pre-Islamic times, the one with Cyrus, the other with Qubád and his son and successor Anúsharwán (Núshírwán) and the heresiarch Mazdak.

The former (or rather the first volume of it, which, to judge by the colophon, was intended to be followed by two more volumes) was completed in 1334/1916, and printed at Hamadán in 1337/1919. It is entitled "Love and Lordship," a historical novel of the days of Cyrus. "Love and Lordship" (Ishq u Saltanat), and was written by a certain Shaykh Músá, Director of the "Nuṣrat" Government College at Hamadán, who was good enough to send me a copy in January, 1920. It is described in the colophon as "the first novel (roman) composed in Persia in the Western fashion":

و می توان گفت اولین رمانی است که در ایران با اسلوب مغرب
زمین تألیف شده

¹ Gibb (op. laud., vol. v, p. 15) alludes very briefly to the outburst of patriotic enthusiasm aroused by this play "Fatherland" when it was first acted in the theatre of Gedik Pasha. Sultán 'Abdu'l-'Azíz was highly displeased and alarmed, and banished Kemál Bey to Famagusta in Cyprus.

It aims at being a historical novel, but the proper names generally have their French, not their Old Persian, forms, e.g. "Mitrádát" (correctly explained as Míhr dad), "Ak-bátán" (Ecbatana, instead of Hagmatána, for Hamadán), "Agrádát," "Ispáku (Spako)" and "Siyákzar" (Cyaxares, for Huvakhshatara), though Cambyses (Kambújiya) takes the intermediate form "Kámbuziyá." The lengthy descriptions of the scenes and persons introduced into the story, and the numerous dialogues are evidently copied from European models. The story itself, into which an element of love as well as of war is introduced, is readable if not very thrilling but is overloaded with dates, archaeological and mythological notes, and prolix historical dissertations ultimately based for the most part on the statements of Herodotus mixed with information derived from the Avesta. There is no attempt to make use of archaic language or to eschew the use of Arabic words, but the author has at any rate avoided glaring anachronisms. The following short extract (p 247) from the description of the preparations for the marriage of Cyrus will suffice to show how far removed is the style of this book from that of the type of story hitherto current in Persia

بلی ایں تہیہ تہیہ عروسی است، و کہاں ندارم کہ عروسی هر
برای کورس پادشاه با اقتدار پارس و مدی باشد، چه کہ امروز
کسی هر او ایں قدر در برد اهاالی اکساتاں محبوسیت ندارد کہ
مردم عروسی اورا چون عیدی بزرگ دانسته و سارارهارا ریت
کرده و از صمیم قلب اظهار سرور و شادمانی نماید

"Yes! These preparations are the preparations for a wedding, and I do not think that it can be the wedding of anyone else than Cyrus, the mighty King of Persia and Media, for today none but he commands in so great a measure the affection of the people of Ecbatana, so that they regard his wedding as a great festival, and have decorated the bazaars, and from the bottom of their hearts make manifest their joy and gladness"

I do not know what measure of success this "historical novel" has achieved in Persia, nor did I ever meet with more than the one copy sent me by the author, accompanied by a letter dated 4 Šafar, 1338 (Oct. 30, 1919), in which he requested me to review it in the Times. I hope he will accept this brief notice as the best I can do to make his book known in Europe as a praiseworthy attempt to instruct while entertaining his countrymen, and to introduce a literary form hitherto unknown in Persia.

The second of the two historical novels mentioned above was printed at Bombay in 1339/1920-1, was written by Šan'atī-zāda of Kirmān, and is entitled "the Ensnarers: or the Avengers of Mazdak¹." Like the last it is incomplete, for it ends (on p. 110) with the words "here ends the first volume," though how many more the author intended to add does not appear, nor do I know whether any further instalment was actually published. In general style it much resembles "Love and Lordship," but presents more archaeological errors, as, for instance, where (p. 10) a portrait of the Sāsānian king Bahrām Gūr is described as bearing a label written in the cuneiform character (khatt-i-mīkhī)!

Before leaving this subject I must at least mention a Persian translation of three episodes in the career of the immortal Sherlock Holmes, translated from a Russian version by Mīr Isma'īl 'Abdu'llāh-zāda, and printed at the Khurshīd Press in Tīhrān in 1323/1905-6. They are entitled respectively the "Episode of the Gold Spectacles," the "Account of Charles Augustus Milverton²," and "the Village Lords." Holmes in passing through a Russian medium has been transmuted into "Khums" (خمس) or "Khūmis" (خومس): Dr Watson has been more fortunate. The adventures are narrated in the simplest possible style, and would form an admirable reading book for beginners in Persian, if the book were obtainable in any quantity, which is unlikely. In Turkey Sherlock Holmes had an enormous success, and I remember a news vendor on one of the Bosphorus steamers offering me a Turkish version of the "Engineer's Thumb," while the late Sultán 'Abdu'l Hamíd was said to entertain the greatest admiration for Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, and to desire above all things to put him in charge of his Secret Police.

"Sherlock Holmes" in Persia and Turkey.

¹ دام گستران یا انتقام خواهان مزدك.

² The original is entitled "the Adventure of Appledore Towers."

(It is hard to say whether Hájjí Zaynu'l-'Ábidín of Marágha's fictitious 'Travels (Siyáhat náma) of Ibráhím Beg,'

The Travels of Ibráhím Beg and the cause of his enthusiasm."

which, according to Mírzá Muhammad 'Alí Khán "Tarbiyat," had an appreciable effect in precipitating the Persian Revolution of A.D. 1905-6, should be reckoned as a novel or not. The hero and his adventures are, of course, fictitious, but there is little exaggeration, and they might well be actual. (The book is a bitter satire on Persian methods of government and social conditions, which are depicted in the most sombre colours, with the definite object of arousing discontent in order to bring about reform. The Persians are very sensitive to ridicule but on the whole bear it much better than most European nations, and most Persian reformers have made extensive use of satire as a means of promoting their objects. This Siyáhat náma is well and powerfully written in a simple yet forcible style, and I know of no better reading-book for the student who wishes to obtain a good knowledge of the current speech and a general, if somewhat lurid, idea of the country.)

¹ See my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, pp. 22 and 164. The Persian text was printed in three volumes, the first at Cairo without date, the second at Calcutta in 1323/1905, though publication was apparently delayed until 1907, the third at Constantinople in 1327/1909. The name of the author appears only on the title page of vol. III. A German version of the first volume by Dr. Walter Schulz was published at Leipzig in 1903 with the title Zustände im heutigen Persien wie sie das Reisebuch Ibrahim Begs enthüllt.

In this connection mention should also be made of the Persian translation made by the talented and unfortunate

The Persian translation of Hájji Bába.
*Hájji Shaykh Ahmad "Rúhí" of Kirmán of Morier's Hájji Bába, published by Colonel D. C. Phillott at Calcutta in 1905¹. This book, like* the last, is a clever satire on the Persians, the more remarkable as being the work of a foreigner; but it belongs rather to the domain of English than Persian literature. All that I had to say about it is contained in the Introduction (pp. ix–xxiii) which I contributed to the edition published by Messrs Methuen in 1895, and all that need be said about the Persian translator and his work has been well said by Colonel Phillott in his Introduction to the Persian text.

The Press.

Of Persian Journalism, which has been the most powerful modernizing influence in Persia, I have treated so fully in Development of the Press in Persia.

 a previous monograph on the subject² that little need be said here, save by way of summary.

Printing was introduced into Persia about a century ago by 'Abbás Mírzá, and the first Persian newspaper appeared about A.D. 1851, in the third year of Násiru'd-Dín Sháh's reign. It was soon followed by others, but these early news-sheets, issued by the Government, were entirely colourless, and even when I was in Persia in 1887–8 the Five earlier newspapers of importance. only Persian newspaper worth reading was the Akhtar ("Star"), published weekly at Constantinople. It was founded in 1875, and lasted about twenty years. Prince Malkom Khán's Qánún ("Law")

¹ See pp. vii–viii of the English Introduction to this work, and also my Persian Revolution, pp. 93–6.

² The Press and Poetry in Modern Persia, Cambridge, 1914.

appeared in 1890 and was printed and published in London, but in consequence of its violent attacks on the Persian Government, the Sháh, and his Ministers, its circulation in Persia was prohibited. The Calcutta Hablu'l-Matin first appeared in 1893, the Thurayyá ("Pleiades") in Cairo in 1898, and the Parwarish, which replaced it, in 1900. These were the most important Persian papers published outside

The best post
Revolution
newspaper

Persia, and it was not until 1907, when the Revolution was an accomplished fact, and the conflict between King and Parliament was at its height, that independent and influential newspapers began to appear in Persia itself. Amongst the most interesting of these from a literary point of view I should place the Sur : Isráfil ("Trumpet of Isráfil"—the Angel of the Resurrection), the Nasim-i-Shimál ("Breeze of the North"), the Musáwát ("Equality"), and the Naw Bahár ("Early Spring").

The Sur : Isráfil and its Charand
parand

The first, second, and fourth of these supplied me with many fine poems from the pens of Dakhaw, Sayyid Ashraf of Gilán, and Bahár of Mashhad, for my Press and Poetry in Modern Persia, but the Charand parand ("Charivari") column of the Sur : Isráfil also contained some excellent and original prose writing of which I shall now give two specimens, since they are unlike anything else which I have met with in Persian. Both are by Dakhaw: the first appeared in No. 1 of the Sur : Isráfil (May 30, 1907), the second in No. 2 (June 6, 1907).

چرند پرند

بعد از چندی سال مسافرت هندوستان و دیدن ابدال و اوتاد و
مهارت در کشیا و لمپا و سہما الحمد للہ بتجربہٴ بزرگی نائل
شدم؛ و آن دواى تركِ ترياك است، اگر ايس دوا را در هر يك از
ممالك خارجه كسى كشف ميكرد باچار صاحب امتياز ميشد،

انعامات می گرفت، در همه روزنامه‌ها نامش بزرگی درج میشد،
اما چکنم که در ایران قدردان نیست!

عادت طبیعت ثانوی است همینکه کسی بکاری عادت کرد دیگر
باین آسانیا نمیتواند ترك کند، علاج منحصر باین است که
بترتیب مخصوصی بمروور زمان کم کند تا وقتیکه بکلی از سرش بیفتد.

حالا من بتمام برادران مسلمان غیور تریاکی خود اعلان میکنم
که ترك تریاك ممكن است باینکه اولاً در امر ترك جازم و مصمم
باشند، ثانیاً مثلاً يك نفر که روزی دو مثقال تریاك میخورد روزی
يك گندم از تریاك کم کرده دو گندم مُرفین بجای آن زیاد کند،
و کسبیکه ده مثقال تریاك می کشد روزی يك نخود کم کرده
دو نخود حشیش اضافه نماید و همین طور مداومت کند تا وقتیکه
دو مثقال تریاك خوردنی به چهار مثقال مُرفین و ده مثقال تریاك
کشیدنی به بیست مثقال حشیش برسد، بعد از آن تبدیل خوردن
مُرفین به آب دزدك مُرفین و تبدیل حشیش بخوردن دوغ وحدت
بسیار آسان است، برادران غیور تریاکی من در صورتیکه خدا
کارها را این طور آسان کرده چرا خودتان را از زحمت حرفهای
مفت مردم و تلف کردن این همه مال و وقت نمی رهانید،
ترك عادت در صورتیکه باین قسم بشود موجب مرض نیست و کار
خیلی آسانی است.

و همیشه بزرگان و متشخصین هم که میخواهند عادت زشتی
از سر مردم بیندازند همین طور میکنند مثلاً ببینید واقعاً شاعر
خوب گفته است که عقل و دولت قرین یکدیگرست، مثلاً وقتیکه
بزرگان ما فکر میکنند که مردم فقیرند و استطاعت نان گندم خوردن ندارند و رعیت همه عمرش را باید بزراعت گندم صرف
کند و خودش همیشه گرسنه باشد به بینید چه میکنند.

روز اول سال نان را با گندم خالص می پزند، روز دوم در هر خروار يك من تلخه، جو، سیاه دانه، خاک آره، یونجه، شن... مثلاً مختصر عرض میکنم... کلونخ، چارکه، گلوله، هشت مثقالی میزنند، معلوم است در يك خروار گندم که صد من است يك من ازین چیزها هیچ معلوم نمیشود، روز دوم دو من میزنند، روز سوم سه من، و بعد از صد روز که سه ماه و ده روز بشود صد من گندم صد من تلخه، جو، سیاه دانه، خاک آره، کاه، یونجه، شن، شده است در صورتیکه هیچ کس ملتفت نشده و عادت نان گندم خوردن هم از سر مردم افتاده است،

واقعاً که عقل و دولت قرین یکدیگر است،

برادران غبور تریاکی من البته میدانید که انسان عالم صغیر است و شباهت تمام بعالم کبیر دارد یعنی مثلاً هرچیز که برای انسان دست میدهد ممکن است برای حیوان، درخت، سنگ، کلونخ، در، دیوار، کوه، دریا هم اتفاق بیفتد و هرچیز هم برای اینها دست میدهد برای انسان هم دست میدهد چرا که انسان عالم صغیر است و آنها جزو عالم کبیر، مثلاً این را میخواستیم بگوییم همان طور که ممکن است عادت را از سر مردم انداخت همان طور هم ممکن است عادت را از سر سنگ و کلونخ و آجر انداخت چرا که میان عالم صغیر و عالم کبیر مشابهت تمام است، پس چه انسانی باشد که از سنگ و کلونخ هم کم باشد،

مثلاً يك مریضخانه، حاجی شیخ هادی مجتهد مرحوم ساخت موقوفاتی هم برای آن معین کرد که همیشه یازده نفر مریض در آنجا باشند، تا حاجی شیخ هادی حیات داشت مریضخانه بیازده نفر مریض عادت کرد، همینکه حاجی شیخ هادی مرحوم شد طلاب مدرسه به پسر ارشدش گفتند ما وقتی تو را آقا میدانیم که

موقوفات مریضخانه را خرج ما بکنی، حالا به بینید این پسر خلف ارشد با قوتِ علم چه کرد، ماه اول يك نفر از مریضها را کم کرد، ماه دوم دو تا، ماه سوم سه تا، ماه چهارم چهار تا، و همین طور تا حالا که عدهٔ مریضها به پنج نفر رسیده، و کم کم بحسنِ تدبیر آن چند نفر هم تا پنج ماه دیگر از میان خواهد رفت، پس به بینید که با تدبیر چطور میشود عادت را از سر همه کس و همه چیز انداخت حالا مریضخانه که بیازده مریض عادت داشت بدون اینکه ناخوش بشود عادت از سرش افتاد چرا؟ برای آنکه آن هم جزو عالم کبیر است و مثل انسان که عالم صغیر است میشود عادت را از سرش انداخت، (دخو)

Translation.

"After several years travelling in India, seeing the invisible saints¹, and acquiring skill in Alchemy, Talismans and Necromancy², thank God, I have succeeded in a great experiment; no less than a method for curing the opium-habit! If any one in any foreign country had made such a discovery, he would certainly have received decorations and rich rewards, and his name would have been mentioned with honour in all the newspapers. But what can one do, since in Persia no one recognizes merit?

"Custom is a second nature, and as soon as one becomes habituated to any act, one cannot easily abandon it. The only curative method is to reduce it gradually by some special procedure, until it is entirely forgotten.

"To all my zealous, opium-eating, Muslim brethren I now proclaim the possibility of breaking the opium-habit, thus. First, they must be firmly determined and resolved on abandoning it. Secondly, one who, for example, eats two *mithqāls*³ of opium daily should every day diminish this dose by a grain (nukhūd) and add two grains of morphine

¹ The Abdāl ("Substitutes") and Awtād ("Pegs") are two classes of the Rijālū'l-Ghayb, or "Men of the Unseen World," who play an important part in the cosmogony of the Mystics.

² Concerning these Occult Sciences, see pp. 441-2 supra.

³ The mithqāl = 4.60 grammes, and is divided into 24 nukhūd ("peas"), each of which consists of 4 grains or barley-corns (gandum).

in its stead One who smokes ten mithqáls of opium should daily reduce the amount by one grain, adding instead two grains of hashish (Indian hemp) Thus he should persevere until such time as the two mithqáls of opium which he eats are replaced by four mithqáls of morphine, or the ten mithqáls of opium which he smokes by twenty mithqáls of hashish After this it is very easy to substitute for morphine pills hypodermic injections of the same, and for hashish 'curds of Unity'¹ O my zealous, opium eating brethren, seeing that God has made matters so easy, why do you not save yourselves from the annoyance of men's foolish chatter, and the waste of all this time and money? Change of habit, if it be effected in this way, does not cause illness and is a very easy matter

"Moreover great and eminent men who wish to make people forget some evil habit act in precisely this way See, for example, how well indeed the poet says that intelligence and fortune are closely connected with one another. For example, when our great men consider that the people are poor and cannot eat wheaten bread, and that the peasant must spend all his life in cultivating wheat, yet must himself remain hungry, see what they do

"On the first day of the year they bake the bread with pure wheat flour On the second day in every hundredweight (kharwár) they put a maund of bitter apricot stones, barley, fennel flower, sawdust, lucerne, sand—I put it shortly as an illustration—clods, brick bats and bullets of eight mithqáls It is evident that in a hundredweight of corn, which is a hundred maunds, one maund of these things will not be noticed On the second day they put in two maunds, on the third three, and after a hundred days, which is three months and ten days, a hundred maunds of wheat flour have become a hundred maunds of bitter apricot stones, barley, fennel flower, sawdust, chaff, lucerne and sand, and that in such fashion that no one has noticed it, while the wheaten bread habit has entirely passed out of men's minds

"In truth intelligence and fortune are closely connected with one another!

"O my zealous, opium eating brethren! Assuredly you know that man is a little world, and has the closest resemblance to the great world, that is to say, for example, that whatever is possible for man may happen also in the case of animals, trees, stones, clods, doors,

¹ Dugh i Wahdat, or Banjáb, is a mixture of hashish and curdled milk similar to asrár, habb i nashát, etc Bug i Wahdat ("the trumpet of unity") is the name given by hashish smokers to a paper funnel through which the smoke of the drug is inhaled walls, mountains and seas; and that whatever is possible for these is possible also for men, because man is the microcosm, while these form part of the macrocosm. For example, I wanted to say this, that just as it is possible to put a habit out of men's minds, even so it is possible to put a habit out of the minds of stones, clods, and bricks, because the closest resemblance exists between the microcosm and the macrocosm. What sort of a man, then, is he who is less than even a stone or a clod?

"For example, the late mujtahid Hájji Shaykh Hádí¹ built a hospital and settled on it certain endowments so that eleven sick persons might always be there. So long as Hájji Shaykh Hádí was alive the hospital was accustomed to receive eleven patients. But as soon as Hájji Shaykh Hádí departed this life, the students of the college said to his eldest son, 'We will recognize you as the Master only when you spend the hospital endowments on us!' See now what this worthy eldest son did by dint of knowledge. In the first month he reduced the number of patients by one, in the second by two, in the third by three, in the fourth by four; and so in like fashion until the present time, when the number of patients has been reduced to five, and gradually, by this excellent device, these few also will disappear in the course of the next five months. See then how by wise management it is possible to expel habit from the minds of every one and every thing, so that a hospital which was accustomed to eleven patients has entirely forgotten this habit without falling ill. Why? Because it also forms part of the macrocosm, so that it is possible to drive a habit out of its mind, just as in the case of man, who is the microcosm."

"Dakhaw."

چرند پرند، مکتوب شهری

کبلائی دخو! تو قدیمها گاهی بدرد مردم میخوردی مشکلی بدوستان روی میداد حل میکردی، این آخرها که سرو صدائی از تو نبود میگفتم بلکه تو هم تریاکی شده^۱، در گوشه^۲ اطاق پای منقل لم داده^۳ اما نگو که تو ناقلای حقّه همان طور که توی صور اسرافیل نوشته بودی یواشکی بی خبر نمیدانم برای تحصیل علم کیمیا و لیمیا و سیمیا گذاشتی در رفتی بهند^۴، حکماً گنج نامه^۵ هم

¹ See my Persian Revolution, pp. 406-7.

پیدا کرده، در هر حال اگر سؤ طئی در حق تو برده‌ام نابد خیلی
 خیلی به بحشی عذر می‌خواهم، باز الحمد لله سلامت آمدی
 حای شکرش باقی است چرا که خوب سر وقتش رسیدی، برای
 اینکه کارها خیلی شلوق پلوق است،

خدا رفتگان همه را بیمارزد خاک برایش خیر نرود. در قافازان ما
 يك ملا ایستعلی داشتیم روضه خوان خیلی شوح بود حالا
 نداشته باشد با من هم خیلی میانه داشت وقتی که میرفت روضه
 بحواند اول يك مقدمه دور و درازی می‌چید، هرچند بی
 ادبی است میگفت مطلب این طور خرفه‌تر میشود (در مثل مناقشه نیست) بمطور می‌آید برای شما هم محص اینکه درست
 بمطلب پی برید يك مقدمه بچیم بد نیست،

در قدیم الایام در دسا يك دولت ایران بود در همسایگی ایران
 هم دولت یونان بود، دولت ایران آن وقت دماغش پُرباد بود، از
 خودش خیلی راضی بود، یعنی بی ادبی می‌شود لو لبگش خیلی
 آب میگرفت، کتاده ملك الملوکی دیپارا می‌کشد، بلی آن
 وقت در ایران معشوق السلطه، محبوب الدوله، عزیز الایاله،
 خوشکل حلوت، قشك حضور، ملوس الملك بود، در قصرها هم
 سرسره ساخته بودند، ملاهای آن وقت هم چماق الشریعه، صاحب
 الشریعه، پارك الشریعه نداشتند، خلاصه آن وقت کالسکه الاسلام
 میز و صندلی المذهب، اسب روسی الدین و خود نداشت، خوش
 آن روزها واقعاً که درست عهد پادشاه و زورک بود، محصل کلام،
 يك روز دولت ایران لشکریهای خود را جمع کرد، یواش یواش
 رفت تا پشت دیوار یونان، برای داخل شدن یونان يك راه بهتر
 بود که لشکر ایران حکماً باید از آن راه عبور کند، بلی پشت
 این راه هم يك کوچه آشتی گمان مسجد آقا سید عزیز الله

یعنی يك راه باریك دیگر بود ولی لشکر ایران آن راه را بلد نبود، همینکه لشکر ایران پشت دیوار یونان رسید دید این یونانیهای بدذات هفت خط با قشون جلو راه را گرفته‌اند، خوب حالا ایران چه خاک بسرش کند؟ برود چطور برود، بر گردد چطور بر گردد، مانده سفیل و سرگردان، خدا رحمت کند شاعرا خوب گفته‌است (ع) نه در غربت دلم شاد و نه روئی در وطن دارم آخ، از آنجا که باید کارها راست بیاید يك دفعه لشکر ایران دیدند یواشکی يك نفر از آن جعفر قلمی آقاها پسر بیگلر آقاهاى قزاق یعنی يك نفر غریب نواز يك نفر نوع پرست يك نفر مهمان دوست از لشکر یونان جدا شد، و همه جا پا ورچین پا ورچین آمد تا اردوی ایرانیها و گفت سلام علیکم خیر مقدم! خوش آمدید صفا آوردید، سفر بی خطر، ضمناً آهسته با انگشت شهادت آن کوچه آشتی کنان را بایرانیها نشان داد، گفت ما یونانیها آنجا لشکر نداریم اگر شما از آن راه بروید می توانید مملکت ما را بگیرید، ایرانیها هم قبول کرده و از آن راه رفته داخل خاک یونان شدند،

حالا مطلب اینجا نیست، راستی تا یادم نرفته اسم آن غریب نواز را هم عرض کنم، هرچند قدری بزبان ما سنگین است اما چه میشود کرد، اسمش (افیاتس) بود، خدا لعنت کند شیطان را نمی دانم چرا هر وقت من این اسم را می شنوم بعضی سفرای ایران یادم می افتد، باری برویم سر مطلب، در آن وقت که جناب چکیده غیرت نتیجه علم و سیاست معلّم مدرسه قزاقخانه جناب میرزا عبد الرزاق خان مهندس بعد از سه ماه پیاده روی نقشه جنگی راه مازندران را برای روسها کشیدند ما دوستان گفتیم چنین آدم با وجود حیف است که لقب نداشته باشد،

بیست نفر سه شانه روز هر شصتیم فکر کردیم که چه لقبی برای ایشان بگیریم چیزی بعقلمان نرسید، حالا از همه بدتر حوش سلیقه هر هستند، میگویند لقبی که برای من میگیرید باید بکر باشد یعنی پیش از من کس دیگر نگفته باشد، از مستوفیها پرسیدم گفتند دیگر لقب بکر نیست، کتابهای لعنت را باز کردیم، در زبان فارسی عربی ترکی فرنگی از الف تا یا یک کلمه نیست که اقلّاده دفعه لقب نشده باشد، خوب حالا چه کنیم؟ یعنی حدارا خوش میآید این آدم همین طور بی لقب بماند،

از آنجا که کارها باید راست بیآید یک روز من در کمال اوقات تلخی کتاب تاریخی که حلو دستم بود بر داشتم که خودم را مشغول کنم همسکه کتاب را باز کردم در صفحه دست راست سطر اول دیدم نوشته است (از آن روز بعد یوناسها بافیالتس حائن گفتند و خونش را هدر کردند) ای لعنت بشما یوناسها مگر افیالتس شما چه کرده بود که شما او را حائن بگوئید، مگر مهمان نوازی در مذهب شما کفر بود؟ مگر بعرب پرستی شما اعتقاد نداشتید؟ خلاصه همیشه این اسم را دیدم گفتم هیچ بهتر از این نیست که این اسم را برای حساب میرزا عبد الرزاق حان لقب بگیریم، چرا که هم بکر بود هم این دو نفر شاهت کامل بهم داشتند، این غریب نواز او هم بود، این مهمان پرست بود او هم بود، این میگفت اگر من این کار را نمی کردم دیگری می کرد، او هم میگفت، تنها یک فرق در میانه بود که تکه های سرداری افیالتس از چوب حسگل وطن بود، خوب باشد این جزئیات قابل ملاحظه نیست، محصل کلام، ما دوستان جمع شدیم یک مهمانی دادیم شادنها کردیم فوراً یک تلگراف هم بکاشان زدیم که پنج ششه گلاب قمصر و دو حبه حوزقد زود بفرستند که بدهیم لقب را بگیریم، در همین حیص و بیص حساب

حاجی ملک التجار راه آستارارا بروسها واگذار کردند، نمی دانم
 کدام نامرد حکایت این لقب را هم باو گفت دو پاشا را توی یک
 کفش کرد که از آسمان افتاده ام این لقب حق و مال من است،
 حالا چند ماه است نمی دانی چه امر سراتی راه افتاده، از یک
 طرف میرزا عبد الرزاق خان بقوة علم هندسه، از یک طرف
 حاجی ملک التجار بزور فصاحت و بلاغت و شعرهای امرؤ القیس
 و ناصر خسرو علوی، کبلاتی دخو نمی دانی در چه انشرو منشری
 گیر کرده ایم. . . اگر بتوانی مارا از این بلیه خلاص کنی مثل
 این است که یک بنده در راه خدا آزاد کرده خدا ان شاء الله
 پسرهای را ببخشد، خدا یک روز عمرت را صد سال کند، امروز
 روز غیرت است دیگر خود میدانی، زیاده عرضی ندارم،
 خادم با وفای شما (خر مگس)

Translation.

Charand-parand. City letter.

"Kablá'í¹ Dakhaw!

"In old days you used sometimes to be a help to people: if any difficulty befel your friends, you used to solve it. Latterly, there being no sign or sound of you, I kept telling myself that perhaps you too had taken to opium and were lolling² at the foot of the brazier in the corner of the room. Now don't tell me that³ you, you queer mug⁴, quietly, without any one's knowledge (I do not know whether in order to study Alchemy, Talismans and Necro-mancy, as you have written in the Šūr-i-Isráfíl) have cut and run to India. Surely then you have found the key to a treasure also! At any rate, if I have entertained an unworthy suspicion of you, you must ¹ For the half slang use of "Kablá'í" (= Karbalá'í), see my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, pp. 179-82.

² Lam dádan (slang), "to loll, lounge."

³ Equivalent to balki, "perhaps."

⁴ Náquláy huqqa, explained as equivalent to the French "drôle de type."

forgive me I ask your pardon! Anyhow, praise be to God, you have got safely back, a lasting cause of thankfulness, for you have come at just the right moment, seeing that affairs are all topsy turvy.

"May God forgive everybody's departed friends¹! May the earth not whisper it to him! In Qáqázán we had a certain Mullá Ínak-'Alí², a *rawda khwán*³ and a very impudent fellow. Whatever may be the case now, he was at that time very thick with me. When he went to recite a rawda, he used first of all to put forward a long winded prologue. He used to say (saving your presence)⁴, 'In this way the matter will be more ass plain' (no need to quarrel over a mere illustration). It occurs to me that it would not be a bad thing if I too were to begin with a prologue for you, simply in order that you may get the hang of the matter.

"In olden days there was in the world one great Persian Empire with the State of Greece as its neighbour. At that time the Persian Empire was puffed up with pride⁵. It was very well pleased with itself, and, if you will pardon the expression, its pipe took a lot of filling⁶. Its ambition was the King of-Kingship of the world. Yes, there was then in Persia no 'King's Darling,' 'State's Sweetheart,' 'Pet of the Province,' 'Beauty of the Privy Chamber,' 'Charmer of the Presence,' or 'Minion of the Kingdom'⁷. Nor had they yet made 'slides' in their palaces⁸. Nor did the Mullás of that time include a 'Club of the Canon Law,' 'Chamberlain of the Canon Law,' or 'Park of the Canon Law'. At that time, in short, there did not exist a 'Carriage of Islám,' 'Table

¹ This formula is common amongst the Zoroastrians. See my Year amongst the Persians, p. 375. Here it implies that the Mullá was dead.

² Ínak is the Turkish for a cow. The name is, of course, meant to be ridiculous. Qáqázán may be a misprint for Qázán.

³ See pp. 181-2 supra.

⁴ Har chand bi adabst, "Although it be an incivility" to use such an expression. Khar fahm ("ass plain") means comprehensible to the greatest fool.

⁵ "To have wind in the brain," a common expression for conceit.

⁶ Lulákingash khayli db mí girift, "Its jug held a lot of water," said of one who has a great capacity for self esteem.

⁷ The innumerable titles conferred by the Persian Government form a constant subject of mockery. The fictitious titles here mentioned are, of course, intended to be both barbarous in form and degrading in meaning.

⁸ The reference is to the sursurak in the Nigáristán Palace at Tihrán. See my Year amongst the Persians, p. 96.

and Chair of the Faith,' or 'Russian Horse of Religion.' Fine days were those indeed, which were in truth the time of King Wizwizak¹!

"But to be brief. One day the Persian Government collected its armies and quietly advanced to the back of the wall of Greece. Now to enter Greece there was only one way, by which way the Persian army must needs pass. Yes, but behind that way there was a lane like the *Áshti-kunán*² of the Mosque of Áqá Sayyid 'Azízu'lláh, that is to say, there was another narrow lane, but the Persian army did not know about it. As soon as the Persian army arrived behind the wall of Greece, they saw that these seven-fold rascals of Greeks had blocked the road with troops. Well, what dust must Persia now scatter on her head? How, if she would advance, should she advance, or how, if she would retreat, could she retreat? She was left abased and confounded. God have mercy on the poet who so well says, 'Neither does my heart rejoice in exile, nor have I any honour in my native land,' etc. But, since things must somehow come right, suddenly the Persian army saw one of those *Ja'far-qulí Áqás*³, a son of the Begler-Áqá of Cossacks, in other words a certain friend of the foreigner and hospitable humanitarian, gently detach himself from the Greek army, and, stepping softly⁴, approach the Persian host. 'Peace be upon you,' said he; 'Your arrival is fortunate! You are welcome! Your visit is a pleasure! May your journey be without danger!' All the while he was quietly pointing out to the Persians with his forefinger that Áshti-kunán lane. 'We Greeks,' said he, 'have no troops there. If you go that way, you can take our country.' The Persians agreed, and by that road entered the Greek land.

"This, however, is not the point... By the bye, while I remember, let me mention the name of this foreigner's friend, though it comes a trifle heavy on our tongues; but what is to be done? His name was Ephialtes...God curse the Devil⁵! I don't know why it is that whenever I hear this name I think of some of our Persian Ministers...But let us return to the point.

"When His Excellency, that double-distilled essence of zeal and

¹ An imaginary "good time" in the remote past, as we might say "in the days of good King Cole."

² I understand that this is the name of a narrow lane, or passage, in Tihrán. It means "Reconciliation Street."

³ The name of a Persian officer in the Cossack Brigade.

⁴ Pá-war-chín, "picking up the feet."

⁵ An expression used when some ill-natured or inappropriate idea occurs to the mind, as though it had been suggested by Satan.

sum of science and political acumen, Mírzá 'Abdu'r Rízzáq Khán, engineer, and lecturer in the School of the Cossack barracks, after a three months' pedestrian tour drew for the Russians a military map of the road through Mázandarán, we his friends said, 'It is a pity that such a man of spirit should not have a title' So some twenty of us sat for three days and nights considering what title we should obtain for him, but nothing occurred to our minds Worst of all he was a man of taste 'Any title obtained for me,' says he, 'must be virgin, that is to say, no one else must have borne it before me' We enquired of the State Accountants, who said there was no 'virgin title' left We opened our dictionaries, and found that neither in the languages of the Persians, Arabs, Turks, or Franks from A to Z was there one single word left which had not been employed as a title at least ten times over Well what were we to do? Would it be pleasing to God that this man should thus remain untitled?

"However, since such things must come right, one day, being in a state of extreme dejection, I picked up a history book which was at hand in order to distract my mind No sooner had I opened the book than I read in the first line of the right hand page 'Ever afterwards the Greeks stigmatized Ephialtes as a traitor whose blood might lawfully be shed' O you cursed Greeks, what had poor Ephialtes done to you that you should call him a traitor? Is hospitality to strangers blasphemy in your creed? Do you not believe in kindness to foreigners?

"In short as soon as I saw this name I said, 'Nothing could be better than that we should adopt this name as a title for Mírzá 'Abdu'r Rízzáq Khán, both because it is "virgin," and because these two persons have the closest resemblance to one another This one was kind to strangers and so was that one This one was hospitable to guests and so was that one This one said, "Had I not acted thus, another would have done so," and so did that one There was only one difference between them, namely, that the buttons of Ephialtes's coat were not made of native forest wood Well, supposing they were not, such trifles are unworthy of consideration'

"In short, we friends assembled and gave an entertainment and made great rejoicings We also instantly despatched a telegram to Káshán bidding them send quickly five bottles of Qímşar rose water and two boxes of sugared walnuts, so that we might present them [to the Sháh] and secure the title In the midst of these proceedings Hájjí Malú t Tujjár¹ conceded the Astará road to the Russians

¹ This title, "King of the Merchants," was at this time borne by Hájjí Muhammad Kázim, whose accomplishments were reputed greater than his honesty

I don't know what scoundrel told him the history of this title, but he put his two feet in one shoe¹ and declared that he was a heaven-sent genius, and that this title was his rightful property. Now for some months you don't know what a hullabaloo is going on, with Mírzá 'Abdu'r-Razzáq Khán on the one hand, supported by his science of Geometry, and Hájji Maliku't-Tujjár on the other with his persuasive eloquence and his quotations from the poems of Imru'u'l-Qays and Násir-i-Khusraw-i-'Alawí. O Kablá'í Dakhaw, you don't know in what toil and moil we are caught! If you can deliver us from this calamity it would be as though you had freed a slave for God's sake, and may God, if He will, forgive your sons!

"May God make one day of your life a hundred years! Today is a day for zealous endeavour. For the rest, you are the best judge. I have nothing more to submit.

"Your faithful servant, GADFLY."

It is difficult in a translation to do justice to these articles, which mark an absolutely new departure in Persian satire, and are written in a style at once idiomatic and forcible. Though they appeared under various pseudonyms, I fancy they were all written by Dakhaw, who, little as he wrote, on the strength of them and a few of his poems² deserves, in my opinion, to occupy the first rank amongst contemporary Persian men of letters. It is to be regretted that, though a comparatively young man, he has apparently produced nothing during the last ten or twelve years.

Of the last twelve years I have little to say. The beginning of 1912 saw the culmination of Russian violence and oppression in Persia, and, for the time being, the end alike of liberty and literary effort. Then came the War, when Persia became the passive victim of three contending foreign armies,

Originality of Dakhaw both in prose and verse.

The last twelve years (A.D. 1912-1923).

¹ This means to stand firm, be obstinate.

² Especially "Kabláy," and his elegy on Mírzá Jahángír Khán, the latter a poem of rare beauty and feeling. See my Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, pp. 179-82 and 200-4.

with little profit to expect from the success of any one of them, while there was scarcity everywhere and famine and devastation in the western provinces. To Persia at least the Russian Revolution came as a godsend, while the subsequent withdrawal of Great Britain after the failure of the Anglo-Persian Agreement left her at last more or less mistress in her own house. How far she will be able to make use of the breathing-space thus accorded her remains to be seen.

Surprise has sometimes been expressed that during the War there should have existed in Persia a considerable pro-

German party, largely composed of prominent Democrats and Reformers. The explanation is simple enough. Imperial Russia was hated and feared, and with good reason, and any Power which diverted her attention from her victim and threatened her supremacy was sure of a large measure of popularity, while Persia had no reason to fear or dislike Germany, which lay remote from her borders and had at no time threatened her independence. Germany, of course, took advantage of this sentiment, and carried on an active propaganda, of which the curious history remains to be written.

One of the chief organs of the propaganda was the Kāwa (Kaveh) newspaper published at Berlin, nominally once a fortnight, from January 24, 1916, to August 15, 1919. There was a long gap between the combined Nos. 29 and 30, July 15, 1918, and Nos. 31 and 32, October 15, 1918; between No. 33, Nov. 15, 1918, and No. 34, March 1, 1919; and between this last and the final number of the old series mentioned above, which appeared five months and a half later. On January 22, 1920, appeared the first number of the New Series (Dawra-i-Jadid), which definitely renounced politics in favour of literature and science, while keeping the same external form and high

Persia and Germany

The old Kāwa
newspaper
(1916-1919).

The new Kāwa
(1920-1921)

standard of style and typography. In this form the paper, now appearing only once a month, endured for two years more, the last number (No. 12, Jahrg. 2, Neue Folge) being dated December 1, 1921, and containing no less than 33 large pages, closely printed in double columns.

During its propagandist days the contents of the Káwa were, of course, chiefly political, and, though valuable for the light they throw on events in Persia, and especially on the doings of the Nationalist "Committee of Defence," have little bearing on literary matters until after the armistice, though here and there exceptions to this rule occur. Thus No. 4 (March 14, 1916) contains a Kurdish poem¹; No. 20 an obituary notice of that eminent man of letters Sayyid Muḥammad Ṣádiq "Qá'im-maqámí²," better known by his title of Adibul-Mamálík, who died on the 28th of Rabí' ii, 1335 (Feb. 21, 1917); No. 21 an account of some of the scientific results obtained by Captain Niedermayer's mission to Afghánistán³; No. 23 an article by Professor Mittwoch on the artist Ridá-yi-'Abbásí⁴; No. 26 an account of Persian students in Germany; No. 33 (Nov. 15, 1918), à propos of a new publication, which, though bearing the Persian title Ráh-i-Naw (the "New Road"), was written in German, a brief sketch of various attempts to reform or replace the Persian alphabet; No. 34 (March 1, 1919) an account of the foundation in Berlin of a Persian Literary Society, and a letter from Mírzá Muḥammad of Qazwín on a point of Persian orthography; and No. 35 (August 15, 1919) a long and very interesting article by the writer last named on the

Articles of interest in the old Káwa.

¹ Reprinted from the Persian newspaper Rastakhíz ("the Resurrection").

² So called on account of his descent from the celebrated Mírzá Abu'l-Qásim Qá'im-maqám. See pp. 311-16 supra.

³ Translated from the Neue Orient, Nos. 4 and 5, May, 1917.

⁴ Translated from No. 7 of Die Islamische Welt.

oldest recorded Persian verses subsequent to the Arab conquest in the seventh century after Christ¹.

The Kāwa of the New Series, which began on Jan. 22, 1920, is, on the other hand, almost entirely literary, and contains numerous articles of the greatest value and interest. The Persian colony in Berlin, though comparatively small, included several men of great intellectual distinction, and, though ardent patriots, keenly alive to the national faults, and eager to absorb what was best of European learning. The special characteristic of the best German scholarship is its sobriety, thoroughness, painstaking accuracy, and exhaustive examination of relevant material from all available sources. This steadying influence is exactly what the Persians, with their tendency to ingenious but rash conjectures and premature theories, most need. In the leading article which opened the New Series the editor, Sayyid Hasan Taqī-zāda, thus defined his aims ·

“The Kāwā newspaper was born of the War, and therefore its conduct was correlated with the situations arising from the War. Now that the War is ended and International Peace has supervened, the Kāwa considers its War period as concluded, and now enters on a Peace period. It therefore adopts, as from the beginning of the Christian year 1920, corresponding with the 9th of Rabī‘ 11, A H 1338, a new basis and line of conduct. It has nothing to do with the former Kāwa, and is, indeed, a new paper, the contents of which will for the most part consist of scientific, literary, and historical articles. Above all else, its object will be to promote European civilization in Persia, to combat fanaticism, to help to preserve the national feeling and unity of Persia, to endeavour to purify and safeguard the Persian language and literature from the disorders and dangers which threaten them, and, so far as possible, to support internal and external freedom. In the opinion of the writer of these lines, that which is today in the highest degree necessary for Persia, which all patriotic Persians should exert themselves to promote, literally, with all their strength, and should place before everything else, is threefold.

¹ Two such early attempts are discussed, both taken from Arabic books of authority, such as Ibn Qutayba's Kitābu'sh-Shi'r wa'sh-Shu'arā, the Kitābu'l Aghānī, and Tabarī's great history. The earliest goes back to the reign of Yazīd ibn Mu'āwīya (A H 60-4 = A D 680-4)

"First, the adoption and promotion, without condition or reservation, of European civilization, absolute submission to Europe, and the assimilation of the culture, customs, practices, organization, sciences, arts, life, and the whole attitude of Europe, without any exception save language; and the putting aside of every kind of self-satisfaction, and such senseless objections as arise from a mistaken, or, as we prefer to call it, a false patriotism.

"Secondly, a sedulous attention to the preservation of the Persian language and literature, and the development, extension, and popularization thereof.

"Thirdly, the diffusion of European sciences, and a general advance in founding colleges, promoting public instruction, and utilizing all the sources of material and spiritual power...in this way...

"Such is the belief of the writer of these lines as to the way to serve Persia, and likewise the opinion of those who, by virtue of much cultural and political experience, share his belief.

"Outwardly and inwardly, in body and in spirit, Persia must become Europeanized.

"In concluding this explanation of fundamental beliefs, I must add that in the writer's opinion perhaps the greatest and most effective service of this sort which one could render would be the publication in Persia of translations of a whole series of the most important European books in plain and simple language."

In pursuance of this programme, there are a certain number of articles on the German system of education, the proceedings of the Perso-German Society¹, and the arrangements for facilitating the studies of Persian students in Germany; but matters connected with the language and literature of Persia supply the subject-matter of most of the articles. Thus we find in the year 1920 a series of admirable articles by Taqízáda (signed Muḥaṣṣil) on the most notable Persian poets of early times²; an original article written in Persian by

Some interesting articles in the new Káwa.

¹ Deutsch-Persische Gesellschaft.

² Káwa, Nos. 1, pp. 2-6; 4, pp. 15-24; 8, pp. 10-4; and 10, pp. 9-14.

Dr Arthur Christensen of Copenhagen on the existence of verse in Pahlawí¹, a discussion on the evolution of the Persian language during the last century², articles entitled 'Bolshevism in ancient Persia' on Mazdak³, comparisons between Eastern and Western research and its results (greatly in favour of the latter) entitled Munázara i Shab u Ruz (Dispute between Night and Day)⁴, the four periods of the Persian language since the Arab conquest⁵, 'a Touchstone of Taste' on good modern Persian verse and what the writer calls Karbala'í verse⁶, Pahlawí, Arabic and Persian sources of the *Sháh náma*⁷, ancient and modern translations from Arabic into Persian⁸, and a very interesting article on the 'Sources of eloquent Persian and Khan i Walída Persian'⁹, in which the writer ridicules and condemns the slavish imitation of Turkish idiom and style practised by certain young Persians resident in Constantinople. These articles, in most cases, display a wealth of knowledge, critical ability, and originality which I have nowhere else encountered in Persian and deserve a fuller analysis than can be accorded to them in this volume.

During the last year of its existence (1921) the Kawa maintained the same high standard, publishing many articles both historical and literary, which were fully up to the level of the best European scholarship. A series of important historical articles on the Relations of Russia and Persia during the period of the Áq Qoyunlu and Safawí dynasties, down to the beginning of the reign of Áqá Muhammad Khán

The last year
(1921) of the Káwon

¹ Nos 4 5 pp 24 6

² Nos 3 pp 3 5 and 4 5 pp 3 4

³ Nos 3 pp 5 11, and 4 5 pp 8 15

⁴ Nos 4 5 pp 7 8 6 pp 3 6, 8, pp 5 10

⁵ No 7, pp 5-8

⁶ No 7, p 4

⁷ Nos 11, pp 7-12 12, pp 7-12

⁸ No 9, pp 4 5

⁹ No 12 pp 3-5 The Khán i Walída is where most of the Persian merchants in Constantinople live or have their offices

Qájár," written by Sayyid Muḥammad 'Alí Jamál-záda, also appeared as a monthly supplement, and showed very wide and judicious use of all available sources, both Eastern and Western. The sudden cessation of the paper after December, 1921, was a great loss to Persian learning and scholarship.

In June, 1922, there appeared at Berlin a new Persian literary and scientific review entitled Írán-shahr, edited by Husayn Kázim-záda, which, though described as a "Revue...bimensuelle," actually appeared only once a month. It is of a lighter and more popular character than was the Káwa, and shows a more marked preference for matters connected either with pre-Islamic Persia, or with the problems with which the progressive Persians of today are confronted. No. 7 (December, 1922) contains a long article on the sending of Persian students to Europe, in the third section of which, "on the place and manner of study" (pp. 162-4), the writer argues that such students should go to England or Germany rather than to France, for the following reasons :

"We Persians (with the exception of the people of Ádhar-báyján, whose nature and character agree better with those of the Anglo-Saxons), in respect to character, nature, capacity and mental tendencies, more closely resemble and approach the French, that is to say the Latin races, since quick and piercing intelligence, self-confidence, versatility of thought, wit and acuteness of perception, sociability and amiability in intercourse on the one hand, and inconstancy, fickleness of character, quickly-developed weariness and want of perseverance, recklessness, and lack of moderation in action on the other, are characteristic of the nature and disposition both of ourselves and of the French."

German education preferred to French for Persian students.

This view seems to have commended itself to the Persians generally, for while in August, 1922, there were seventy

Persian students in Germany, in the following December the number had increased to over 120¹

In Persia itself the Press, paralysed for a time after the Russian aggressions of 1912, has resumed its activities, especially since the conclusion of the War, but owing to the badness of the communications and the irregularity of the posts one has to be content with somewhat fragmentary information about it. No 4 of the Kawa for 1921 (pp 15-16) contained a brief list of Persian papers and magazines which had come into being since the beginning of A H 1334 (November, 1915). These, forty seven in number, were arranged alphabetically, the place of publication, name of the editor, and date of inauguration, being recorded in each case. Tihrán heads the list with eighteen papers, next comes Shíráz with seven, Tabríz and Rasht with four each, and Isfahán, Mashhad, Kirmán, Kirmánsháh, Khuy, Bushire, Báku, Herát, Kábul and Jalalábád (the last three in Afghánistán) with one or two each. More than half of these papers (twenty-five) first appeared in A H. 1338 (began on Sept 26, 1919). That the list is far from exhaustive is shown by the fact that of nine Persian magazines of which copies were sent me by their editors or by friends, only two, the 'Álam-i-Niswan' ('Women's World') and the 'Armaghán' ('Gift'), appear in the above list. The latter is one of the best, containing many poems, including some by the late Adíbu'l Mamalik, and accounts of the proceedings of the "Literary Society" (Anjuman i Adabi) of Tihrán. The others are the Bahar ('Spring'), very modern and European in tone, but including some interesting poems, the Furúgh i-Tarbiyat ('Lustre of Education'), the Dánish ('Knowledge'), published at Mashhad, the Mimat u Hayat ('Death and Life'), entirely devoted to European inventions and material progress, the Firdawsi, edited and written by diplomés of the American College at Tihrán, the Pars, written half in

¹ Irán shahr, No 3 p 55, and No 7, p 153

Persian and half in French, which first appeared at Constantinople on April 15, 1921; and the Ganjína-i-Ma'árif ("Treasury of Sciences"), of which the first number appeared at Tabríz on October 24, 1922. None of these approach the Írán-shahr, still less the Káwa, in excellence of matter or form. An exception should perhaps be made in favour of the Gul-i-Zard ("Yellow Rose"), which appeared in Tíhrán about the end of August, 1920, and in which the editor, Mírzá Yahyá Khán, used to publish the poems he composed under the nom de guerre of Rayhání.

The establishment in Berlin of the "Kaviani" Printing-press (Cháp-khána-i-Káwayání) owned and managed by

The "Kaviani Press" in Berlin. Mírzá 'Abdu'sh-Shukúr and other Persians anxious to meet the growing demand for cheap, correct, and well-printed Persian books, marks another very important stage in the Persian literary revival; and at the present time there exists no other Press which can rival it in these respects. Besides modern plays and treatises on Music, Agriculture and the like, and tasteful editions of such well-known classics as the Gulistán of Sa'dí and the "Cat and Mouse" (Músh u Gurba) of 'Ubayd-i-Zákání, the managers have had the spirit and enterprise to print such rare works of the great writers of old as the Zádu'l-Musáfirín ("Travellers' Provision") of Náṣir-i-Khusraw, a book of which only two manuscripts (those of Paris and King's College, Cambridge) are known to exist; and are now (November, 1923) printing the Wajh-i-Dín ("Way of Religion") of which the unique manuscript has recently been discovered at Petrograd, though books of this sort, recondite in character, costly to print, and unlikely to command a large sale, must almost inevitably be published at a loss. In Mírzá Mahmúd Ghaní-Záda the Press possesses a most competent scholar, who carries on the high traditions of criticism and accuracy established by Mírzá Muḥammad Khán of Qazwín.

INDEX

In the following Index where many reference numbers occur under one heading the more important are printed in Clarendon type, which is also used for the first entry under each letter of the alphabet. To save needless repetition —

Aaron (Hārūn), 207, 217

Abarquh, 55, 56

'Abbās, uncle of the Prophet Muhammad and ancestor of the 'Abbāsīd Caliphs (A D 750-1258), 23, 24, 41 n, 54 n, 127, 394, 424-5, 437-9, 'Abbās b 'Alī b Abī Tālib (perished with the Imām Husayn, his half brother, at Karbalā), 190, 192, 340, Shāh — I Safawī (A D 1587-1629), 4, 5, 6-8, 9, 25, 28, 99, 100, 101, 102-112, 118, 119, 256, 258, 266, 364 n, 368, 369, 406, 407, 408, 426, 427 n, 428, 434, Shāh — II Safawī (A D 1642-67), 111, 112, 264, 267, Shāh — III Safawī (A D 1731-6), 113, 134-5, — Mīrzā (eldest and favourite son of Fath 'Alī Shāh Qājār, d A D 1833), 146, 155, 311, 313, 314 n, 315, 408, — Efendī (Abdu'l-Bahā, q v), 217 n, 218 n, 220, — of Bistām (poet, better known as Furūghī and Miskīn, q v), 328, 336, Hājji — (fictitious), 183, 185

'Abbāsābād (near Isfahan), 266

Abādī (a class of the Riyāzu'l Ghayl, or 'Men of the Unseen'), 469, 472 n

Abdāl Beg (renegade Christian painter), 283

Abdālī Afghāns, 125, 138

'Abdu'l 'Azīz Khān [Afghān envoy to Constantinople, A D. 1726-7], 131-2

'Abdu'l Bahā ('Abbās Efendī, q v), 207, 217 n, 218 n, 220

'Abdū'l-Bahā, — — — — — (poet, xviii), 283

'Abdu'l Hamīd, Sultan — (xix-xx), 13 n, 467

Amām Jalāl Sadiq), 391, — -i-Shīrāzī (saint, xiii), 37, — Khān Uzbek (xvi), 105, — -i-Yazdī, Mullā (xvi), 427, — -i-Tūnī, Mullā (xvii), 368, — Afghān (brother of Mīr Ways, xviii), 125, Mīrzā —, physician (xviii), 283

'Abdu'l Majīd Belshah (d A D 1923), 366 n

'Abdu'l Muhammad Mahallatī (xix), 149

'Abdu'l Mu'min Khān Uzbek (xvi), 104, 105

- 'Abdu'l-Muqtadir, Mawlawi — (xx), 448 n.
- 'Abdu'l-Qādir-i-Badā'ūni (historian of Akbar, xvi-xvii), 242, 243, 249
- 'Abdu'r-Rahīm Khān-khānān (xvi), 165, 245, 252
- 'Abdu'r-Rahmān Bey Sherif (Turkish historian, xx), 71 n.
- 'Abdu'r-Razzāq-i-Lāhijī, called Fayyād (philosopher, xvii), 250 n., 408-9, 426, 427, 435-6; — Khān (of the Cossack Brigade, A.D. 1907), 476-8, 481-2
- 'Abdu'sh-Shukūr (proprietor of the "Kaviani" Press, Berlin, 1924), 490
- 'Abdu'l-Wahhāb Nashāt (poet, d. A.D. 1828-9), 307, 311
- 'Abdu'l-Wāsi-i-Jabālī (poet, xii), 299
- Abšward, 109
- Abraham (Ibrāhīm), 388, 389
- Abtūn (legendary father of Firidūn), 310 and n.
- Abwābu'l-fanān* (A.D. 1645, by Mullā Muhsin-i-Fayd), 407, 435
- "Accomplishments" (Kamāliyyāt), 26-7
- "Achmetes" (i.e. Ahmad Pasha), 70
- Acre, 151 n., 154, 187 n. See 'Akkā Adab (newspaper), 346-7
- Adam, 207, 217, 388
- Ad-ham (poet, xvii), 267
- Adhar (poet and biographer). See Ātash-kada, Lutf-'Alī Beg
- Ādhar Kaywān (xvii), 258
- Ādharbāyjān, 45, 47, 52, 55, 82, 87, 93, 104, 139, 279, 316, 347, 375 n., 451, 462, 488
- Adīb Sābir (poet, xii), 299
- Adšbu'l-Mamālīk (poet and journalist, d. A.D. 1917), 303, 346-9, 484, 489
- Ādil Shāh Afshār (A.D. 1747-8), 116, 138, 141
- 'Adliyya (Ministry of Justice), 347
- Adonis, 188
- Adrianople, 76, 154, 237
- Adventure of Appledore Towers*, 466 n.
- Advocates, The* — (Wukalā-yi-Murāfa'a), 462
- Afdal of Qā'in, Mullā — (xvi), 427
- Afghāns, Afghānistān, 10, 24, 111, 115-118, 121-133, 135, 138, 139, 168, 278-9, 282, 450, 451, 484, 489
- Aflāki (author of the Manāqibul-'Arifin), 35
- Afrāsīyāb, 13, 14, 414
- Africa, North —, 59
- Afshār, 52 n., 137 n.
- Āftāb* (newspaper), 347
- Āstahiyya sect, 391
- Āgāh (poet of Shīrāz, d. A.D. 1828-9), 225 n., 311
- Āghā (or Āqā), title given to eunuchs, 141
- Aghayeff, Ahmad Bey — (xix-xx), 346
- Agra, 255, 256, 266, 267
- Agradates, 465
- Ahar, 50
- Ahlī (poet of Turshīz, d. A.D. 1527-8), 233-4; — (poet of Shīrāz, d. A.D. 1535-6), 233-4
- Ahlul-Buyūtāl*, 209 n.
- Ahlwardt, 358 n., 444 n.
- Ahmad-A'rābi, Sayyid — (ancestor of the Šafawīs), 33 n.; — b. 'Alī-Najāshī (d. A.D. 1063), 355, 358, 405; — (son of Rashīdu'd-Dīn Faḍlu'llāh (xiv), 33; — Mīrzā (brother of Shāh Isma'īl I Šafawī), 59; — Mīrzā (another Šafawī prince, put to death by Shāh Isma'īl II in A.D. 1577), 99; — Khān (ruler of Gīlān, circa A.D. 1567), 96; — Beg Āq-qoyūnlū, 58 n.; — Jān (envoy to Sultān Salīm, A.D. 1514), 75; — b. Muḥammad-Ardabīlī, Mullā—, known as Muqaddas-i-Ardabīlī ("the Saint of Ardabīl," d. A.D. 1585), 369, 406; — b. Abū'l-Faṭḥ (author of the Aḥsanul-Qiṣaṣ), 30; — i-Rāzī (author of the Haft Iqlīm, composed in A.D. 1619), 448; — b. Zaynu'l-'Ābidin-'Alawī (opponent of Xavier, xvii), 421; — Qazwīnī (musician at Court of Shāh 'Abbās I, xvii), 110; — Hātīf, Sayyid — (poet of Iṣfahān, xvii-xviii), 283-297, 305; — Pāshā of Baghdād (circa A.D. 1732), 134; — Khān Abdālī, afterwards — Shāh Durrānī (A.D. 1747-73), 138; — b. Zaynu'd-Dīn-Aḥsā'ī, Shaykh — (d. A.D. 1827), 407, 410-411, 421-2, 429, 434; — Nirāqī, Mullā — (d. A.D. 1828-9), 411; Wafīq (Vefīq) Pasha (Turkish scholar and man of letters, xix), 462; — Šafā'ī (son of the poet Yaghma), 338; — i-Rūhī-i-Kirmānī (put to death in A.D. 1896), 468; — Bey Aghayeff (xix-

- xx), 346, Ahmad Sháh Qájár, Sultán — (regnant), 158
 Ahmadábád (Gujerát), 252
 Ahmadnagar, 169 n
 Ahsa, 364
 Ahsá i See under Ahmad b Zaynu'd Dín (d. A.D. 1827) and Shaykhís
Ahsanu'l Qisas, 30 n
Ahsanu'l Tawárikh (composed in A.D. 1577), 5, 14, 20, 28 n, 32 n, 43, 48 n, 54-56, 58 n, 64 n, 71, 72, 77 n, 78, 80-83, 85, 87, 88, 89, 92, 94, 98, 100, 168-172, 231 n, 413-415, 444
 'A'isha (wife of the Prophet Muhammad), 392
Á'ina i Haqq numá (by Xavier), 421
'Ajdu'u'l Makhhlúqát (of Qazwíní), 448 n
 'Ajámí, Shrine of —, 46 n
 Akbar (Moghul Emperor of India, A.D. 1556-1605), 92, 137, 165, 245, 249, 250
Akbar náma (poem by Faydí), 244
 Akhbári Sect, 374-6, 402-3, 407, 434
Akhlaq i Jalálí, 424, 427, — i Muhsíní, 424, — i Názirí, 405, 424
 Akhlát, 58
Akhbar (newspaper), 157, 468, — Press, 344
 'Akká (Acre in Syria), 151 n, 154, 187 n Hasan, xv), 47
 'Alamu'l Hudá (d. A.D. 1044), 405
 Alamút, 89, 102
 'Alá'u'd-Dawla Samnaní (xiii), 37, — Dhu'l Qadar (circa A.D. 1510 the "Aliduli" of the Venetian travellers), 58, 61, 77 n, —, edition of Mathnawí named after —, 457
 'Alá'u'd-Dín Mahmúd (physician of Sháh 'Abbas I), 427
Alchemist (Kimiyá gar, a Persian comedy) 462 and n d'Alessandri, Vincentio — (A.D. 1571), 50 n, 85
 Alexander the Great (Iskandar i-Rúmf), 13-14, 52, 80 n, 199, 209, 211 n, 246, 247, 270, 391
Alfiyya of Ibn Málik, 363, 364
 Algebra (of 'Umar Khayyám), 425
 'Alí b Abí Tálib (First Imám of the Shi'a, cousin and son in law of the Prophet Muhammad, vii), 16, 17, 19, 28, 29, 32, 33 n, 43, 44, 46, 52, 54, 58, 86, 87, 174-6, 178, 180, 192 n, 230, 235, 236, 248, 264, 356, 369, 385, 390, 391, 392, 418, 433, — b Husayn b 'Alí, entitled Zaynu'l-'Ábidín (Fourth Imám, vii-viii), 18, 179, 181 n, 347, 393, the Third Imám Husayn had three sons named 'Alí, distinguished according to their ages by the titles -Akbar, -Awsaṭ and -Asghar, -Akbar, 191, 193, 393, — Awsaṭ (identical with — Zaynu'l-'Ábidín just mentioned) and Asghar, 393, — Ridá (Eighth Imám, viii-ix), 36, 65, 87, 109, 394, 455, 456, — Naqí (Tenth Imám, ix), 394, Khwája — (grandson of Shaykh Safiyyu'd Dín, d. A.D. 1427), 19, 45-6, doubtful identifications of him with Sayyid — 'Ajami, or — b 'Alawí, buried in Palestine, 45-46 and footnote, — Mírzá, or Sultán — (brother of Shah Isma'il I Safawí), 21, 48 n, 49, Mír — Shír Nawá'í (d. A.D. 1501), 83, 163, 227, 234, — Beg Áq qoyúnlu, 58 n, — Beg Chákarlu (Turkman Sultán, circa A.D. 1500, possibly identical with preceding), 51, Sídí — Ra'is (Turkish naval officer, A.D. 1554-6), 100 n, — b 'Abdu'l-'Alí 'Amilí, Shaykh Nurn'd Dín, called Muhaqqiq-i-Thání (d. A.D. 1533), 256, 406, 428, Sultán — Mírza (Safawí prince, murdered by Sháh Isma'il II in A.D. 1577), 99, — Páshá or Ághá (envoy to Sháh Tahmásp in A.D. 1562), 90-1, — Páshá (minister of Sultán Báýazíd II), 70 and note, Mullá — Mudhahhib (teacher of Shaykh i Baha'í), 427, — Sháh

- Mullá — Núrí (early xviii), 376, 437; — Akbar (poet of Shíráz, surnamed Bismil, author of the Tadhkira-i-Dilgushid, circa A.D. 1821), 304; — Ashraf (brother of the preceding, poetically surnamed Ághá), 311; — Muhammad of Shíráz, called the Báb, q.v. (put to death in A.D. 1850), 150; Hájjí — Khán-i-Marágha'i Hájibü'd-Dawla, 153, 454; — Asghar b. — Akbar (lithographer, xix), 381
- 'Alí-qullí Salsm (poet at Akbar's Court), 166; Shámlú (servant of Sháh Isma'il II -Safawí, xvi), 99; — Khán (general of Sháh 'Abbás I), 104; — Khán (nephew and successor of Nádir Sháh, A.D. 1747-8), 138; see also 'Ádil Sháh, supra
- "Alidoli," or "Aliduli" (an Italian corruption of 'Alá'u'd-Dawla, q.v.), 58, 61
- 'Alláma-i-Hillí ("the Sage of Hilla"), whose proper name was Hasan b. Yúsuf b. 'Alí b. Mutahhar (q.v.), and who died in A.D. 1325, 356, 406
- Alma Qúlághí, Battle of —; 82
- Alqás Mirzá (brother of Sháh Tahmásp, put to death in A.D. 1576-7), 81, 89, 93
- "Alumut" (an Italian corruption of Alwand, q.v.), 62
- Atwáh* ("Tablets," plural of Lawh), 423
- Alwand (prince of the "White Sheep" Dynasty, defeated by Sháh Isma'il I in A.D. 1503), 52, 55, 58, 61, 62, 68, 82
- Amali'l-Ámil ft'Ulamá'i Jabal'Ámil* (xvii), 356, 359, 360, 449
- Amání (poet of Mázandarán, d. A.D. 1651), 251, 258.
- Amánu'lláh Khán (Afghán general, A.D. 1722), 130
- Amar, Emil — (translator of Kitábu'l-Fakhrí), 444 n.
- Amásiya, 76
- America, 12, 150, 422, 489
- 'Ámil, Jabal — (in Syria), 360, 449
- Amíní (poet, xvi), 81
- Amínu'd-Dín Jibrá'il (father of Shaykh Safíyyu'd-Dín, xiii), 32 n., 37
- Amírí, 303, 347. See above, Adlbu'l-Mamálík
- Amfr-i-Kabír, or Amfr Nizám (Mirzá Taqí Khán, d. A.D. 1852), 152-3
- Amfr Nizám, Hasan 'Alí Khán-i-Garrúsí (circa A.D. 1890), 347
- 'Amr and Zayd, 380 and n.
- Anatolia, 48, 70. See also Asia Minor
- Anatomy, 425
- Andakhúd, 109
- 'Andalíb (Mirzá Husayn Khán, poet, xix), 309
- Angels, 384, 390, 394-8
- Angioletto (Venetian traveller in Persia, xv-xvi), 22, 47, 49, 60-61
- Anglo-French rivalry in Persia, 146
- Anglo-Persian War (A.D. 1856-7), 154, 450; — Agreement (A.D. 1919, 157, 483
- Anglo-Russian rivalry in Persia, 147
- Anglo-Saxon character, 488
- Angora, 15
- Anjuman-i-Adabí ("Literary Society" of Tihrán), 489; — i-Kháqán (biographies of poets), 298; — i-Ala'drif (Turkish Academy), 450
- 'Anqá (mythical bird), 263
- Anthropomorphism (tashbúh), 17, 382
- Antichrist (Dajjál), 399
- Antinomianism (sugúf-i-'ibáddát), 382
- Ants, instinct in —, 440-1
- Anúsharwán (Khusraw —, Sásánian king, vi), 52, 391, 401, 464. See also Núshirwán
- Anwarí (poet, xii), 246, 284, 299, 348
- Anwár-i-Suhayl*, 83, 412
- Anwári'n-Nu'máníyya* (by Sayyid Ni'matu'lláh-Jazá'irí, A.D. 1678), 361 n., 366
- Apostates, punishment of —, 402
- Apostles of Christ (Ḥawáriyyín), 207, 218
- Apotheosis (Ittihad), 382
- Aqá Khán, 148-9
- 'Aqá'idu'sh-Shi'a, 381-402
- Aq-qoyúnlu Turkmán dynasty. See White Sheep
- Arabia, Arabs, 18 (democratic tendencies), 77, 125, 388 (Prophets of —), 401 (idolatrous —): Arab conquest of Persia, 3, 14 n., 32, 122, 128, 485, 487
- Arabian Medicine, Philosophy and Science, 424-5, 437-440
- Arabic language, 15, 359, 363, 388, 415-420, 425 n.
- Ibnul-'Arabí, Shaykh Muhyi'd-Dín —, 37

- 'Arabistán, 126, 129
A'raf (Purgatory), 401
 Ardabíl, 21, 28, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 41, 44, 45, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 60, 67, 88, 109, 369, 370
 -Ardabíl, -Muqaddas —, 369 406
Arda Viráf náma, 396 n
 Ardistán, 307
 Arfa'u'd Dawla, Mírzá Ridá Khán, 344 n
 'Arif of Qazwín (contemporary poet), 223, 345
 Aristotle, 201, 212
 Arjásp, 230 See Umlút
 Arjawan (on the Caspian), 51
 Arjsh, 58, 93
Armaghán (Persian magazine), 346 n, 489
 Armenia, Armenians, 49, 128, 134, 451
Armenia and Erzeroum, by the Hon Robert Curzon, 152
 Arnold, Mathew —, 186
 'Arshiyá, Hikmatu'l — (by Mullá Sadrá), 430
 Art and Architecture during the Safawí period, 24-25
 Artillery, 75, 93, 105, 106
 Arzunján, or Erzunján, 22, 52, 62, 75, 76, 77
 Asadí (poet, xi) 299, Salmán: — (contemporary student), 346 n
 Ásaf (Solomon's chief Minister), 310
 Ascension (Mifrás) of the Prophet, 390, 395
Asfár of Mullá Sadrá, 429-430 and note
 A'shá (Arabian poet), 284
 "Awakening of the Persians" (Ta'ríkh i Bidadar yí Irámiyán, q v), 413
 'Awad Khawwás (ancestor of Safawís), 32 n, 36
 Awhadí (poet, xiii-xiv), 267
 Awjí (poet, xvii), 267
 Awranzib (Moghul Emperor, A D 1659-1707), 165
 Ayás Bey of Latakia (killed at Chál dirán, A D 1514), 76
 Aybu Khwája (descendant of Chingiz Khán), 64 n
 'Aynu'l Haydt (by Mulla Muhammad Bâqir i Majlisí, xvii), 409 417
 'Aynu'l Kamál (the Evil Eye so called), 117 n

- Āzād (Afghān ruler of Ādharbāyjan, xviii), 139-140; — (poet, xix), 225 n.
 Azalis, 187 n., 423
 -Azhar, University of — in Cairo, 377, 416
 Azhidahāka (Dahhāk of the Muslim writers), 14 n.
 'Azimābād, 452
 'Azizu'llāh, Mosque of Āqā Sayyid —, 475, 480
 'Azra'ī (the Angel of Death), 389, 395
 Azraqī (poet, xi), 299

 Baal, Priests of —, 188
 Bāb (Mīrzā 'Alī Muḥammad of Shīrāz, put to death in A.D. 1850), and his followers the Bābīs, 121, 122, 147, 149-151, 153-4, 156, 162, 187 n., 194-220 (poem), 329, 354, 355, 380-1, 399 n., 403, 411, 415, 420-3, 430, 446
 Ibn Bābawayhi (eminent Shī'a theologian, d. A.D. 991-2), 358, 377, 405, 448
 Bab-el-Wad (Hebron), 46 ad calc.
 Bābil (grandfather of Shaykh Zāhid of Gilān), 42
 Babinger, Dr F. —, 35 n., 44 n., 45 n., 46 n., 47 n.
 Bābu'llāh ("the Gate of God," 'Alī so called), 385
 Bābur (Tīmūrid founder of the Moghul Empire in India, d. A.D. 1530-1), 63, 64, 66, 74 n., 85, 91, 92, 234
 Babylon (meaning Baghdād, q.v.), 112
 Badakhshān, 322, 451
 Badā'ūni (author of the Muntakhabi't-Tawārīkh), 165
 Badhlu'r-Rahmān, Professor —, 440
 Badī'u'z-Zamān Mīrzā (Tīmūrid prince), 55, 64, 77, 99
 Badru'd-Dīn Muḥammad (father of the poet 'Urfī), 245
 Bāfq, 238
 Baghdād, 24, 30-31, 55, 58, 62, 93, 106, 112, 127, 134, 140, 149, 154, 235, 236, 279, 280, 321, 364, 425
 Bahā'ī, a follower of Bahā'u'llāh, q.v. Shaykh-i- —, 28. See Bahā'u'd-Dīn-'Amillī, infra
 Bahār (contemporary poet), 223, 345; 469; — (newspaper), 469
 Bahā'u'd-Dawla, Bahman Mīrzā — (xix), 149, 450 n.
 Bahā'u'd-Dīn-'Amillī, Shaykh — (theologian, d. A.D. 1621-2), 28, 110, 250, 253, 278, 364, 366, 372, 407, 408, 426-8, 429
 Bahā'u'llāh, Bahā'īs, 151, 187 n., 194-220 (poem), 354, 415, 420-3; — "the Splendour of God" (book by Ibrāhīm Khayru'llāh), 214 n.
Bahjatul'r-Rawāf (treatise on music), 223 n.
 Bahman Mīrzā. See above under Bahā'u'd-Dawla
 Bahrām Gūr (Sāsānian King), 466; — Mīrzā (son of Badī'u'z-Zamān Mīrzā), 99; — Mīrzā (son of Shāh Tahmāsp, xvi), 81, 88-9
 Bahrāmābād (near Kirmān), 126
 Bahrayn, 125, 356, 360, 364, 374, 421, 433
 Bahru'l-'Ulūm (Sayyid Muḥammad Mahdī of Burūjird, d. circa A.D. 1825), 410
 Bajazet, 70; a corrupt spelling of Bāyazīd, q.v.
 Bakhtiyārīs, 139
 Bakī Āqā (daughter of Ūzūn Ḥasan), 47
 Abū Bakr (the First Caliph, vii), 17, 22, 53, 54, 74, 80 n., 94, 95, 104, 391, 392, 418
 Bākū, 52, 109, 130, 135, 346, 347, 489
 Ba'labakk (Baalbek), 407, 428
 Bal'amī (translator of -Ṭabarī's history into Persian), 412
 Balance (Alīzān), 400
 Balkh, 51, 55, 82, 109
 -Balkhī (schismatic), 384
 Balūchistān, Balūchīs, 24, 128 n., 133
 Bam, 149
 Bandar-i-'Abbās, 279, 280
 Bang (Cannabis Indica, Hashish), 87 n., 470, 473
 Bankipore Library, 358
 Bannā'ī (poet, killed in A.D. 1512), 63, 83, 94, 227
 Baptist Mission Press, Calcutta, 358 n.
 Baqā'ī (poet, rival of Hilālī, xvi), 235
 Baqiyyatu'llāh ("the Remnant of God," the Imām Mahdī so called), 394
Barāhtnu'l-'Ajam (by Sipihr), 326
 Barahūt, Wādī —, 397 and note
 Bārbad (minstrel of Khusrāw Parwīz), 221
 Barbaro, Josepho — (Venetian traveller, xv), 10

- Barber de Meynard, 462
Bar-bītan (the seven great noble families of Ancient Persia), 209 n.
 Bārk Parnāk (ruler of 'Iraq i 'Arab about A D 1500), 55
 Barkhiyā (father of Asaf, Solomon's Prime Minister), 310 and note
 Barniqī, Shamsu'd Dīn —, 44
 St Bartholomew, Massacre of —, 72
 Barzakh (the "World of the Barrier"), 395, 397
 Basāsīrī (xī), 54 and note
 Basra, 200, 210, 279, 363, 429
 "Bassa" (i.e. Pasha), 70
 Ibn Batūta (traveller, xiv), 27
Baydān, Persian — (by the Bāb), 150, 197, 422
 Bāyandārī, 67 and note, another name for the "White Sheep" (Āq Qoyūnlū) dynasty, q v.
 Bāyazīd of Bistām (saint and mystic), 336, 357; — II (Ottomān Sultān, A D 1482-1512), 9, 57, 65, 67-9, 70, 71, 72; — son of Sulaymān I (Ottoman Prince, A D. 1562), 89-91
 Bayburt, 76
 Bayram Beg (Humāyun's envoy), 57; — Khān Khānān (murdered in A D 1561), 165, 245
 Baysunghur, or Baysunqur (of the "White Sheep" dynasty), 49-50, 58 n.
 Bayt Mahsir (Hebron), 46 n.
 Ibnu'l Baytār (botanist), 441
Basm i Wisal, 317
 Ibnu'l Bazzāz (author of Safwatul-Safā, xiv), 34
 Bear, the Thief catching — (Khirs-i-Quldr bāsān, Persian comedy), 462
 Dāmād, 428-9
 Belfour, F. C. —, 115, 277
 Benares, 115
 Bihārul 'Anwār (by Mullā Muhammad Bāqir i Majlisī), 359, 366 n, 409, 417
 Bihbihānī, Muhammad 'Alī —, 420
 Bistām, 328, 336, 455
 Bitlis, 58
 "Blasi," 62
 Blochet, E —, 444 n.
 Blochmann, 210 n, 249 n.
 Blunt, Wilfrid Scawen —, 196
 de Boer, Dr T. J. —, 424 n, 425, 426 n
 Bolsheviks, Bolshevism, 371, 487
 Bombay, 149
 Bosphorus, 467
 British Legation at Tihān, 370; — Museum, 457 See Edwards, Rieu.
 Brockelmann's Gesch d Arab. Litt, 57 n, 440 n
 Brydges, Sir Harford Jones —, 142-4, 146
 Būdāq Sultān (father of Shaybak or Shaybānī Khān), 64 n
 Buddhists, 258
 Bahlul (the "Wise fool"), 387
 Buynurd, 455
 Bukhārā, 51, 64, 136, 250, 258, 265, 269, 282 n.
 Bulāq, 253
 Bulghāy (descendant of Chingiz Khān), 64 n.
 Bunī, Shaykh — (occultist), 442
 Bunker, Mr — (Lunatic at Large), 322
Buq i-Wahdat, 473 n
 Buqrāt (Hippocrates), 201
Buqu'l 'Ishq (poet, xvi), 97
 Burhān (Nizām Shah, A.D 1508-1553), 169 n; — (descendant of Shirwan shāh, circa A D. 1549), 96; — u'd Dīn, Qadī — (circa A D. 1384), 406
 Bury, Professor J. B —, 186 n
 Busbecq, 11, 93
 Bashaq (poet of Shīrāz), 241
 Bushure (Abu Shahr), 489
Bustānu'l-Saydhat (A.D 1831-2), 450-2
 Buwayhid (or Daylamite) dynasty, 3, 8, 30-31, 54 n

- Buzghush, Shaykh — of Shíráz, 42
 Byron, 227
 Byzantine Empire, 80 n.
- Caesarea, 23, 76
 Cain (Qábil), 207, 217
 Cairo (-Qáhirá), 425, 469
 Calcutta, 469
 Caliph (Khalifa), Caliphate (Khiláfat),
 3, 11, 13, 15, 16, 17, 24, 58, 104,
 126-7, 131-2, 348, 363, 391;
 Cursing of first three Caliphs, 53-
 54, 58, 74, 104, 135, 363
 Calligraphy, History of — (Khatt u Khattátán), 450 (by Mírzá Háib),
 457 (by Mírzá-yi-Sanglákh)
 Cambridge University Library, 15 n.,
 49 n., 51 n., 52 n., 53 n., 55, 56 n., 59 n., 63 n., 65 n., 77 n., 194 n., 431
 Cambyses (Kambujiya), 465
 Canaan (Kan'an), 207, 217 and note
 Canopus (Suhayl), 184, 185
 Capuchin Mission (Isfahán), 9
 Carabas (corruption of Qará-bágh), 49
 Caramania (Qaramán), 48
 Carmel, Mount —, 204, 214
 Cartwright (xv), 10
 Cashmere (Kashmir), 110, 245, 451
 Caspian Sea, 6, 42, 51, 62, 116, 130,
 139
 Catholicism, Persian converts to —, 6
 Caucasus, 347, 451
 Cawnpore (Kánpúr), 281 n.
 Cellini, Benvenuto —, 303
 Chaghatáy Turks, 234
Chahár Maqála ("the Four Discourses," xii), 196-7, 209 n., 412,
 434 n.
Chahár-súq (cross-roads), 95 n.
Chahár-tári (player on four-stringed lute), 110 and note
Chahíl Sutún (palace at Isfahán), 92
 Chákarlú, 'Alí Beg — (Turkmán ruler, xv), 51 Chakma wa shahwár (boots and breeches), 320, 322 Chaláwí, Husayn Kiyá-yi — (ruler of Samnán about A.D. 1500), 55, 56
 Cháldirán, Battle of — (Aug. 23, 1514), 9, 24, 57, 73, 75-7, 82
 Changí (harper), 110 and note
Charand-parand ("Charivari"), 469-
 482
 Chardin (the Chevalier —), 10, 20,
 113, 115
- "Chasan Chelife," 70. See Hasan
Khalifa
 Chelsea, 221
 Chighála-záda Sinán Páshá (Turkish general, circa A.D. 1603), 106
 China (Chín, Shín), 128, 202, 205,
 211 n., 212, 215, 451
 Chingiz Khán, 3, 64 and note, 94, 322
Chrestomathie Persane (by M. Ch.
 Schefer), 9 n.
 Christ, 187, 420. See Jesus ('Isá)
 Christensen, Dr Arthur —, 487
 Christians, 6, 7, 9, 112, 113, 123, 137,
 187, 188-9, 293-4, 314 n., 401,
 421, 422, 434, 452. See also Georgians, Missionaries
 Cicala, 106
 Circassians, 101
 Clavijo, 41 n., 57
 Clements Markham, 41 n.
 Clive, Lord —, 186
 Clouston, J. Storer —, 322 n.
 "Committee of Defence," 484
 Communism (Idáhat), 382 and note
 Comneni, 47
 Constantinople, 11, 65, 66 n., 76, 77 n., 89, 93 n., 94, 104, 130, 131, 133,
 157, 158, 164 n., 173 n., 344, 450,
 452, 468, 487, 490
 Contarini, Ambrosio —, 10
Continens of Rhazes (-Háwí of -Rázi, x), 438-9
Controversial Tracts, etc., by Professor
 Samuel Lee, 421
 Copenhagen, 487
 Cossacks, 480 n., 481
 Court Directory, Persian —, 454-6
 Cowley, Lord —, 154
 Creasy's History of the Ottoman Turks,
 11 n., 75, 90 n., 93
 Crimea, 76, 103
 Croesus, 209 n.
 de la Croix, Pétis —, 10
 "Cudi de Lac," 101 n.
 Cuneiform writing (khatt-i-míkhí), 466
 Kurds, 58 n. See Kurds
 Cureton, 15 n.
 Curzon, Hon. Robert —, 152; Lord
 — of Kedleston, 92 n., 109, 132 n.
 Cyaxares, 465
 Cynic (Kalbí), 200, 201
 Cyprus, 154, 464 n.
 Cyrus, 464, 465
- Dabistán, 258, 436
 Dághistán, 269

- Dahhák, 14
 Dá'í (court poet of Sháh 'Abbás, xvi), 110, — (poet, d A D 1742-3), 282
 Dajjál (Antichrist), 399
 Dakhaw (contemporary poet and writer), 223, 345, 469-482
Dal'il : Sab'a ("Seven Proofs" of the Báb) 422
 Dámád, Mír Muhammad Báqir — (philosopher and theologian, d A D 1630), 110, 250 252, 256-7, 372, 406-7, 408, 426-9
 Damascus, 179, 406
 Damáwand, 455
 Dámghán, 133, 456
Damír (thought reading), 434 n
 Damíri (poet, xvi), 110
 Dandin, George —, 462
 Daniel (the Prophet), 204 214
Dánush (newspaper), 489
 Dará, Darab, 13, 14
 Dáráb [jurd] 59, 218 n
 Darband, 48, 60, 109, 130, 134, 135
 Darmesteter, James —, 122
Dáru'l Funun (College at Tihiran), 155, 441, 458
Dáru s Salam, 204 See Baghdád
Dáru'l Taryuma (Translation Bureau), 347
 Darwinian theory, 211 n
 Dastán, Mírzá Ibráhím — (son of the poet Yaghma) 338
Dasturul Inshá (by Sárf 'Abdu'llah, d A D 1668), 9 n
Dasturul Wu'arâ (by Khwándamír, A D 1510), 447
 Davies, John —, 114
 Dáwarí (poet, xix), 163, 300-301, 319-322
 Dawlatí (wife of Amínu d Dín Jibrá'il and mother of Shaykh Saḥyū'd Dín), 37
 Dawlatsháh (author of "Memoirs of the Poets," A D 1550), 447
 Dawlat Shaykh, 64 n
 Death slain, 401
 Deccan, 168, 169, 253, 259, 266, 267, 269, 365
 Delhi See Dihlī
 Democracy, Arabian —, 18
 Dengiz Beg Shámlu (envoy of Sháh 'Abbás, put to death A D 1613-4), 6 n
 Derenbourg, M Hartwig —, 444 n
 Despina Khátun ("Despinacaton"), 47
 Determinism (Jabr) See Fatalism
Deutsch Persische Gesellschaft, 486 n
Development of Metaphysics in Persia (by Shaykh Muhammad Iqbál), 430 n, 431, 436
 Devil, 384
 Abu Dharr, 208, 218
Dharra u Khurshíd (poem by Zuláfi, d A D 1614-5), 252
 Dhu'l Figár Khan of Samnán (patron of Yaghma), 337
 Dhu'l Qadar (Turkish tribe), 52 n, 58, 77, 104, 414
 Dhu'l Qarnayn, 80 n See Alexander the Great
 Dhu n Nun, Amír — (ruler of Qandahár about A D 1500), 55
 Dhu'r Rumma (Arabian poet), 357
 Diego, Don — of Persia (about A D 1600), 6
 Dihlī (Delhi), 28, 91, 92, 136, 168, 169, 266, 281
 Dīla (the Tigris), 321
 Dūghushá, Garden of — at Shíráz, 221
Dīndr 410 n
 Dín Muhammad Sultán Uzbek (xvi), 92
 Divine Right of Kings, 18
 Diyá (Ziyá) Pashá (xix), 164 n, 173, 242
 Diyár Bakr, 47, 55, 58, 69, 82, 106
 Dizful, 46, 59, 279
 Doe, John —, 380
 "Dog of the Threshold of 'Alí," or "of the Immaculate Imáms," 354, 369
 Domsthorpe, Horace —, 440
 Dorn, Bernard —, 30, 450 n
 Doyle, Sir Arthur Conan —, 467
 Dreams, Shah Tahmásp's —, 86-8
Droft Musulman by M Amédée Querry, 377-8
Dūgh : Wahdat 473 n
 Dunlop's Perzie, 10, 129
Durra : Nádirí (by Mírzá Mahdí Khán of Astarabád), 445
 Dutch, 10, 129, 280
 Ecbatana (Hagmatana, Hamadan), 465
 Edom 204, 214
 Edwards, Edward —, 304 n, 330 n, 335, 379 n, 453, 462 n
 Egypt, 11, 14 n, 24, 69 77, 416, 427, 451, 453
 Elephant, Year of the —, 391

- Elias, Ney —, 64 n.
 Elizabeth, Queen —, 85, 92, 412
 Ellis, A. G. —, 5, 14 n., 34, 35, 43 n., 54 n., 55 n., 58 n., 71 n., 414
Engineer's Thumb (by Sir A. Conan Doyle), 467
 England, 5, 105, 107, 146, 147, 154, 156, 452, 488
 Enoch (Idris), 390
Envoilement, 375
 Ephialtes, 476-7, 480-1
 Epirus, 72
 "Epistles to the Kings" (Alwāh-i-Salṭīn), 423
 Erivan, 109, 130, 135, 137
 Erlangen, 425
 Erskine, W. —, 57 n., 64, 85, 91, 170 n.
 Erzeroum, 135, 152; Treaty of —, 146
 Erzinjān, 22. See Arzinjān
 "Essential meanings of words," 409
Estat de la Perse en 1660, 9, 20 n., 115, 116
 Ethé, Professor Hermann —, 25, 168, 233 n., 234, 264 n., 265
l'Étourdi (Molière), 459
 Euclid, 201, 212
 Eunuchs, 141
 Euphrates (Furāt), 341
 Euphuists, 412
Europe (monthly review), 153 n.
 Europeans, Persian view of —, 452; — as instructors in Persia, 458; —, their ships highly esteemed, 280
 Evil not created by the Devil, 384
 Evil Eye ('Aynū'l-Kamāl), 117 n., 216 n., 274 n.
 Executions, compulsory attendance at —, 108
 Abu'l-Faḍl (Akbar's Minister), 242, 249, 252; — b. Idrīs of Bitlis, 72
 Fairchild, Blair —, 222
-Fakhrī, Kitābu'l- —, 127, 180 n., 443-4
Fakhrī'l-Muhagiqīn, 406
 Famagusta (Cyprus), 464 n.
-Fārābī, Abū Naṣr — (philosopher), 257, 449
 Farahābād (near Isfahān), 128, 129, 132
 Farāhān, 303, 311
 Abu'l-Faraj-i-Rūnī (poet), 246, 299
Faras-nāma (by Shaykh 'Alī Ḥazīn), 278
 Farazdaq (Arabic poet), 357
 Farghāna, 64
 Farhād Mīrzā (uncle of Nāṣiru'd-Dīn Shāh), 157, 312; — Pāshā (Turkish General, xvi), 104; — u Shīrīn (romantic poem by Wahshī and Wisāl), 238, 317, 319
 Farhang (Mīrzā Abu'l-Qāsim, poet, of Shīrāz, xix), 300, 319, 322-5
 Ibnu'l-Fārid (Egyptian mystic and poet), 357
 Farīdu'd-Dīn 'Aṭṭār (mystical poet, xiii), 357, 449; — Ahmad Taftāzānī (d. A.D. 1510), 63, 69
 Farmān-farmā (grandson of Fath-'Alī Shāh), 146
Farqadīn ("Guard-stars"), 295 and note
 Farrukh Khān (Persian plenipotentiary at Paris in A.D. 1857), 154, 450; — Yāsār (Shīrwān-shāh, killed in A.D. 1500), 22, 52, 60, 82
 Farrukhī (poet, xi), 265, 299
 Fārs (province), 49, 56, 57, 59, 60, 82, 134, 225, 283
 Fāsīh (poet, xvi), 243
 Fatalism (jabr), 382, 384 n., 385, 386-7, 424
 Fath-'Alī Shāh Qājār (A.D. 1797-1834), 115, 145-6, 298, 303, 304, 305, 309, 311, 314 n., 315, 368, 374-6, 411; — Khān Qājār (circa A.D. 1728), 132, 139; — Khān of Kāshān (poetically surnamed Ṣabā, q.v.), 309-310; — -i-Darbandī (xix), 462
 Abu'l-Fath Beg Bāyandārī (ruler of Kirmān, circa A.D. 1500), 55; — -Husaynī (xvi), 34-5; — (son of Karīm Khān-i-Zand, xviii), 142; — of Gilān (Ḥakīm, xvi), 245
 Fathī (rhapsodist at Court of Shāh 'Abbās the Great), 110; — (Indian poet), 267
 Fāṭima (daughter of the Prophet Muḥammad, wife of 'Alī, and mother of the Imāms al-Hasan and al-Husayn, vii), 17, 18, 29, 32, 33 n., 176 n., 178, 180, 182, 185, 190, 192, 391, 392, 400 n., 451; — -Kubrā and Sughrā (daughters of the Imām-Husayn), 181, 393
 Fātimid Caliphs, 54 n., 98
Fatwā (legal decision), 372
Fawā'id-i-Safawīyya (composed A.D. 1796-7), 444

- Fawā'idu'l Madaniyya* (by Mullā Muhammad Amin, d. A.D. 1623-4), 374
- Fayd, Mullā Muhsin i. —. See under Muhsin
- Faydī (Fayzī, Feyzī, poet at Akbar's Court, d. A.D. 1595), 163, 164, 167, 242-5, 249, 267
- Fayyād, 'Abdu'r-Razzāq-i-Lāhijī (theologian and philosopher, xvii), 230 n., 408-9, 435-6; Sultān — (heretic suppressed by Shāh Isma'īl, circa A.D. 1508), 59
- Felenk and Pelenk (factions), 119
- Ferdinand, the Archduke, 11, 93
- Feuvner, Dr —, 371
- Fig, Valley of the —, 214, 219
- Fig'hānī, Bābā — of Shīrāz (d. A.D. 1519), 164, 229-230, 242
- Figuerosa, Don Garcias de Silva —, 10
- Fihrist* (of -Tūsī, xi), 355, 405
- Fīn (near Kāshān), 56, 132
- Fīndarskī, Mīr Abu'l-Qāsim i. — (d. circa A.D. 1640), 250, 257-8
- "Firangī ambassador" at the Court of Yazīd, 188
- Firangīs Khānum (daughter of Shāh Isma'īl, xvi), 81 n.
- Fīrdawsī (poet, xi), 13, 228, 229, 299, 309, — (magazine), 489
- Fīrdūn (legendary Persian king), 12, 13, 14, 310; — Bey (compiler of Turkish State Papers, xvi), 8, 12, 13 n., 66-9, 73-80, 88 n., 91, 93 n.
- Fīrūzkūh, 55, 56, 455
- Fīrūz Mīrzā (A.D. 1840), 149
- Fīrūzshāh i. Zarrīn-Kuldāh (ancestor of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Dīn), 32 n., 36
- Fishing as a pastime, 51
- Five Years in a Persian Town* (by Napier Malcolm), 195
- Flügel, 66 n.
- Fonahn, Dr Adolf —, 439
- Forbes's Persian Grammar, 387 n.
- "Four Books" of the Shī'a, 359, 405
- "Fourteen Immaculate Ones" (Chahārdah Ala'yūm, i.e. the Prophet, Fātuma, and the Twelve Imāms), 400
- France, 5, 6, 146, 153, 450
- Franks (Firangī), 275, 283
- Frederick Duke of Holstein, 114
- Free Will, 15, 384-5, 386-7, 424
- French, 226-7, 371, 452, 458, 488; — language, 10, 323-5, 459-62, 465, 490; — Legation at Tīhrān, 378
- Fudūlī (Fuzūlī), poet of Baghdād (d. A.D. 1562-3), 236-7
- Fūlād Oghlān (descendant of Chingiz Khān), 64 n.
- Furāt (Euphrates), 340
- Furūghī of Qazwīn (court poet of Shāh 'Abbās, xvii), 110; — of Bistām (xix), 26, 168, 225, 307 n., 326, 328, 336-7
- Furūgh i Tarbiyat* (magazine), 489
- Furūghu'd-Dawla (son of Hasan 'Alī Mīrzā Shīyd'u's-Saltāna), 328
- Gabr (guebre), 80 n., 95, 126, 179
- See also Magian, Zoroastrian
- Gabriel (Jibrī'l), the Archangel, 175, 177, 229, 291, 294 n., 297, 388, 389, 390
- Ganja, 99, 104, 109, 134, 229
- Ganj-i Dānish* ("the Treasure of Learning," published in 1887-8), 456-7
- Ganjīna* of Nashāt (d. A.D. 1828-9); — i. Ma'drif (magazine), 490
- Gardanne, General —, 146
- "Gates" (Abwāb), 150. See Bāb
- Gawhar-i-Murād* ("the Pearl of Desire," by 'Abdu'r-Razzāq i Lāhijī), 408, 435
- Gedik Pāsha, Theatre of — at Constantinople, 464 n.
- Genoa, 6
- Georgia, Georgians, 37, 44, 52, 95, 103, 104, 107, 123, 134, 137, 140, 144, 298, 375 n.
- Germany, 5, 6, 13 n., 128, 153, 483-9, people of —, 425, 463, language of —, 10, 12
- Geschichte der Arabischen Aerzte* (by Wustensfeld), 440 n., — der Chalfen (by Weil), 54 n., — der Medizin (Max Neuburger), 438
- Ghalīb, Sayyid Muḥammad Husayn (poet, xviii), 283
- Ghanī zāda, Mīrzā Mahmūd —, 490
- Ghaybat* ("Occultation" of the Twelfth Imām), 150, 381, 398-9
- Ghazāla, 393. See Shahrānū
- Ghazālī, 449
- Ghāzān Khān (xiv), 18, 41
- Abu'l-Ghāzī Husayn b. Bayqarā, Sultān — (Tīmūrid, xv-xvi), 63, 64, 69, 77, 83

- Ghazna, 228; House of —, 3, 18
 Ghujduwán, Battle of — (A.D. 1512), 66
Ghuldt (extreme Shi'a), 17, 58, 385, 395, 452
 Ghúrf, Sultán — (of Egypt, xvi), 69
 Ghúriyání, Khwája Kalán — (xvi), 97
 Ghuzz Turks, 348
 Gibb, E. J. W. — (History of Ottoman Poetry), 13 n., 20 n., 89 n., 107 n., 163 n., 164 n., 210 n., 236-7, 242, 250, 265, 462 n., 464 n.
 Gibbon (Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire), 186
 Gílán, 19, 36, 50, 96, 104, 130, 134, 135, 223, 237, 238, 277, 279, 280, 451, 469; dialect of — (Gílakí), 43
 Gílkhwárán, 36 n. See Kalkhorán
 Giustiniani, Nicolo — (A.D. 1514), 72
 Gobineau, M. le Comte de —, 147 n., 153, 403, 423, 430 n., 431, 435, 436
 Gog and Magog (Yajuj wa Majuj), 211 and note, 400
 Goldziher, Prof. Ignaz —, 424 n.
 Good and Evil, Problem of —, 384-5
 Gospels (Injíl, Ingilyán), 137, 204, 214, 388 di Govea, Antonio —, 10
 Grahame, George —, 190, 198, 222
Grand Maître des Assassins, un —, by S. Guyard, 149 n.
 Grebaïodoff (Russian Minister murdered at Tíhrán, Feb. 11, 1829), 146, 312
 Greeks, 47, 475-481; Philosophy and Science of the —, 219, 424-5, 437-8, 457
 Green birds of Paradise, 395, 397
 Grey, Charles —, 48 n., 49 n.
 "Guard-stars" (Fargadán), 295 and n.
 Guebre, 80 n. See Gabr, Magian, Zoroastrian
 Gujerát, 168, 169, 252
 Gulistán (place), 52, 146; (book) 269, 326, 335, 490
Gul-i-zard (magazine), 490
 Gulkhandán (fortress), 56
 Gulnábád, Battle of — (March 8, 1722), 126-8
Gulshan-i-Mahmúd, 298; — -i-Ráz, 37; — -i-Sabá, 309
 Gurgán (Jurján), 130, 234
 Gurgín Khán, 123-4
Guzdrish-i-Mardum-guríz (Persian version of le Misanthrope), 459
Gyaur ("giaour"), 80 n. See Gabr
 Gyuk Cháy (near Síwás), 71
 Ḥabíb, 328, 332 (the early pen-name of Qāḍī, q.v.); Mírzá — of Isfahán (xix), 450; Shaykh — Ahmad (contemporary), 442; — u's-Siyar (by Khwándamír, A.D. 1523), 445
Ḥablu'l-Matn (newspaper), 469
 Ḥādhiq (poet, xvii), 267
 Ḥádí, Ḥájji Mullá — of Sabzawár (philosopher, d. A.D. 1878), 326, 409, 411, 426, 430, 431, 436-7; Ḥájji Shaykh — [-i-Najmábádí], 471, 474
 Ḥādīqatu'l-Haqlqa (by Saná'í), 256; — 's-Su'add (by Fuḍúlí), 237
 Ḥáfiz (of Shíráz, xiv), 25, 122, 216 n., 222, 268, 299, 348, 382 n., 383 n.; — Pasha (A.D. 1625), 107; — (title of Qur'án-reciters), 110
 Haft-band (of Muhtasham), 173-7; — Iqlm (of Amín Ahmad-i-Rází), 231 n., 234, 235, 241 n., 448 and note; — -Kishwar (of Fayḍí), 244; — Manzar (of Hátífí), 229; — Paykar (of Nizámí), 229; — Sin ("the seven S's"), 333 n.
 Haggard, W. H. D. —, 462
 Ḥájibu'd-Dawla, Ḥájji 'Alí Khán —, 153, 454
 Ḥájji Baba (Morier's), 195, 468; — Khalífa ("Kyátib Chelebi"), 66 n.; — Mírzá Áqásí, 147, 149, 151, 329
 Ibnu'l-Ḥájib, 362
 Ḥakím, Mírzá Mahmúd — (poet and physician, son of the poet Wiṣál, d. A.D. 1851), 300; — Muḥammad Taqí Khán (A.D. 1887), 456-7
 Hakluyt Society, 41 n., 48 n., 49 n., 50 n., 57 n., 60 n., 85 n., 90 n.
 Halákí (poet of the time of Sháh 'Abbás), 110
 Ḥalátí (poet of the time of Sháh 'Abbás), 110
 Halévy, 397 n.
 "Half the World" (Nisf-i-Jahán, "Medio Mundo"), Isfahán so called, 4
 Halíma (daughter of Úzún Hasan), 47
 Hamadán (Hagmatána, Ecbatana), 57, 82, 89, 109, 130, 132, 134, 258, 279, 451, 464, 465
 -Hamása, 270
 Hamerton, P. G. —, 226

von Hammer, 66 n, 71 n, 72, 73

- Muhammad Khuda bahu, a. a. d. 1586, 101, 102
- Ibnul Hanafiyya (son of 'Ali b. Abi Tálib), 17, 391
- Hanauer, Rev. Canon J. E. —, 46 n
- Ibn Hanbal (Ahmad b. Muhammad —, A. D. 855), 343
- Abu Hanifa (d. A. D. 767), 353, 387
- Hanway, Jonas — (xviii), 4, 112, 116, 118, 119 n, 126, 127, 129, 130 n, 132 n, 134, 136
- Haqqul Yaqin* (by Mullá Muhammad Báqir i Majlisi) 381, 417, 418
- Haram. See Holy Cities, Mecca, Madína
- Hardra* (a kind of ballad) 222
- Harfi (poet of Isfahán), 237
- Harford Jones Brydges, Sir —, 142-6
- Hárima'r Rashid, 394, 438
- Hariri, 412
- Hárinth (slayer of Muslim's children), 191, 193
- Hasan b. 'Ali (the Second Imám), 16 n, 173, 175, 176 n, 193 n, 392-3, — 'Askari (the Eleventh Imám), 394, — b. Muhammad (ancestor of the Safawis), 33 n, — -Basri, 384, — b. Yúsuf b. 'Ali b. Mu'tahhar Hilli (called 'Alláma-i-Hilli, q. v., d. A. D. 1326) 356, 406, — (of the Áq-qoyúnlu dynasty, A. D. 1466-1478) see Uzún Hasan, — Khallifa (xv), 70, — Beg (Turkish governor of Morea, killed in A. D. 1514) 76, — Beg Rúmlu (author of Ahsanu'l Tawdríkh, A. D. 1577-8, q. v.), 85, 100, 444, — Beg (gaoler of Alqás Mirza, xvi), 89, — Aqá (Turkish officer, xvi), 91, — Beg (favourite of Isma'íl II, xvi) 99-100, — Páshá (Begler begi of Rumelia, killed in A. D. 1514), 76, — Mirzá, Sultán — Safawí (xvi), 99, — of Yazd, Mullá — (defies Fath 'Alí Sháh), 368-9, — of Shíráz Háji Mirzá —, and of Ashtiyán (opponents of Tobacco concession in A. D. 1890-1), 370-1, — Muqaddam (author of a play) 461 n
- Hasan 'Alí Khán i Garrúsi (A. D. (xix-xx), 303, 420
- Háshim i Qazwini Háfiz — (time of Sháh 'Abbás I), 110
- Hashish* (Indian hemp), 87 n, 470, 473 and note
- Hasht Bikhsh*, 151
- Hátif of Isfahán (poet, xviii), 221, 277, 283-297, 305, 309
- Hátifi (poet of Kharjird, d. A. D. 1520), 25, 83, 227-9
- Hátim of Tayy, 401, — of Káshán (poet of the time of Sháh 'Abbás I), 110
- Háwi (Continens) of Rázi (Rhazes), 438-9
- Hdwya* (the lowest Hell), 400-401
- Hayati (poet), 167
- Haydu' Qulub* ('the Life of Hearts'), by Mullá Muhammad Báqir i Majlisi (xvii), 409, 417
- Haydar, Shaykh — (father of Sháh Isma'íl I, xv), 19, 21, 47-9, 60, 67, 70, — i Mu'ammál (poet of the time of Sháh 'Abbás I), 110, — (rhapsodist contemporary with the preceding), 110, — Mirzá (son of Sháh Tahmásp I, xvi) 98, — Mirzá (nephew of Sháh 'Abbás I), 104, — 'Alí Khán Nawwáb (xix) 318
- Haydarábád (Deccan), 269, 365
- Haydari and Ní matl (factions), 119 n
- Hayrat (pen name of Abul Hasan Mirzá, q. v.), 303
- Hayrati (poet, d. A. D. 1553), 97, 170
- Hayya ilá khayr!* 'amal, 54
- Hazar jarib, 283
- Házín, Shaykh 'Alí — (xviii), 115, 117-118, 265, 277-281, 450
- Heaven and Hell described, 395-401, 418
- Hebron 46 n
- Hells the Seven —, 400-401
- Heracius, Prince of Georgia (xviii), 140
- Herát, 25, 44, 63, 69, 83, 86, 94, 95, 97, 99, 100, 125, 133, 147, 154, 229, 234, 334 n, 489

- Herbert, Sir Thomas —, 10
 Heretics put to death, 57, 71-3
 Hermes, 201, 212
 Herodotus, 465
 -Hidāya of -Maybudī, 57 n.
 Hidāyat (the pen-name of Ridā-qulī Khān, q.v.), 224, 225, 304, 307 n., 326, 344
 Hijāz, 280, 427. 451
Hijrat-i-Sughra ("the Minor Migration," Dec. 1905), 446 n.
 -Hikmatu'l-'Arshiyya and Hikmatu'l-Ishraq, 430
 Hilālī (poet, put to death in A.D. 1528), 25, 83, 94, 227, 234-5
 -Hillī, 378, 405 (see -Muhaqqiq-Awwal); 54 and note, 406 (see 'Allāma-i-Hillī')
Hilyatu'l-Muttaqin ("the Ornament of the Pious," by Mullā Muḥammad Bāqir-i-Majlisī), 409, 417
 Himmat (poet, xix), 300
 Hind (wife of Abū Sufyān, vii), 178, 180 and note
 Hindī language, 259 n.
 Hindūs, 179, 181, 258, 452
 Hindūshāh b. Sanjar...-Kīrānī (author of Tajārību's-Salaf, xiv), 443
 Hindustān, 282. See India
 Hippocrates (Buqrāṭī), 212, 439
 Hirschberg, Dr Julius —, 425, 440
 Hīsābī (poet of the time of Shāh 'Abbās I), 110
 Hishām b. 'Abdu'l-Malik (Umayyad, viii), 393
Histoire de la Médecine Arabe (by Dr L. Leclerc), 440 n.
Histoire des Mongols (by d'Ohsson), 45 n., 322
 Holmyard, 440
 Holstein, Frederick Duke of —, 114
 Holy Cities, 11, 24, 59, 280. See Karbala, Mecca, -Madīna, Najaf, etc.
 Hoopoe (Hudhud), 190, 192
 Horn, Dr Paul —, 13 n., 84 n., 86 n., 87 n., 88 n., 90
 Houtsma, 18 n.
 Houtum-Schindler, Sir Albert —, 5, 33 n., 48 n., 223, 305, 450 n., 457
 Huart, M. Clément —, 35, 40
 Hūd (the Prophet), 388
Hujjatu'l-Islām (Iḥājī Sayyid Muḥammad Bāqir so entitled), 368
Hujjatu'llāh (title of the Imām Mahdī), 394
 Húlágú Khān (Mongol, xiii), 37, 41 n., 148, 405
Hulūl (Incarnation), 382
 Humāyūn (Moghul Emperor of India, xvi), 28 n., 57, 91-2, 165, 169-170
 Hunar, Mīrzā Isma'īl — (son of the poet Yaghma), 338
 Hunayn b. Ishāq ("Johanitius"), 357
 Hūrīs (of Paradise), 190, 192 and note
 Hurmuz, Island of —, 107
 Hurr-'Amīlī, Shaykh —, 28
 Hurr b. Yazīd-Riyāhī, 190
 Hūsayn b. 'Alī b. Abī Tālib (the Third Imām), 17, 30-31, 87 n., 135, 176 n., 177, 178, 180, 182, 184-193, 241, 392-3, 399, 434; — b. Bayqarā, Sultān Abū'l-Ghāzī — (Timūrid, xv-xvi), 55-6, 63, 64, 69, 77, 83; — Shāh-i-Ṣafawī (A.D. 1694-1722), 111, 113-4, 116, 120, 123, 125, 128, 129, 131, 138, 139, 283; — b. Mansūr-Hallāj (mystic, x), 336, 357; — Kiyā-yi-Chalāwī (killed by Shāh Isma'īl I about A.D. 1503), 55, 56; — i-Maybudī, Mīr — (xvi), 57; — Wā'iz-i-Kāshifī (xv-xvi), 83, 182, 227, 237; —, Shaykh — (father of Shaykh-i-Bahā'ī, xvi), 427; — 'Alī Beg (Persian ambassador to Spain, A.D. 1599), 5, 6 n.; —, Khwāja — (poet) and — Tanbūra'ī (musician), contemporaries of Shāh 'Abbās the Great, 110; — Pāshā (Governor of Baṣra, xvii), 363. Mullā — Rafīq (poet of Isfahān, xviii), 282; — Hūsayn of Yazd (turbulent ecclesiastic, A.D. 1817), 148; Sayyid — i-Tabātabā'ī of Ardīstān (poetically surnamed Mijmar, q.v., d. A.D. 1810), 307-8; — Khān, poetically surnamed 'Andalīb (xix), 309; Mīrzā — b. 'Abdu'llāh (A.D. 1857-8), 450; — qulī (author of Minhāju'l-Talībīn, q.v.), 423; — Dānish Bey (contemporary man of letters), 8 n., 29; — i-Kurd (fictitious hero of popular romance), 464
Husn-i-ta'ālī ("poetical aetiology"), 164
 -Hutama (the sixth of the Seven Hells), 400-401
Huwargilyā, Jism-i- —, Arq-i- —, 397 and note; 403
 Iḥwayza, 58, 362, 367

Ibdhat, 382 See Communism

Ibrāhīm, the Patriarch, see Abraham, — (son of the Prophet Muhammad), 391, — b Adham
(saint, viii), 36, 357; — b Ja'far
(ancestor of the Safawis), 33 n; —, commonly called Shaykh Shāh
(xv), 47, — (brother of Shāh
Isma'il I), 48 n, — Mirzā (son of Shāh Tahmāsp I), 98, — (nephew of Nādir Shāh, circa A D 1750), — (son

Incarnation (Hulūl), 382

India, 4, 24, 25, 115, 123, 135, 136,
148, 154, 164-170, 189, 205, 215,
241, 245-6, 252, 253, 254, 255,
258-260, 265-6, 277, 280-2, 282,
283, 284, 300, 356, 365, 408, 431,
438, 451, 453, 472, literary taste
in —, 226, 227, 229, 300

Indf (fairness, a Persian character istic) 196 n

"Inspector's head," 375

Intellectual Life (by Hamerton), 216

Intercession (Doctrine of — in Islām),
179, 186-7, 390

Isqān (Bābī apology), 422-3

Irān and Tūrān, 13, — (newspaper)

157
Irān shahr (magazine), 488-9, 490

'Irāq, 47, 55, 57, 59, 82, 191, 192,
234, 255, 347, 366, 410, 451

'Irāq : 'Ajam (newspaper), 346, 347

Irish language, 185 n 223

Irshdū'l mathal ("Proverbial Commission") 164

Irshād (newspaper), 346, 347

'Isā see Jesus, Mirza — of Fārdhān
Qā'im maqām, 147 n, 303, 311,
347

Isāiah 204, 214

'Isāwīyya (N African order of dervishes), 59

Isfahān, 4, 6, 9, 10, 15, 25, 56, 59,
92, 107, 109, 110, 115, 116, 118,
119, 120, 123-133, 134, 139, 140,
141, 167, 184, 186, 195, 198, 222,
225, 237, 265, 268, 277-9, 281,
282, 283, 284, 307, 325, 365-6,
368, 408, 410, 427, 428, 429, 436,
450, 451, 489

Isfaranjān (in Gilān), 36

Ishāq Beg 'Udhri (poet, died A D 1771-2), 283

Ishmael, 388 See Isma'il

"Ishpukhtar" (Inspector), 375

'Ishq u Saltanat ("Love and Lordship" a novel), 464

Ishraq (pen name of Mullā Muhammad Bāqir : Dāmād, q v), 257,
407, 428

Ishrdgiyyān ("Illuminati," Platonists) 431

Iskandar (Alexander the Great,
q v), 13, 14, — Munshi (author of the Ta'rikh : 'Ālam-drd y,
'Abdās, composed in A D 1616,
q v), 99, 108, 109, 444

467-8

'Jbrat nāma of Sabā (vix), 309

Jiddhul Ishtibah (of Hüll, xiii-xiv), 356

Idolatry, 386, 401

Idris (Enoch), 388, — of Bitlis
(historian, xvi), 72

Ihqdu'l Haqq (Refutation of the Bābīs), 423

I'jāz Husayn, Sayyid — (d A D 1870),
357

Ijtihād (doctrine of —), 353, 382
See also Mufatah

'Ilmu'r Riyāl (Biography of Traditionists), 355

İlti oghlān (descendant of Chingiz Khān) 64 n

'Imādu'l Kuttāb (contemporary poet and calligraphist), 303

Imamate, Imāms, 15-9, 22, 28, 32,
36, 46, 48 and note, 53-5, 88,
109, 148, 150, 162, 172-3, 181,
197, 214, 236, 241, 372, 382, 386,
391-5, 451

Imāmi Sect, 18 See Shī'a and Twelvé, Sect of the —

— — — — —

482

İnak 'Alī, Mullā —, 475, 479

- Islām Sháh b. Shír Sháh (the Afghán ruler of Dihlí, d. A.D. 1553-4), 168
- Islamische Welt, Die* —, 484 n.
- Isma'íl b. Ja'far-Šádiq (Seventh Imám of the Isma'íliyya), 391; — b. Muḥammad (ancestor of the Safawís), 33 n.; — b. Amīnu'd-Dīn Jibrá'íl (ancestor of the Safawís, xiii), 37; Sháh — I (A.D. 1502-1524), 5, 9, 12-15, 19-24, 25 n., 49-83 passim, 92, 101 n., 112, 158, 172, 224, 229, 360, 444, 447; his character and appearance, 22-23, 60-63; Sháh — II (A.D. 1576-7), 98-100, 101, 102; Sháh — (xviii), 284; — Khán Sarbáz (poet), 188; — son of Yaghmá, poetically surnamed Hunar, 338; — Nasíri Qarája-Dághí (A.D. 1890), 344; — 'Abdu'lláh-záda (A.D. 1905), 466
- Isma'ílí Sect, 17, 18, 147-9, 391
- Isnáds*, 443
- Israel, Children of —, 207, 388
- Isráfíl (Angel of the Resurrection), 400
- Istakhr, 49
- Istibṣār* (of -Túsí, d. A.D. 1067), 359, 405
- Istidláliyya* (Bahá'í controversy), 214 n.
- Italy, Italians, 6, 58 n., 60; — language, 10
- I'timádu'd-Dawla (Muḥammad Ḥasan Khán, xix), 84 n., 454
- I'timádu's-Saltana (Hájji 'Alí Khán Hájibu'd-Dawla, father of the above), 454
- Ittihád (Apotheosis), 382; — (Tabriz newspaper), 463; — u'l-Islám ("Union of Islám," by Hájji Shaykhu'r-Ra'ís), 420 n.
- Ittilá'* (newspaper), 157
- Jabal 'Ámil (Syria), 360, 427
- Jabání, Battle of — (A.D. 1500), 82
- Jabr* (Fatalism, q.v.), 382
- "Jachia" (i.e. Yahyá Páshá), 70
- Jacob (Ya'qúb), 207
- Ja'da bint-Ash'ath (vii), 392
- Ja'far-Šádiq (the Sixth Imám, viii), 391, 394; — b. -Ḥusayn b. 'Alí (vii), 393; — b. Muḥammad (ancestor of the Safawís), 33 n.; — Bey (Turkish officer, A.D. 1514), 76; Shaykh — -Bahrání (xvii), 364-5; — b. Šádiq-i-Zand (A.D. 1785), 142; — of Isfahán, poetically surnamed Šáfi (xviii); Mírzá — Qarája-dághí (xix), 462; — -qulí Aqá (officer of Persian Cossacks, A.D. 1907), 476, 480; — Khán az Firang ámada (Persian comedy), 463 n.
- Ja'farí, Ithná-'ashariyya ("Sect of the Twelve") why so called, 394
- Jaffa, 46 n.
- Jahán, Qādí-i- — (contemporary of Sháh Tahmásp I), 92
- Jahángír Mírzá ("White Sheep" dynasty), 58 n.; — (Moghul Emperor of India, A.D. 1605-1628), 253, 255, 447; Mírzá — Khán of Shíráz (editor of the Šúr-i-Isráfíl, put to death in A.D. 1908), 302, 345, 482 n.
- Jahánsháh (Turkmán ruler of Ádhar-báyján, xv), 47
- Jahím* (the fourth of the Seven Hells), 400-401
- Jáhiẓ (Arab philologist and polygraph, ix), 440-441
- Jalájl-i-Bákhazí (musician at Court of Sháh 'Abbás), 110
- Jalál (or Jelál, Turkish heresiarch, A.D. 1519), 106; — (chief astrologer of Sháh 'Abbás the Great, A.D. 1593), 7; — i-Asír (poet, A.D. 1640), 251, 258, 268-9
- Jalálábád (Afghánistán), 489
- Jalálu'd-Dīn Rúmi (xiii), 35 n., 37, 38, 220, 357, 411, 449; — Dawání (philosopher, circa A.D. 1500), 69, 83, 231, 427
- Jalá'u'l-'Uyún* (by Mullá Muḥammad Báqir-i-Majlisí, d. A.D. 1700), 410, 417
- Jamá'a, Ibn —, Qādí (A.D. 1384), 406
- Jamál, Aqá — Isfahání, 373
- Jamálu'd-Dīn, Sayyid — (Spiritual director of Shaykh Záhid of Gílán, xiii), 42; — b. Muṭahhir-Hillí, Shaykh —, 54; — Muḥammad b. Badru'd-Dīn, 245, see 'Urff; — Muḥammad b. Ḥusayn-Khwánsári (theologian and jurisconsult), 373; Sayyid — -Afghán (xix), 155, 371
- Jamál-záda, Mírzá Muḥammad 'Alí — (contemporary writer), 488

- Jāmi, Mullā Nūru'd Dīn 'Abdu'r
Rahmān — (poet and writer, xv),
25, 26, 40 n, 42 n, 69, 83, 162,
163, 220, 227, 228, 230, 242, 299,
362
Jāmī 'Abdāst (by Shaykh i Bahā'ī,
d A.D 1622), 407, 428
Jamshīd, 29, 246, 247
Jandaq, 337
Jāni Beg Khān (xiv), 45, Hājji Mīrzā
— of Kāshān (historian of the Bāb, killed in A.D 1852), 198, 218 n, 446
Janissaries (Yeshi cheri), 77, 106
Japan, 205, 215
Jārbardī, 362
Jarīr (old Arab poet), 284
Jarrett, H S —, 249
Jaubert, 146
Jawhar (servant of Humāyūn), 91
360-367
Jenkinson, Anthony — (xvi), 10, 85,
90, 91, 92
Jerusalem, 46 n, 204, 214
Jesuits, 116
Jesus ('Isā), 174, 176, 187, 189, 207,
217, 388, 390, 392, 420
Jews 179, 181, 214 n, 392, 400, 404, 421, 452
Jibra'īl (Gabriel, q v), 175
Jigar gūsha 185 n
Jihād (Religious War), 371, 377
Jihannam (the first of the Seven Hells), 400-401
Jinn, 36 and note, 39, 42, 111, 190,
192, 388, 389 396
Jisr i Jūbān, 76
Jones, Sir William —, 229 n, E R.
—, 424 n, 425
"Jonuses" (Yūnus Pāshā, executed
in A.D 1517), 71
Joseph (Yūsuf), 207, 217
Jourdan, Monsieur — (Persian comedy), 462
Journalism, Persian —, 413
Juan di Persia Don — (xvi-xvii), 4,
5 and note, 6, 21, 101 n, 102 n
Jubilee (of Queen Victoria), 322
Judaism, 137 See also Jews
Judas Iscariot, 207, 218
Jāji (son of Chingiz Khan, xiii), 64 n
Julfā (suburb of Isfahān), 128
Junayd, Shaykh — Safawī (xv), 19,
47, 51, 52
Jurjānī, Sayyid i Sharif i —, 59, 427
Justice (Inshāf), a Persian characteristic, 196
Juwaynī (author of the Ta'rīkh i- Jahān-gushāy, xiii), 443
Ka'ba, 386
"Kābūdī" (poem by Dakhaw, A.D
1907), 345, 482 n
Kābul, 136, 489
Kāfi (of Kulaynī, x), 359, 405
Kāfiya (of Ibnul Hājib), 362, 363,
364
Kā'kā (poet of the time of Shāh
'Abbās the Great), 110
Kādm, Ahl i —, 376, 403, 426,
'Ilmul — See Asutakallimūn
Kalān, Khwāja — i Ghurnyānī (xvi),
97
Kalāt i Nādīrī 132
Kalb 'Alī ("the Dog of 'Alī"), a common name amongst the Shī'a,
235 n
Kalīm, Abū Tāhib — (poet, d A.D 1651), 164 166, 250, 258-263,
268
Kalkhorān (in Gilān), 36
Kalo Ioannes (last Christian Emperor of Trebizond), 47
464
Kamāliyyāt ("Accomplishments"),
27 and note
Kamālū'd-Dīn 'Arabshāh, Khwāja
— (xiii), 37, Husayn of Ardabīl
(the first to write in Persian on Shī'a theology, A.D 1500), 359-360, Khwāja — Sāgharchī (A.D
1510), 65-6
Kamārij, Battle of — (A.D 1753), 140
Kandahar, 112 See Qandahār
"Kānu oldum" ("I am guilty of bloodshed"), 113
Kānpur (Cawnpore), 281 n
Karāk, 406
Kārmāt ("Gifts" or miracles of Saints), 40 and note
Karbālā, 28, 30, 58, 147, 149, 174,
175, 176 n, 177-181, 182, 187,
188, 189, 197, 198, 344 n, 370,
371, 372, 375, 393, 396, 451, 463
"Karbālā i verse," 487

- Karīm Khán-i-Zand (A.D. 1750-1779), 121, 139-142, 144, 282, 368
- Kár-Kiyá Mirzá 'Alí (ruler of Láhiján, A.D. 1500), 50
- Karnál, Battle of — (February, 1739), 136
- Káshá, Mirzá — (fictitious), 184, 186
- Káshán, 28, 55, 56, 108, 130, 152, 162, 170, 225, 258, 309, 326, 344, 407, 432, 477, 481
- Kashfu'l-Abyát (concordance of verses in Mathnawí), 457; — Hujub (Shí'a bibliography, A.D. 1870), 355 n., 357-8, 359, 361 n., 364 n., 366 n., 374 n.
- Kashkál* (of Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín al-'Amilí, d. A.D. 1622), 253, 278, 407, 428
- Kashmír. See Cashmere
- Kasru Asnámi'l-Jahiliyyat* (by Mullá Sadrá), 430
- Ibn Kathír (historian), 30, 31
- Ká'ús (legendary King of Persia), 81
- "Kaveh" (Káwa) newspaper, 346, 348, 483-9, 490
- "Kaviani" (Káwayání) Press, Berlin, 346, 463, 490
- Káwa*, Káwayání, the legendary blacksmith who revolted against the tyrant Dāhák (Azhidakháka), and, raising aloft his leather apron, made it, under the name of Dirafsh-i-Káwayán, the standard and symbol of all Persian patriots, lovers of freedom, and foes of foreign dominion. The paper and Press mentioned above (under "Kaveh" and "Kaviani") are named after this blacksmith and his flag, but spell their names thus in the Roman character. See 14 n.
- Kawthar, Water of — in Paradise, 401
- Kay, Kayání, Kay-Khusraw, 13, 14
- Kaysání Sect, 17, 391
- Kaywán, 436; — Cháwúsh (A.D. 1502), 68
- Kázarún, 55, 97
- Kázim, Sayyid — of Rasht, 421. See Shaykhís
- Kázimayn, 366
- Kazimirski, A. de Biberstein —, 417
- Kázimzáda, Mirzá Husayn —, 488
- Kemál Bey. See under Kamál
- Khaby* (a kind of divination), 434 n.
- Khadíja (wife of the Prophet Muhammad), 391, 392; — (sister of Úzún Hasan, xv), 47
- Khádim 'Alí Páshá (xvi), 71
- Ibn Khaldún (historian, xiv-xv), 163, 425, 442, 445
- Khálid b. -Walíd, 170, 171; — Bey (killed in A.D. 1514), 76
- Khalífa, 16, see Caliph, Caliphate; — Sultán (xvii), 264
- Khalíl Shírwánsháh (xv), 52; — Áq-Qoyúnlu (xv), 58 n.; — Khán Afshár (xvi), 101; — u'lláh, Sháh — (head of the Isma'ílí sect until A.D. 1817), 148
- Khalkhál, 51
- Ibn Khallikán (biographer, xiii), 446
- Khamse* ("Quintet" of Nizámí and Faydí), 229, 244
- Khanikóff, 35 n.
- Khánish Khánum (daughter of Sháh Isma'íl I), 81 n.
- "Khán-i-Wálida Persian," 487
- Khán-Khánán (Bayram Khán and his son 'Abdu'r-Rahím, xvi), 166, 245
- Khán Malik-i-Husayn-i-Sásání, 346, 348
- Kháqán (title of Emperor of the Turks), 14 and note, 52; — (pen-name of Fath-'Alí Sháh), 146, 298
- Kháqání (poet, xii), 52, 246, 299
- Kharábt* (anthology compiled by Diyá Páshá, xix), 164 and note, 173, 242, 248, 270
- Khárák (island in Persian Gulf), 154
- Khárijí (pl. Khawárij), 392
- Kharjird (in Khurásán), 227
- Khatá'í (pen-name of Sháh Isma'íl I), 13
- Khafar, Muhammad 'Alí, son of the poet Yaghmá, 338
- Khatt u Khattátán* ("Calligraphy and Calligraphists," by Mirzá Habib of Isfahán), 450, 457
- Khawáriq'u'l-'Adát* (thaumaturgy), 40 n.
- Khaybar, 392
- Abu'l-Khayr Khán (descendant of Chingiz Khán), 64 n.
- Khayrá'tun Hisán* (biographies of eminent women), 456
- Khayyám, 'Umár — (astronomer and poet), 425
- Khidr, 270
- Khiva (Khoivaq), 136, 347. See also, Khivárazm

- Khudá d̄farín* ("Creator of Gods"), 151
Khudá-banda (Ul̄jáytu, Mongol, xiv), 18, Sháh Muhammad — (Safawí, A D 1577-1587), 98, 100-103, — (son of Sháh 'Abbás the Great), 111
Khudá verdí (barber), 101, 103
Khuddwand náma (of Sabá, d A D 1822) 309
Khulásatu'l-Hudb (by Shaykh 1 Bahá'í d A D 1622), 428; — Iftidh (of Yaghmá), 339
Khuld-i-Barín (poem by Wabshí, d A D 1583), 238, — (history, A D 1660), 100, 445
Khunkár (title of Ottoman Sultáns), 90 n
Khurásán, 25, 55, 63, 64, 65, 66, 78 n., 82, 95, 99, 101, 104, 105, 133, 138, 140, 151, 167, 227, 229, 230, 233, 234, 328, 399, 451, 455
Khurram (Russian wife of Sultán Sulaymán I), 89
Khurram abád (Luristán), 104, 279
Khurshid Press (Tíhrán), 466
Khusraw Parwíz (Sásánian king), 221, Amír — of Dihl (poet, xiii), 164, 167, 242 n., — Khán (circa A D 1713), 124, — Mírza (son of 'Abbás Mírzá, A D 1829), 313, 314 and note
Khusraw wa Shírin (poem by Nizámí), 248, — (poem by Sayyid Muhammad Sádiq), 283
Khutan, 321
Khuy, 76, 130, 489
Khuzistán, 82
Khwája Mawláná yí Isfahání (poet, d A D 1521) 78-80
Khwándamír (historian, xvi) 445, 447
Khwánsár, 251, 252
Khwár, 55
Khwárazm, 78 n., 347 See also Khwa
Khwárazmsháhs, 3
King, Sir Lucas White —, 64 n
King's College, Cambridge, 229 n., 490
Kirámi Sect, 384
Kirmán, 55, 64, 76, 82, 104, 118, 126 128 n., 131, 133, 137, 148, 149 151, 157, 184, 186, 238, 280, 328, 413, 446, 451, 466, 489
Kirmánsháh, 131, 134, 151, 184, 186, 279, 347, 410, 463, 489
Kitáb al Aghání, 485, — Ahmad (by Yaghmá) 339, — Aqdas ("the Most Holy Book" of the Bahá'ís), 423, — Fakhrí, 444, — Hayawan (of Jáhuz), 440, —
Sadra, 430
Knolles, Richard —, 70, 72, 90 n
Korah, 209 n See Qárun
Krusinski, 4, 10, 21 n., 111, 112, 114 n., 115, 116, 119, 129
Kúfa, 174, 176, 190, 191, 192, 193, 200 210
Kufwí (poet, xvi), 168
-Kulayn, Muhammad b Ya'qúb (d A D 941), 358, 404 n., 405, 448
Kulthúm 179, 181, Umm —, 392
Kurdish poem, 484
Kurdistan, Kurds, 27, 46, 58, 76, 125, 151, 279, 347
Kútáhiya, 89
Kutub Arba'a ('the Four Books'), 359, — Ryál, 355, 405
Láhiyán, 21, 50, 277
Lahore, 136, 266, 267, 281 n., 440
Lámi'i (poet), 299
Lane Poole, Stanley —, 169 n
Langlès, 115
Lár, 149, 279, 283
Latakia, 76
Latin, 10, 359, 425 n., — races, 488
Law, Muhammadan —, 377-8
Lawh i Mahfíz ('Preserved Tablet'), 388 See also Atwáh
Lawhí (poet), 194
Laylá wa Majnún, 206, 216, 229, 283
Laylatu'l Qadr ("Night of Worth," on which the Qur'án was revealed), 388
Lazgís, 125, 137
-Lazá (the fifth of the Seven Hells), 400-1
Leclerc, Dr L —, 440 n
Lee, Samuel —, 421
Leroux, E —, 9 n
Lion in the Husayn legend, 189, — killed by Sháh Isma'íl, 62
Lippert, Prof Julius —, 447 n

- Lisání (poet of Shíráz, d. A.D. 1533), 235-6
- Lisánu'l-Mulk (historian, xix), 326, 413, 445. See also Sipíhr
- London, 450, 469
- Louis Philippe, 325
- Lucknow (Lakhnáw), 281
- Lū'lu'atū'l-Baḥrayn*, 356, 360, 406 n., 408, 449
- Lunatic at Large* (by J. Storer Clouston), 322 n.
- Luqmáníyya College (Tabríz), 347
- Lur, Luristán, 59, 76, 104, 279, 443
- Lutf 'Alí Beg (poetically surnamed Ádhar, author of the Átash-kada, q.v.), 277, 282-4, 309; — Khán (Persian General, A.D. 1720), 125, 129; — Khán-i-Zand (A.D. 1789-1794), 121, 142-4
- Ma'álimu'l-'Ulamá (by Muḥammad b. 'Alí b. Shahr-áshúb, d. A.D. 1192), 356
- Ma'áthir-i-Sultáníyya* (History of the Qájár dynasty to A.D. 1826), 144 n.
- Macaulay, Lord —, 186
- Macdonald, Professor Duncan Black —, 40, 442
- Macedonia, 72
- McNeill, Sir John — (British Minister in Persia, A.D. 1838-1841), 147
- McTaggart, Dr J. E. —, 431
- Madína, 24, 174, 175, 391, 392
- Madras, 462 n.
- Mafáthihū'sh-Sharáyi'* (by Mullá Muḥsin-i-Fayd, d. A.D. 1680), 432
- Magians (Majús), 179, 181, 292, 293, 297, 401. See also Gabr, Zoroastrian
- Magic, Lawful — (Siḥr-i-Ḥalál), poetry so called, 196
- Mahallát of Qum, 148
- Mahd-i-'Ulyá* ("the Supreme Cradle," title of the Queen-mother in Persia), 151, 332
- Mahdí, the Imám — (Twelfth Imám, -Qá'im), 150, 151, 197, 394; — Khán of Astarábád (author of the Durra-i-Nádírl), 445; Hájji — (father of Hájji Mullá Hádí of Sabzawár), 436
- Mahmud of Ghazna, Sultán — (x-xi), 228; — III of Gujerát (d. A.D. 1553), 168-9; Mír — Afghán (murdered in A.D. 1725), 116, 118, 125-131; — Aqá Cháwúsh-báshí (envoy of Sultán Báyazíd II, A.D. 1502), 68; Sultán — Mírzá (Safawí prince, murdered in A.D. 1577), 99; — i-Shabistari (author of the Gulshan-i-Ráz, d. A.D. 1320), 37, 220; — Qárl of Yazd (author of the Díván-i-Albisa, d. A.D. 1585), 241; Mírzá — (physician, poetically surnamed Hakím, son of Wişál, d. A.D. 1851), 300, 319
- Mahmūd u Ayáz* (poem by Zulálí, d. A.D. 1614), 252
- Majálisu'l-Mi'mínín* (by Sayyid Núru'lláh Mar'ashí of Shúshtar, put to death in A.D. 1610), 54 n., 230, 234, 235, 236, 249, 356, 358, 447
- Májid, Sayyid — of Baḥrayn (xvii), 433-4
- Majlis* (newspaper), 346-7
- Majlisi family, 28, 120, 253, 416. See under Muhammad Bāqir and Muhammad Taqí
- Majma'u'l-Bayán* (by Shaykh Ṭabarsí), 409
- Majma'u'l-Fuṣṣḥá* (by Ridá-qulí Khán, xix), 25, 147 n., 172, 225, 228 n., 230, 232, 234 n., 235 n., 238, 241, 243-4, 245 n., 251, 265, 298-9, 300 n., 304, 305, 309, 315 n., 319, 323, 325 n., 326 n., 328, 337, 344, 408, 411, 428, 432
- Majnún, 206, 216. See also under Laylá
- Majús*, 179, 181. See above under Magians
- Makhzanu'l-Asrár* (of Nizámí of Ganja, xii), 248
- Mákú, 151
- Maláyir, 463
- Malcolm, Sir John —, 4, 7, 8, 46 n., 77, 85, 91, 100 n., 101, 111, 116, 134, 137 n., 138 n., 139, 141 n., 144, 145 n., 146, 372, 373, 420 n.; Rev. Napier —, 195
- Maliḥa (poisons the Twelfth Imám), 399
- Málík b. Anas (d. A.D. 795), 353; Ibn — (Arab grammarian), 363-364
- Malik (poet of Qum, xvii), 110, 253, 259, 267; — u't-Tujjār (Hájji Muḥammad Kázim, xix-xx), 478, 481, 482
- Malkom Khán Názimu'd-Dawla, Prince — (xix), 463, 468

- [illegible]

- Abū Mikhnaṣ Lūt b. Yahyā, 188
Alimdt u Haydt ("Death and Life," newspaper), 489
Minkhijr-i-Tillibt (Refutation of the Bible), 423
 Minorsky, V. —, 35 n., 36 n., 153 n., 375 n.
 Minūchihri (poet, xi), 265, 299
Miqḍat-i-Maḡdāl (by Mullā Muḥammad Bāqir-i-Majlisī), 417
Mir'āḍ (Ascension of the Prophet), 390
 Miracle Plays, 28-9. See also Muḥarram, Ta'ziya
 Miracles of the Prophet, 40 n., 389-390
Mirātū'l-Bulḍān (by Muḥammad Hasan Khān, xix), 454-5
Mirdatū'l-Mamālik (by Sidi 'Alī Ra'īs, xvi), 10 n.
 Mirkhwānd (historian, xv), 5, 83, 250, 304, 413. See also Kāẓimī's-Safī
 Mīrzā Buzurg (Mīrzā 'Isā of Farāhān, the elder Qā'im-maḡām, d. A.D. 1831), 311; — of Nūr, 316
 Mīrzā Kūchak, 317. See Wīpīl
Misanthrope, Le — (Molière), 459
Miser, The — (Mard-i-Khast, a Persian comedy), 462
Mishkātū'l-Anwār (by Mullā Muḥammad Bāqir-i-Majlisī), 409
 Miskīn, Mīrzā 'Abbās of Bistām (poet, d. A.D. 1858), 328, 336. See also Furīgh
 Missionaries in Persia, 107, 195, 421-2
 Mithradates, 465
 Miṭlāq ("the great Divorcer"), the Imām Hasan so named, 393
 Mittwoch, Professor E. —, 484
Mochyn du ("the Black Pig," Welsh song), 223
 Moghul Emperors of India (A.D. 1525-1857), 25, 28, 92, 123, 164. See also Akbar, Bābur, Humāyūn, Jahāngīr and Shāh Jahān
 Molière, 458-462
 Mongols, 3, 14 n., 37, 41, 122, 127, 128, 147, 299, 322, 348, 405, 412, 439
 Moon, Cleaving of the — (Shaggu'l-qamar), 389
 Moore, Thomas —, 80 n.
 Morier's Hajji Baba, 195, 468
 Moscow, 6
 Moses (Mūsā), 207, 254 n., 292, 297 n., 388
 Mosul, 137. See Maziyil
 Mu'ammā'l, Amīr Husayn — (d. A.D. 1498), 83; Mīr Haydar — (poet at Court of Shāh 'Abbās the Great), 110
 Mu'āwiyā (Umayyad Caliph, A.D. 661-680), 16 n., 46, 175 n., 392
 Mubārak, Shaykh — (father of the poet Fayḍ, xvi), 245
Muddatū'l-'Umr (by Shaykh 'Alī Hazīn, xviii), 278
 -Mufid, -Shaykh — (Muḥammad b. Muḥammad...-Hārithī, d. A.D. 1022), 405, 449
 Muḥammad (the Prophet), 16, 17, 80, 173, 174, 176, 235, 314 n., 381, 387-392, 451; — b. 'Alī called Ibnū'l-Hanafīyya, 17, 391; — b. Husayn b. 'Alī (brother of the Fourth Imām 'Alī Zaynu'l-'Abīdīn), 393; — b. 'Alī Zaynu'l-'Abīdīn, see Muḥammad Bāqir; — b. 'Alī-Riḍā, see Muḥammad Taqī. Amongst the ancestors of the Ṣafawīs and descendants of the Imām Mūsā-Kāẓim mention is made (in the footnote on pp. 32-3) of six persons named Muḥammad, viz. Nos. 6, 9, 11, 13, 16, 18, and one, No. 20, named Abū Muḥammad; and, on p. 37, of a son of Amīnu'd-Dīn Jibrā'il and brother of Shaykh Ṣafīyyu'd-Dīn likewise so named. — (Kings and Princes named Muḥammad): — Mīrzā or Beg of the "White Sheep" dynasty, early sixteenth century, probably identical, 58 n., 74; — Khudā-banda (Ṣafawī, A.D. 1578-1587), 98, 100-103; — III (Ottoman Sultān, A.D. 1595-1603), 106; — Shāh (Moghul Emperor of Dihlī, A.D. 1739), 136; Sayyid — (grandson of Shāh Sulaymān II the Ṣafawī, xviii), 138; Āqā — Khān Qājār (assassinated in A.D. 1797), 139-145, 158, 298, 487; — Shāh Qājār (A.D. 1834-1848), 149, 151, 311, 329, 381; Sultān — Shāh, contemporary pontiff of the Isma'īliyya, commonly known as the Āqā Khān, q.v., 149 n. (Muḥammad ibn —) — b. 'Abdu'l-Wahhāb-Qazwīnī (Mīrzā Muḥammad Khān, contemporary scholar),

- Muhammad Husayn Mirzá (nephew of Sháh Isma'íl II, murdered by his uncle in A.D. 1577), 99; — of Tabriz, calligraphist (xvii), 100; — Ghálíb (poet, xviii), 283; — Hidáyat (contemporary), 357
- Muhammad Iqbál, Shaykh — (author of Development of Metaphysics in Persia and Asrar-i-Khudí, q.v., contemporary thinker), 430, 431, 436; — Professor —, Ph.D. (contemporary scholar), 56 n.
- Muhammad Karim Khán of Kirmán, Hájji — (head of the later Shaykhís and rival of the Báb, xix), 421
- Muhammad Kázim of Khurásán, Mullá — (patriotic mujtahid, d. Dec. 12, 1911), 371
- Muhammad Mahdí, Sayyid — of Burújird, entitled Bahru'l-'Ulúm ("the Ocean of Learning") (d. circa A.D. 1824), 379, 410
- Muhammad Muhsin Mirzá (son of Sultán Husayn Mirzá the Tímúrid, A.D. 1504), 56
- Muhammad Mú'mín (musician at the court of Sháh 'Abbás the Great), 110; —, poetically surnamed Dá'í (d. A.D. 1742), 282; — -Husayn (author of the Tuhfatu'l-Má'mínín, q.v., A.D. 1669), 439
- Muhammad Rafi' b. Muhammad Shafi' of Tabriz (author of the Má'd'imú's-Súfiyya, A.D. 1806), 420
- Muhammad Rahím (court-physician to Sultán Husayn, circa A.D. 1700), 283
- Muhammad Sádiq (poet of Tafrísh, xviii), 282, 283; — Qá'im-maqámí, better known as Adíbu'l-Mamálik, q.v. (d. Feb. 21, 1917), 346-9, 484; — Tabátábá'í (editor of the newspaper Majlis in A.D. 1906), 347
- Muhammad Sáliḥ (cruelly put to death about A.D. 1574), 97; — Khán (one of the assassins of Wádir Sháh in A.D. 1747), 137 n.
- Muhammad Shafi', Professor — (contemporary scholar), 281 n.
- Muhammad Táhir Wahíd (poet, d. A.D. 1708), 258, 264-5
- Muhammad Taqí, the ninth Imám (ix), 46, 394; Mullá — -i-Majlisí (d. A.D. 1660), 253, 403-4, 409, 417; — of Káshán, state-historian and poet, entitled Lisánu'l-Mulk and Sipihr (xix), 326, 344, 445; Mullá — of Qazwín (assassinated by Bábis about A.D. 1847, and hence entitled Shahíd-i-Thálith, "the Third Martyr," q.v.), 411, 421; — Khán, called Hakím (author of the Ganj-i-Dánish, A.D. 1887), 456; — of Hamadán (author of the Iḥdāqu'l-Haqq, A.D. 1908), 423
- "Muhammads," "the Three —" (i.e. -Kulaynī, Ibn Bábawayhi and -Ṭúsi q.v.), all before A.D. 1067; and, in a later age (between A.D. 1600 and 1700), Mullá Muhsin-i-Fayḍ, Mullá Muhammad Bāqir-i-Majlisí, and the author of the Amalu'l-Āmil, q.v., 358-9, 366 n., 405
- Muhaqqiq-i-Arwāl ("the First Verifier," xiii), 378, 405-6; — -i-Thánī ("the Second Verifier," xvii), 28, 379, 406, 409; — -i-Ṭúsi (Nasíru'd-Din-i-Ṭúsi, d. A.D. 1274), 405; — -i-Ārdabílī (xvii), 370
- Muharram (month of mourning), 28-31, 162, 194. See Rawḍa-khván, Ta'ziya
- Muḥassin (son of 'Alī b. Abī Ṭálib, vii), 392
- Muhsin, Mír Sultán — (d. circa A.D. 1508), 59; Mullá — -i-Fayḍ (philosopher and poet, d. A.D. 1680), 250, 359, 377, 407-8, 411, 426-7, 432-6
- Muhtasham (poet of Káshán, d. A.D. 1587), 28, 110, 162, 172, 173-7, 178, 193, 241
- Muḥyi'd-Din ibnu'l-'Arabí, Shaykh — (d. A.D. 1240), 37, 432, 434, 449; — of Barda'a, Qáḍí — (xiv), 45
- Mu'izzí, Amír — (poet, d. A.D. 1148), 168, 299
- Mu'izz-i-Káshí, Mír — (calligraphist, xvii), 110
- Mu'izzu'd-Dawla (Buwayhid, x), 30-1
- Mu'jamu'l-Buldán (of Yáqút, xiii), 397 n., 454
- Mu'jizát (Miracles, q.v.), 40 n.
- Mujtabà (title of the Imám Ḥasan), 393

- Muṭahids*, 353-4, 357-380
Muṭahidu'sh Shu'ard, 307 See Miy-mar
 Mukhlis (poet), 194
 Mukhtārī (poet, xii), 299
 Ibn Muḥjam (the murderer of 'Alī b Abī Tālib) 392
Muḥlās, 353-4 See Muṭahids above
Mumtāz al-Dīn ("the Slayer of Religion"), Shaykh Muḥyī'd Dīn so called, 434
Munayyim bāshā ("Chief Astrologer," author of a history entitled Sahā 'īfū'l Akhbār, q v), 106 n
Mund'arā : Shab u Rūz ("Dispute of Night and Day," title of an article in the Kāwa newspaper), 487
 Munkir and Nakir (the Angels who conduct the "Questioning of the Tomb"), 370, 396
Munshā'at : Kashidat (xiii-xiv), 33-4
Munshā'atū's Saldātīn (Turkish State Papers collected and arranged about A D 1583 by Fīrīdūn Bey, q v), 8 n, 66 n
Muntakhabu'l Tawārīkh (by 'Abdu'l-Qādir : Badā'ūnī), 165 n, 242 n, 243 n, 245 n, 249
Muntazam : Nāḡirī (by Muhammad Hasan Khān P'timādū s Saltana, A D 1881-3), 455
Munyatū'l Fudalā (title ascribed to the Kitābu'l Fakhri), 444
 Muqān, Plain of —, 144 n
 Muqbil (poet), 194
 Murād Beg Bāyandarī (ruler of Yazd, circa A D 1500), 55, Sultān — Aq qoyunlū (ruler of 'Iraq, circa A D 1500), 55, 58, 69, 76, 82, Sultān — III (A D 1574-1595), 92, Sultān — IV (A D 1623-1640), 107
 Murchakhūr (near Isfahān), 133, 142
Murīd (disciple), 20
Murshid (spiritual director), 19-20
 Murshid qull Khān Ustājlu (tutor of Shāh 'Abbās the Great, A D 1586), 101, 104
 Murtaḍā (title of 'Alī b Abī Tālib, q v), Sayyid —, entitled 'Alamū l-Hudā, q v
 Mūsā (the Prophet Moses, q v), — Kāzīm (the seventh Imām, viii), 19, 33 n, 36, 87 n, 391, 394, 405, — Beg Afshār (one of the murderers of Nādir Shāh, A D 1747), 137 n, — of Bistām, and Lorusip A D 1910), 404
Musammāt (a kind of poem), 163 and note
Musawwīt (newspaper), 469
 Muscat, 280
Mush u Gurba ("the Mouse and the Cat" a poem by 'Ubayd : Zākānī, xiv), 490
 Musha'shi' Sayyids of Huwayza (chastised by Shāh Isma'il I in A D 1508), 58
 Mushtāq (poet of Isfahān, xvii), 283, 284
 Mushtāq 'Alī (Sūfi killed by fanatics about A D 1796), 420
 Music, Persian —, 222-3
 Muslim b 'Aql, martyrdom of — (vii), 190-3
 Abū Muslim ('Abbāsīd propagandist, viii), 23
 Mustafā (title of the Prophet Muhammad, q v), 178, 180, — Mīrzā (son of Shāh Tahmāsp, murdered by his brother Shāh Isma'il II in A D 1577), 98
 Mustansir b'illāh (Fātimīd Caliph, A D 1035-1094), 54 n, 98
 -Musta'sim (the last 'Abbāsīd Caliph, A D 1242-1258), 41 n
 Mutahhar Hillī, 356
Mutakallimūn (Schoolmen), 376, 402, 426
Mu'tamianū's Sultan (earlier title of Muhammad Hasan Khān, q v), 454
Mu'tamadū'd Dawla (title conferred on the poet Nashāt by Fath 'Alī Shāh), 311
 Mu'tamid ('Abbāsīd Caliph, A D 870-892), 394
 -Mutanabbī (Arab poet, d A D 965), 357
 Mu'tasim ('Abbāsīd Caliph, A D 833-842), 394
Mutawallī (pl Matdawla, Shī'a so called in Syria), 16
 Mu'tazila (sect), 17, 384, 424
 Mu'tazz ('Abbāsīd Caliph, A D 866-9), 394
 Muṭī' (poet, xvii), 267
 Mutunī Indian —, 154
 Muzaffar Sultān (governor of Rasht,

- barbarously put to death about A.D. 1574), 96; — 'Alī (artist at court of Shāh 'Abbās the Great), and Hāfiz — of Qum (musician at the same, about A.D. 1600), 110; — u'd-Dīn Shāh Qājār (A.D. 1806-1907), 157-8
- Mysteries of Sound and Number* (by Shaykh Ḥabīb Aḥmad), 442
- Nabīl (numerically equivalent to Muḥammad), of Zarand, Bahá'í poet (d. A.D. 1892), 151 n., 187 n.
- Nádir-qulī, 116, 132, afterwards Nádir Shāh (A.D. 1736-1747), 11, 52 n., 113, 116, 121, 122, 128, 132-8, 139, 141, 144 n., 158, 280, 281, 283, 284, 420
- Najāfātū'l-Uns* (by Jámī, xv), 40 n., 42 n.
- Nafsiyya* (prose work by 'Urfī on Súfism, xvi), 248
- Na'īm (Bahá'í poet, xix), 163 n., 198-220
- Najaf, 58, 59, 76, 251, 370, 372, 376
- Najāshī, Aḥmad b. 'Alī — (author of the Asmā'u'r-Rijāl, d. A.D. 1063), 355, 358, 405
- Najfū'd-Dīn Buzghúsh. See below under Najmu'd-Dīn
- Najjār (heretical views of —), 384
- Najmu'd-Dīn Kubrā (xiii), 37; — Buzghúsh (d. A.D. 1279), 37, 42 and note; — Mas'ūd of Rasht (called Najm-i-awwal, "the First Star," d. A.D. 1510), 59, 74 n.; he was succeeded by Najm-i-thání, "the Second Star," Amír Yār Aḥmad-i-Khúzání (killed in A.D. 1512), 59, 66, 74, 83, 231; — Ja'far b. Yahyá, entitled Muḥaqqiq-i-awwal, q.v. (d. A.D. 1325), 378, 405-6
- Nakhuwán, 76, 93, 104, 109, 130
- Nákithín* ("troth-breakers," 'Á'isha, Talḥa and Zubayr), 392
- Nallino, Professor —, 13 n.
- Nalu Daman* (poem by Faydí, xvi), 244
- Náma-i-Dánishwarán* (xix), 446
- Namakkán* (by Jayhún of Yazd), 326; — -i-Haqiqat (by Shifá'ī, d. A.D. 1627), 256
- Námí (poet, xvi), 231
- Nán u Halwá* ("Bread and Sweetmeats," by Shaykh-i-Bahá'í, xvii), 253, 407, 428
- Napoleon, 128, 199, 209, 325
- Nāqizín* ("Covenant-breakers," a name applied by the followers of 'Abbās Efendi 'Abdu'l-Bahá to the partisans of his half-brother Muḥammad 'Alī), 220
- Narjís Khátún (mother of the Imám Mahdí, A.D. 869), 394
- Nasab-náma-i-Silsila-i-Safawiyya* (or Silsilatū'n-Nasab, q.v., xvii), 4, 5, 13 n., 35 and note, 36, 40
- Nashát (poet of Isfahán, d. A.D. 1828), 225, 307, 311
- Násikhū't-Tawárikh* (general history by Lisánu'l-Mulk, q.v., xix), 145 n., 148, 326, 413, 445
- Nasīm (poet), 194; — -i-Shimál (newspaper), 345, 469
- Nasimati's-Sahar fi-man tashayya'a wa sha'ar* (biography of Shí'a poets who wrote in Arabic), 358
- Nāṣir-i-Khusraw (poet, philosopher and propagandist, xi), 177, 257, 299, 357, 412, 478, 482, 490; — 'Alī (poet, xvii), 269; — u'd-Dīn Shāh Qājār (A.D. 1848-1896), 151-8, 161, 224, 298, 319, 329, 336, 344, 370, 441, 450, 454-6, 468; — u'd-Dīn (of the Dhul-Qadar dynasty, xv-xvi), 77 n.
- Nāṣiru'd-Dīn-i-Túsi (called Muḥaqqiq-i-Túsi, d. A.D. 1274), 405
- Nāṣir b. 'Abdu'lláh, Mírzá — (poet, d. A.D. 1778), 283
- Nāṣru'd-Dīn Efendi, Khoja (Khawāja), Turkish wit, 416
- Nāṣru'lláh Zaytúní, Qādī — (circa A.D. 1500), 54; — (Zoroastrian general of Afgháns, A.D. 1722), 126, 130
- Abú Naṣr Fathu'lláh Khán Shaybání (poet of Káshán, xix), 326, 344
- Nassau Lees, 40 n.
- Nationalism, ancient and modern, 12-14
- Nawá'í, Mír 'Alī Shír — (xv), 83, 163, 227
- Naw Bahár* (newspaper), 345, 469
- Naw'í (poet, xvii), 168, 267
- Nawrúz* (Persian New Year's Day), 135, 333-4
- Nawwáb Mírzá Ḥasan 'Alí Khán (xix), 301-2, 319
- Nayríz, 153, 218 n.
- Názimu'l-Islám of Kirmán (xx), 413, 446

Nazîrî (poet, xvii), 167, 230, 252, 268
Nazir u Afanzîr (poem by Wahshî, xvi), 238
 Nero, 23, 61
 Neuburger, Dr Max —, 438

OF A SHĀH — All Shāh's reign), 298
 Nihāwand, 279
 Nī'matu'llāh, Shāh — of Kirmān (saint and poet, xiv-xv), 76, — Jazā'irî, Sayyid — (theologian, xvii), 360-7, 376
 Nūrīqī, Mullā Ahmad 1 — (theologian and poet, d A D 1828), 411
 Nisā, 109
 Nishāpur, 132, 133, 252, 456
 Niyāzî (poet, xvi), 81
 Nizāmî (poet of Ganja, xii), 229, 244, 248, 299
 Nizāmu'l-Mulk (Minister of Alp Arslān and Malikshāh, xi), 412, — (king of the Deccan, d A D 1553), 168-9
 Noah (Nūh), 207, 217, 388
 Noldeke, Prof Th —, 209 n
Nuha : Sina zant (a special form of poem by Yaghmas), 339-344
Nujumu's Samā ("Stars of Heaven," A D 1870), 357, 358, 359 n, 449
Nuqta ("Point," title assumed by the Bāb), 197; — : A'Id, or — : Bayan (the same), 150 Nuqtatu'l Kāf (contemporary history of the Bāb by his admirer and

Nuru'llāh b Sharif Mar'ashî of Shush-tar (author of the Majdlisu'l-Mu'minin, 9 v, put to death by Jahāngir in A D 1610), 356, 447
 Nūshirwān (Anūshirwān, Sāsānian king, vi), 52, 96, 391, 464
 Nusrat College, Hamidān, 464
 Nusratu'd Dīn Ahmad, Atābak of Luristān (A D 1324), 443
 Abu Nuwās (Arab poet, ix), 357

Occultation (Ghaybat) of the Twelfth Imām, 150 Occult Sciences, 441-2

gols), 45 n, 322
 Oléirius, 10, 15 n, 28, 114-115
 Olives, Mount of —, 214, 218
 Opium eating, 472-3
 'Osmān, Topāl — (Turkish general, killed in A D 1733), 134
 'Osmānî See Ottoman, Turk
 Ottoman Turks, 6, 11, 13, 24, 26, 44, 55, 57, 60, 63, 65, 66-9, 80 n, 87-8, 103-7, 135, 315, 316, — poetry, Persian influences on —, 163-5
Oude, Catalogue of the Library of the King of — by Sprenger, 165 n
 Ouseley, Sir Gore —, 227 n
 Oxus (Amu, Jayhūn), 219

Pāda ahr : haywānî ("animal antidote"), 59
 Pahlawî, 209 n, 487
 Palestine, 45, 46 n, 428
 Pan Islamism, 24, 303
 Pantheism (Wahdatu'l Wujūd), 381, 383
 Pan-Turanian Movement, 15
 Parf Khān Khānum, 81 n, 101, 102, 172
 Paris, 323-5 (Farhang's poem on —), 444, 459, 459, 490, Treaty of —, 154
Purishān, Kitāb — (by Qa'ānî, A D 1836), 326-8, 335
 Parry, 10
Pārs (newspaper), 489
Pārsî nigdrt (use of pure Persian by Yaghmas), 338, cf 423
 Parwāna (earlier pen name of the Adib 'l Mamdūk, 9 v) 347

Awî (in Mazandarān), 316
 Nur 'Alī Shāh (Sūfî killed by fanatics, circa A D 1806), 420
 Nur bakhshî, Qiwāmu'd Dīn — (A D 1520), 231
 Nur i Isfahānî, Qādî — (poet, circa A D 1600), 110
 Nūru'd-Dīn 'Abdu'l Wahhāb (envoy of Shāh Isma'il I to the Turks, about A D 1515), 77, — (physician of Shāh Tahmāsp, A D 1544), 92

- Parvarish* (newspaper, A.D. 1900), 469
 Passion Plays, 29, 186-194. See Muḥarram, Pelly, Sir Lewis —, and Ta'ziya
Pelenk and Felenk, 119
Pelly, Sir Lewis —, 29, 186, 187 n., 188 n., 190 n., 193 n.
 Peloponnesus, 72
 Pentateuch (Tawrdt), 204, 214, 388
 "Perfection," "the Blessed —" (Jamdl-i-Mubārak, title of Bahá'u'lláh, q.v.), 214 n.
 Persecution, 69, 77, 92, 94-5, 120,
 147, 227. See Bábís, Shí'a, Śīfīs,
Sunnīs
 Persopolis, 133
 Persian belief in Divine Right of Kings, 18; — Gulf, 107, 154, 451;
 — language, 13; — Revolution (by E. G. Browne), 371
 Peshawur, 136
 Peter the Great, 131
 Petrograd, 490
 Pharaoh (Fir'awn, pl. Fará'ina), 14,
 336
 Phillipe, Don — of Persia, 6
 Phillott, Col. D. C. —, 468
 Philosophy, 422-437
 Pír (spiritual director), 19, 20; —
 -zāda (family name), 42
 Plato (Aflātūn), 201, 202, 212
 Platts (ed. of Gulistán), 269 n.
 Pliny, 441
 Point (Nuqta, q.v.), 150
 Poland, 5
 Polytheism (Shirk), 385-6
 Pope, the —, 5, 7
 Portugal, Portuguese, 4, 10, 92, 107
 Pote Collection of MSS. (Eton and King's Colleges), 35, 229 n.
 Predestination (Jabr), 15, 384-5. See also Fatalism
Press and Poetry of Modern Persia by
 E. G. Browne, 155 n., 162 n., 223,
 302, 303 n., 340, 343, 345, 346,
 371, 441, 447, 454 n., 457 n., 467 n., 468 n., 469, 478 n., 482 n.
 Priests, Christian —, 4-6, 9-10. See also Missionaries
 Printing introduced into Persia, 155, 468
 Prophetic Office, 387-8
 Prose, Varieties of —, 412
 Psalms (Zubúr, Mazámir), 388
 Psychical Research, 40
 Ptolemy, 201, 212
 Purchas's Pilgrims, 105
 Pushtô (Afghán) language, 122
 Qá'án, 14 n. See also Khágán
 Qá'ání (poet, d. A.D. 1853), 26, 163,
 168, 177-181, 225, 227, 265, 299,
 307 n., 326-335, 336, 337, 339, 344
 Qábíl (Cain), 207, 217
Qábīs-nāma (xi), 412
 Qádisiyya, Battle of — (vii), 126-7
 Qahqaha, Castle of —, 89, 96, 98
 Qá'im-i-Ál-i-Muḥammad (the Twelfth Imám or Imám Mahdí, q.v.), 150, 394, 419; — ('Abbásid Caliph,
 A.D. 1031-1075), 54 n.; — maqám (Mírzá 'Isá of Faráhán, d. A.D.
 1831, and his son Mírzá Abu'l-Qásim, put to death in A.D. 1835),
 147 and note, 152, 303, 311-316,
 346, 347, 484 n.
 Qájárs, 10, 26, 29, 52 n., 115, 121,
 122, 128, 132, 139, 140-158, 168,
 224, 298, 299, 300, 375, 455,
 487-8. See also under the names of the individual kings of this dynasty
 Qamšar (near Káshán), 477, 481
 Qanbar-i-Rawḍa-khwán, Sayyid —
 (satirized by Yaghmá), 339
 Qandahár, 55, 112, 118 n., 123-5, 136
 -Qánún (newspaper), 468-9
 Qánúní ("the Law-giver," title of Sultán Sulaymán I), 81
 Qáqázán (? Qázán), 475, 479
 Qará-bagh, 49, 346
 Qaramán (Caramania), 48
 Qâren, 199, 209 and note
 Qárún (Corah, amongst the Muslims proverbial for his wealth, like Croesus in Europe), 199, 207,
 209, 217
 Qárs, 104
 Qarshi, Massacre of Sunnīs at — in
 A.D. 1512, 63, 83, 94, 227
 Qáruyál (or Quryál, or Qúriyán), 47
 Qásim (son of the Prophet Muḥammad, died in infancy), 391; —
 Beg ibn Jahángir Beg ibn 'Alí
 Beg (ruler of Diyár Bakr about
 A.D. 1500), 55; Mawláná — (poet, circa A.D. 1554), 169-170 Abu'l-Qásim Ḥamza (son of the seventh Imám Musá Kázim, and ancestor of the Šafawīs), 33 n.;
 — Findariskí (xvi-xvii), 250, 257-
 8, 408, 435; Mírzá — Qá'im-

- maqām* (q v), 147, 311-316,
484 n, — (poet of Shīrāz, xix),
225 n
- Qāsimī (poet to Shah Isma‘īl, xvi),
83, 219 n
- and the Umayyads so called, 391
- Qasr i Zar (in Fārs), 59
- Qaysar i Rūm*, 80 n
- Qaysariyya (Caesarea), 71
- Qazwīn 4, 10 n, 26, 85, 90, 97, 98,
100, 104, 105, 109, 110, 129,
130, 131, 135, 170-172 (Hayrālī's satire on the people of —), 223,
264, 282 n, 345
- Qazwīnī, Zakariyyā b. Muhammad
b. Mahmūd (geographer, xiii),
397 n, 448
- Qifī (author of the Ta'rikhu'l Hukamā, xii), 447
- Qipchāq, Dasht i —, 45
- Qisas-i 'Ulamā (Biographies of Shī'a doctors by Muhammad b. Sulay mān of Tanukābun, A.D. 1873),
120, 354-5 356, 358, 360 n, 361,
368 n, 369 n, 370 n, 372, 373,
376, 377, 378 n, 379 n, 404-9,
416, 426, 427 n, 428, 429, 432,
434, 435, 449
- Qishrī (formalist externalist), 376, 402
- Qiwamū'd Dīn Nūr bakshī (A.D. 1519),
231 and note
- 14, 48 (why so called), 68-9, 74,
76 80 n (Qizil burk), 93, 102,
104 106, 236 and note
- Qoja Beg Günduzlu (one of the
14, 48 (why so called), 68-9, 74,
76 80 n (Qizil burk), 93, 102,
104 106, 236 and note
- Quds wal Khalil (Jerusalem and Hebron), 46 ad calē
- Quellenkunde der Persischen Medizin*
(by Dr A. Fonahn), 439
- Querry, M. Amédée —, 377, 378
- "Questioning of the Tomb" (Su'āl i Qabr), 396
- Quhrud, 109
- "Quintet," 229 See Khamsa
- Qum, 30, 56, 100, 130, 148, 149, 237,
253, 259 283, 309, 429
- Qur'ān*, 16, 36, 39, 110, 114, 137,
209 n, 210, 212 n, 214, 215 n,
217 n, 243, 254 n, 336 n, 361,
374, 381, 382, 388-390, 401, 415,
418, 430, 432
- Qūriyān (Qaruyāl, or Quryāl), 47
- Qurratu'l 'Ayn (the Bābī heroine, put to death in A.D. 1852), 154, 197, 421
- Ibn Qutayba 485 n
- Qutbu'd-Dīn Ahmad (great grand father of Shaykh Safiyyu'd Dīn),
32 n, 36-7
- Rabino, H. L. —, 30
- Rabī'u'l Asdī* (by Mulla Muhammad
- Rafsinjan, 126
- Rahat-i Sudur* (history of the Saljuqs by Rāwandī), 18 n, 56 n, 222
and note
- Rahīm, Malik — (Buwayhid, xi),
54 n
- Rāh i Naw* (newspaper) 484
- Ray at* ("Return," doctrine of —),
197, 398-400
- Rangīn (in Gilan), 36
- Raphael du Mans, Pere — (xvii), 9, 20, 115, 116
- Rāqim (poet, xvii), 267
- Rashahāt i Sahāb* (by Sahāb of Isfahān,
d. A.D. 1807), 305
- Rashīdu'd Dīn Fadlu'llāh (xiv), 19, 33
- Rasht, 50, 59, 96, 135, 184, 186, 222, 410, 489
- Rasmi (poet, xvi), 166
- Rastakhiz* ("the Resurrection," news paper), 484 n
- Rāwandī Abu Bakr Najmu'd Dīn
Muhammad — (author of the Rāhat-i Sudur, xi-xiii), 222
- Rawda khwān*, 29 181 (why so called),
182-194
- Rawdatu'l Janndt* (Biographies of eminent Muslims, compiled in
A.D. 1870), 251, 257, 356-7, 358,

- 359, 408-411 passim, 416, 417, 421-2, 426-432 passim, 435, 446, 448
- Rawdatu's-Safá* (vols. i-vii by Mírkhwánd, xv; supplementary vols. viii-x by Ridá-qulí Khán Hidáyat, xix), 5, 7, 8, 102, 250-251, 304, 317, 413, 445
- Rawdatu'sh-Shuhadá* ("Garden of the Martyrs," by Husayn Wa'iz-i-Káshifi, xv), 29, 181, 237
- Ray, 232, 233, 438
- Rayhání, Yahyá Khán — (contemporary poet), 490
- Rází (Abú Bakr Muḥammad b. Zakariyyá, physician, x), 425, 438-9, 449
- Recording Angels (named Sa'iq and Shahíd), 398, 400
- "Red-heads." See Qizil-básh
- Redhouse, Sir James —, 35
- "Reign of Terror at Tabriz" (by E. G. Browne), 371 n.
- Religions et Philosophies dans l'Asie Centrale* (by the Comte de Gobineau). See Gobineau
- Religious Attitude and Life in Islam* (by D. B. Macdonald), 40
- Renaissance, 438
- Resurrection (Qiyámat), 382, 390, 399-401, 422
- "Return" (Raj'at, q.v.), 419
- Revolution of 1906 in Persia, 121, 122, 155-8, 162, 302, 303, 340, 344, 345, 467; Persian Revolution of 1905-1909 (by E. G. Browne, 1910), 155, 302, 468 n.
- Rhodes, 81
- Ridá-qulí (son of Nádír Sháh, xviii), 135, 136, 138; — Khán, poetically surnamed Hidáyat, q.v. (born A.D. 1800, died 1872), 5, 7, 25, 26, 28, 102, 164 n., 172, 224, 230, 233, 234, 235, 245, 250, 251, 256, 258, 264, 265, 298, 299, 304, 305, 307, 309, 311, 316, 317, 319, 326, 344, 413, 445. See also Majma'u'l-Fusahá, Riyádu'l-'Arifín, etc.
- Ridá-yi-'Abbási (portrait-painter, xvii), 25, 484; Shaykh — yi-Kurd (poet, date unknown), 29; Sayyid — b. Mahdí, 370; — of Kirmán (assassin of Naṣíru'd-Dín Sháh, A.D. 1896), 155; — Khán (Commander-in-chief and practically Dictator of Persia, A.D. 1923-4), 15; — Khán, Mírzá —. See Arfa'u'd-Dawla
- Rieu, Dr Charles — (author of the British Museum Catalogues of Arabic, Persian and Turkish mss.), 35 n., 54 n., 57 n., 66 n., 83 n., 229 n., 231 n., 233, 235 n., 237 n., 238, 241 n., 243 n., 251, 252, 253, 256, 257, 264, 265, 278 n., 281 n., 298, 408 n., 420 n., 447 n., 453
- Rijálu'l-Ghayb* ("Men of the Unseen World"), 472 and note
- Risála-i-Khayrátiyya* (by Áqá Muḥammad 'Alí Bihbihání), 420
- Riyádat* (mortification, discipline), 382
- Riyádaiyyát* (the exact or mathematical sciences), 437
- Riyádu'l-'Arifín* (by Ridá-qulí Khán, xix), 230, 251, 265, 304, 305; 309 n., 319, 326 n., 436, 437
- Riyádu'sh-Shu'arā* (by Wálih, A.D. 1748), 229
- Roe, Richard —, 380
- Rome, 5, 6; Church of —, 359
- Rosen, Dr F. —, 463
- Rosenzweig-Schwannau (ed. of Háfiz), 216 n.
- Ross, Col. Sir E. —, 462 n.
- Ross, Sir E. Denison —, 15 n., 50 n., 64 n., 358, 444
- Roxburgh Club, 105 n.
- Rúdagi, or Rúdakí (poet, x), 221, 299
- Rúhí, Hájji Shaykh Aḥmad — of Kirmán (put to death in A.D. 1896), 468
- Rukná (poet, xvii), 268
- Ruknu'd-Dín Mas'úd or Kázarún (burned to death about A.D. 1574), 97
- Rúm, 166-7. See Asia Minor
- Rumelia, 76
- Rúmlú, 14, 52 n.
- Ruqayya (daughter of the Prophet Muḥammad), 392
- Ris-i-Manḥús* (the "sinister Russians"), 316
- Russia, 4, 5, 114, 128, 130, 131, 134, 146, 147, 155, 156, 157, 312-316; 371, 374-5, 476, 478, 480-483, 489; Russian wife of Sultán Sulaymán, 89-90; — Mission massacred at Tihrán in A.D. 1829; 146, 312-316; — cruelties in Tabriz, 371; — general's death compassed by Persian theologian, 374-5; — aggression in Persia, poem on —, 348

- Rustam Áq qoyúnlu, grandson of Uzun Hasan (xv), 49, 50, 58 n ; — Beg the Kurd, Hájji — (A D 1502), 68-69, — Rúz afzún (ruler of Mázarandán, A D 1510), 65, Sháh — of Luristán (A D 1508), 59, 76, — Khán (general, A D 1713), 124, — u's Suddt (Sayyid Qanbar, satirized by Vaghmá), 339, Kamán : — (the
- harram), 29 188 See also Mu harram, Passion Play, Ta'ziya, etc
- Rúzmdma* : Irán : Sulátné (news-paper), 346, 347
- Sabá (Fath 'Alí Khán of Káshán, poet, d A D 1822), 307 n, 309-310
- Sabá (Sheba), 190, 192
- Sabáhi (Hájji Sulaymán, poet of Káshán, d A D 1791) 142, 178, 282, 309
- Sabrá Ruzbiháni (poet of the court of Shah 'Abbás), 110
- Sabzawár, 105, 136, 326, 436-7, 456
- Ibn Sa'd ('Umar — b Abí Waqqás, vii) 178, 180, 188
- Sa'dí (of Shíráz, xiii), 37, 42, 246, 299, 348, 490
- Sádiq Beg (artist at the court of Sháh 'Abbás I), 110, — Khán (brother of Karím Khán : Zand, killed in A D 1782), 140, 142, — Khán : Qá'im maqamí (d A D 1917), 346-9 See Adibn'l Ma mlúk
- Safá, title of Ibn Bábbawayhi, q v
- Safa, 225, 307 n, an error for Sabá, q v
- ⁴¹²
Safárat náma : Khudrazm (Ridá-qulí Khán, A D 1855), 304
- Safawí Dynasty (A D 1502-1736), 1-133 passim, 168, 372, 487, historical importance of the —, 3-4, historical records of the —, 4-11, characteristics of the —, 11 et seqq ; poetry under —, 26-8, 221, 250, 354, rise of the —, 32-83, culmination and decline of the —, 84-120, — greatly venerated by their subjects, 86, Shí'a faith promoted by —, 353-4
- Safí I, Sháh — (A D. 1629-1642), 111, 231, — II (subsequently called Sulaymán I, A D 1666-1694), 111
- Sáfi (Mírzá Ja'far, poet, of Isfahán, xviii), 282
- Safínatu'l Mahmud* (anthology of Fath 'Alí Sháh's poets, xix), 298
- Saff qulí Khán (Persian general, xviii), 125
- Safíyyu'd Dín, Shaykh Abu'l Fath Isháq — (born A D 1252, died 1334), 4, 19, 32-44, 46 n, 88, 115 ; pedigree, 32-3 ad calc, 87 n, 444
- Safwatul Safá* (biography of the above mentioned Shaykh Safíyyu'd Dín), 4, 19, 32 n, 38-42, 444
- Ságharchí, Kamálu'd Dín — (xvi), 65-6
- Sahabí (poet, of Astarábad, d A D. 1601), 251
- Sahá'ful Akhbár* (Turkish version of Munajjim báshí's history), 106 n
- Sabbá, Aqá Taqí — (poet, of Qum, xviii), 283
- Sahib Diwán (A D 1888), 221
- Sáhib Qurán, 108
- Sáhilán (near Tabriz), 76
- Sahl 'Alí, Imám záda — (near Hamadán), 57
- Sahwul Lisán* ("Lapsus Linguae," Sharif's compilation of Lisání's poems so called), 236
- Sá'ib (poet of Tabriz, d A D 1670), 25, 163-5 242, 250, 251, 258-261, 265-276, 299

- Sa'id ('Umar b. Sa'id, q.v., appears to be intended), 170, 171
 Abú Sa'id (Timúrid, A.D., 1452-1467), 100
 Sá'iq (Recording Angel), 400
 Sa'ir (the second of the Seven Hells), 400-401
 Sajjád (title of the Fourth Imám 'Alí b. -Husayn, better known as Zaynu'l-'Ábidín, q.v.), 179, 181 and note, 393
 Sakina (daughter of the Imám Husayn, vii), 179, 181, 393
 Saktás (minstrel of Khusraw Parwíz), 221
 Sakkáki (earlier pen-name of Fiḡhání, q.v.), 230 n.
 Šaláhu'd-Dín Rashíd b. Muḥammad Háfiz (ancestor of the Šafawís), 32 n., 36-7
 Saláma, 393. See Shahrbanú
 Sale's Qur'án, 209 n.
 Šálih (Prophet sent to ancient Arabs), 388; — b. Qutbu'd-Dín Aḥmad (ancestor of the Šafawís), 32 n.; — Beg (assassin of Nádír Sháh), 137-8
 Salím I (Ottoman Sultán, A.D. 1512-1520), 9, 11-14, 20, 23-4, 65 n., 67, 71 n., 72, 73-80, 93; — II (Ottoman Sultán, called "the Sot," A.D. 1566-1574), 90-92; — (poet of Tíhrán, d. A.D. 1647), 251, 258
 Saljúq Dynasty, 3, 18, 54, 222
 Salmán-i-Asadí (Persian student), 346 n.
 Salmás, 106
Sál-náma (Year Book), 456
 Salsabíl (river in Paradise), 175, 177, 228 n., 229
 Sám Mírzá (son of Sháh Isma'il I, xvi), 25 n., 81, 88, 89, 231 n., 237, 238, 447; — (grandson of Sháh 'Abbás the Great, who succeeded him in A.D. 1629 under the title of Sháh Šaft I, q.v.), 111
 Sámánid Dynasty, 221
 Samarqand, 64, 348
 Sámarrá, 366
 Samnán, 55, 337, 347, 456
 Saná'i (poet, xii), 220, 299, 357, 449
 Šan'atí-záda of Kirmán (contemporary writer), 466
 Sanglákh, Mírzá-yi- —, 457
 Šan'ú'd-Dawla (early title of Muḥammad Ḥasan Khán, better known by his later title of I'timádu's-Saltána, q.v.), 453-6
 Sanskrit, 244
 Saḡar (the third of the Seven Hells), 400-401
 Sáqi-náma (of Umídi, xvi), 231; — (of Zuhúri, xvii), 253
 Sar-afráz Khán, Nawwáb — (xviii), 283
 Sarbáz (Isma'il Khán, poet), 188
Sardáryya (of Yaghma), 337, 338
 Sári (in Mázandarán), 65
 Šári 'Abdu'lláh Efendi (d. A.D. 1668), 9 n.
Sar-máya-i-Ímán (by 'Abdu'r-Raz-záq-i-Láhiǵ), 408, 435
 Sásánian Dynasty (iii-vii), 3, 4, 18, 29, 32, 52, 60, 126, 209 n., 221, 382 n., 393, 466
Sawáti'u'l-Islám (Faydi's Commentary on the Qur'án), 244 n.
 Sayyida (wife of Sháh Khudá-banda, xvi), 103
Sayyidu'sh-Shuhadd ("the Chief of Martyrs," i.e. the Imám Husayn, q.v.), 393
 "Schach Culi," 70. See Shah-qull
 Schefer, M. Charles —, 9, 10, 20 n., 115, 116, 304, 457
 Schemann, Ludwig —, 153 ad calc.
 Schindler, Sir Albert Houtum- —, 5, 450 n. See also Houtum-Schindler
 Schultz, Dr Walter —, 467 n.
 Scotland, 5
Sean Bhean Bhocht, 223
 Don Sebastian of Portugal (xvi), 92
 "Sechaidar," 47. See Haydar, Shaykh —
 Sell, E. —, 462 n.
 Seniory of Venice, 5
 Seth (Prophet), 388
 "Seven," "Sect of the —" (Sab'iyya), 17. See Isma'íls
 "Seven Martyrs" of the Bábiš (Shuhadd-i-Sab'a), 196
 "Seventy-two Sects" (Haftád u du Millat), 15
 Shaff'á Athar (poet of Shíráz, xviii), 282 n.
 Shaff'i (poet), 194
 -Sháfíya, 362
 Sháh 'Abdu'l-Azím, Shrine of —, 151, 155
Shahid-i-awwal ("the First Martyr,"

- put to death in A D 1384), 406,
— : thānī ("the Second Martyr"),
379, 427, — : thālīth ("the Third Martyr," assassinated by a Bābī in A D 1847), 411, 421, but on
p. 447 this title is given to Sayyid Nūru'llāh of Shushtar, q v, who was put to death by Jahāngīr in
A D 1610
"Shāh : Dīn fāndā" (Tahmāsp so entitled), 84
Shahinshāh nāma (by Sabā, xix), 309
Shāh Jahān (A D 1628-1659), 259,
260, 408
Shāh-nāma (of Firdawsī, xi), 13,
14 n, 228 n, 229, 309 339, 487,
— khwāns (rhapsodists), 110, —
: Isma'īl (by Hātūfī, A D 1512),
83, 229
Shāh-qull (xvi), 69, 70, 71, 75
Shahr angīs and Shahr dshūb (a kind of topical ballad), 237, 238
Shahr ashūb (name of 1 Shī'a divine),
355 Shahrbanū (daughter of Yazdigird and wife of the Imām Husayn, vi), 393
Shahr : Bābak, 149
Shahrīstānī (author of the Kisṭabū'l
Mīlāl, xi), 15 n, 16-17, 449
Shāhrūd, 104, 456
Shāhrūkh (Timurid, xv), 44, —
Shīrwānshāh (killed by Shāh Tahmāsp in A D 1540), 96, —
Dhū'l Qadar (A D 1508) 414, —
(grandson of Nādir Shāh, xviii),
138, 140
Shah seven ("King lovers," a coalition of tribes created by Shāh 'Abbās
the Great), 106, 119
Shāh Shujā' (infant son of Shāh
Isma'īl II killed by his successor,
A D 1577), 101
Shahsuwār : Chahār tāri (musician at the court of Shāh 'Abbās the Great), 110
Shāh u Darwīsh or Shāh u Gadā
("the King and the Beggar" by Hilālī, xvi), 234
Shakī, 104
Shakībī (poet xvi), 167
Shaltāq : Sipdāh (chronogram yield ing A H 909 ≈ A D 1503-4), 56
Shamākhī, 104, 125, 134, 450
Shamāsi (near Ardabil), 50
Shamkhāl Khān (put to death by Shāh Khudā banda about A D
1577), 101
Shāmlā (one of the Seven Tribes),
14, 52 n
Shams : Shupurghū'l (musician at court of Shāh 'Abbās the Great),
110
Shams : Tabriz (xiii), 37
Shamsu'd-Dīn Barnīqī of Ardabil,
44, — Kuhistānī (poet, xvi), 235
Shamsu'l Ma'drif (by the Shaykh al Būnī), 442
Shamsu'sh-Shu'ard, 325 See Surūsh
Shāpūr (poet, xvii), 267
Sharafshāh (ancestor of the Safawīs),
32 n
Sharafu'd-Dīn Hasan, 256 See
Shifā'i
Shardys'u'l Islām (by Najmu'd Dīn
Hillī, xiii), 54 n, 378, 405-6
Sharhu'l Fawā'id and — : Ziydrati
'l Kabīra (by Shaykh Ahmad Ahsa'i, xviii-xix), 411, — : Sadr
(by Mullā Muhsin : Fayd, A D
1654), 432 and note
Sharīf, Sayyid : — (killed at Chāl dirān, A D 1514), 59, 76, — of Tabriz (compiler of Lisānī's poems, xvi), 236
Sharīm (poet of Qazwīn at court of Shāh 'Abbās), 110
Shawshidū'r-Rubūbiyya (by Mullā
Sadrā, xvii), 430, 437
Shāh : — (poet, xvi), 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000

- Shaytán-qulí, 70. See Sháh-qulí
 Abú Sha'yún, 208, 218
 Sheba (Saba), 190, 192
 Sherley brothers (Sir Anthony and Sir Robert, xvi-xvii), 5, 6, 10, 105
 Sherlock Holmes, 466-7
 Shi'a (Ithná-'ashariyya, "Sect of the Twelve"), 16-19, 20, 22, 23, 26, 32, 43, 46, 52-4, 56, 58, 64, 65, 66, 70-73, 83, 92, 94-5, 122, 132, 135, 230, 234, 235, 264, 353-404, 409, 415-423, 424; the doctrine of the Perfect —, 150. See also Ghulát
 Shibli (Súfi saint), 357; — Nu'mání (Indian scholar, author of the Shi'ru'l-'Ajam, q.v.), 164, 165, 229, 241, 242, 244, 246, 248, 250, 251, 252, 254, 258, 259, 260, 262, 265, 266 n., 268, 269, 299
 Shifá (of Avicenna), 430
 Shifá'í (Sharafu'd-Dín Hasan, physician and poet, d. A.D. 1627), 250, 256, 268
 Shihábu'd-Dín Suhrawardí, Shaykh —, 88; — Maqtúl, 430
 Shilún (? Solon), 201, 212 and note
 Shimr, 178, 180
 Shíráz, 42, 55, 56, 76, 100, 104, 125, 130, 133, 140, 141, 143 n., 151, 157, 184, 186, 221, 222, 225, 230, 233, 235, 241, 245, 246, 258, 279, 282 n., 283, 300, 302, 305, 316, 317, 322, 326, 328, 360, 363, 365, 407, 420, 429, 434, 451, 489
 Shírlín u Khusraw (by Hátifi, d. A.D. 1520-1), 229
 Shirley. See Sherley, above
 Shír Šárim (Kurdish chief, killed in battle in A.D. 1510), 58
 Shi'ru'l-'Ajam ("Poetry of the Persians," by Shibli Nu'mání), 164, 165, 166 n., 229, 241, 244, 246, 250, 251, 258, 259, 265 n., 266 n., 299 n.
 Shír u Shakkar (by Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín-'Amillí, xvi-xvii), 253, 428
 Shírwán, 22, 52, 60, 82, 106, 134, 135, 137, 450
 Shírwánsháh, 41, 47, 48, 52, 96
 Shu'ayb (Jethro), 388
 Shujá'u's-Saltána, Hasan 'Alí Mírzá —, 328
 Shu'la (poet of Isfahán, xviii), 282
 Shurúr, Battle of — (A.D. 1501), 52, 82
 Shúshtar, 59, 184, 186, 279, 356, 366, 447
 Sidratu'l-Muntahá ("Lote-tree of the Limit"), 401
 Si-dih (near Isfahán), 198, 325
 Sifát (Attributes of God), 382-6
 Šifátu'l-'Ashiqín (by Hilálí, d. A.D. 1528), 234
 Sikandar or Iskandar, Alexander the Great, q.v., 13-14; — náma (of Nizámí of Ganja, xii), 229
 Silsilatu'n-Nasab-i-Safawiyya, 4, 5, 13 n., 20, 32 n., 35, 36, 37, 40, 42, 44, 45, 46
 Similitudes, World of — (Álam-i-Mithál), 397
 Simon, Dr Max —, 425
 Simon Peter, 207, 218
 Simurgh (mythical bird), 263 n.
 Ibn Siná. See Avicenna
 Sinai, Mount — (Jabal Túr), 292
 Sinán Páshá Chigála-záda ("Cicala," A.D. 1605), 106
 Sion (Sayyún), 204, 214
 Sipihr (Mírzá Muḥammad Taqí of Káshán, Lisánu'l-Mulk, q.v., xix), 326, 344, 413
 Širáť, Bridge of —, 401; — Mustaqím (by Mír Dámád), 407
 Sirján, 149
 Sirri'ulláh ("God's Secret"), 217 n.
 See 'Abbás Efendí, 'Abdu'l-Bahá
 Sistán, 125
 Siwás, 71, 76, 106 n.
 Siyáhat-náma-i-Ibráhím Beg (about A.D. 1900), 463-4, 467-8
 Siyámak ("Siyáh-marg") son of Shírwánsháh, 41
 Siyásat-náma (of the Nizámu'l-Mulk, xi), 18 n., 412
 Siyáwushání, Mawláná Isháq — (calligraphist at the court of Sháh 'Abbás), 110
 Sızdah band (of Shifá'í, d. A.D. 1627), 256
 Smart, W. A. — (Consul), 196, 302
 Smith, Vincent —, 249, 445 n.
 Socrates (Sugrát), 201, 212
 Soláq-záda (Turkish historian), 72
 Solomon (Sulaymán), 190, 192, 310 n.; a legend of —, 111
 Solon (Shilún), 212
 "Sophi," "the Great —," 20, 21, 23, 61, 112; — sect, 48, 50. See Súfi

Spain, Spanish, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 101 n.

See also Don Juan de Persia

Spirit (Rûh), Five grades of —, 389

Sprenger, Dr A —, 165, 234, 281 n, 355

Squeezing of the Tomb, 396-7

Stewart, Major Charles —, 91

le Strange, Guy —, 360 n, 462

Strettell, Alma — ("Twelve Persian Folk Songs"), 222

Style, good and bad —, 412-415

Su'di u Jawid (by Hájji Sayyid Muhammad Báqir, circa A D 1820), 378-381

Subuh (poet of Isfahán, xviii), 282

"Suffavean," 48, 51 See Safa vs

Súfi kush ("the Sufi slayer," title given to Áqá Muhammad 'Alí, xviii), 368

Súfis, 19-21, 26-7, 47, 50-51, 56, 120 220-221, 254 n, 354, 376, 383, 403-4, 409, 411, 420-1, 422, 452

Abu Sufyán (father of Mu'áwiya, the first Umayyad Caliph, vii), 180 n

Sufyaní (appearance with Antichrist in the last days), 399

Sukuf (Book revealed to Abraham), 388

Sulaymán, Sultán — I (A D 1520-1566), 9, 11, 13 n, 67, 76, 80, 81, 87, 89, 92, 93, 236, — Mirza (murdered by his brother Sháh Isma'il II in A D 1577), 98, — Páshá (great grandson of the Timurid Abú Sa'id, xvi), 100, Shah — I : Safawí (originally named Safi, A D 1669-1694), 111, 112-113, 439; Shah — II (xviii), 138, 284, — Efendí (Turkish envoy to Persia, A D 1728), 133; — Sabáhi (poet of Káshán, circa A D 1791) q v, — Khan (prominent Bábi put to death in A D 1852), 196, 213 n, — u Bilqís (poem by Faydí, xvi), 244

Sulaymáníyya, 27

Sultáníyya, 88

Sultánu'l Fugard (poet at the court of Sháh 'Abbás), 110

Sultanum Khánum (sister of Sháh Tahmásp I, xvi), 92

Sunduq (Turkman envoy to Constantinople, A D 1553), 94

Sunnís, 16-19, 22, 43-4 53, 55, 57, 63-4, 66, 74, 78, 93-5, 97, 123,

132, 137, 170-2, 234, 353-4, 363, 391, 402, 420, 447

Suqútu'l-'Idádt (Antinomianism, neglect of religious duties), 382

Súr i Isrâfil (newspaper), 302, 345, 469-482

Surkh sar ("Red head") See Qizil bash

Sursurak ("the Slide"), 221, 479

Surúsh (Angel) 294-5, — (poet of Isfahán, d A D 1868), 225, 307 n, 325

Súzaní (poet, xi), 348

Sykes, Sir Percy Molesworth —, 92 n, 144 n, 154, 156

Syria, Syrians, 16, 36, 51, 77, 360, 388 (Prophets), 427, 428, 451

-Tabarí (Muhammad b Jarir —, historian, ix-x), 188, 217 n, 412, 443, 449, 485

Tabarsarán, 48

Tabarsí, Shaykh — 153, 197-8, 409

Tabbí, Sayyid 'Abdu'l Báqí — (poet and physician to Nádír Shah, xviii), 283

Tabkhí (poet of the court of Sháh 'Abbás the Great), 110

Tabriz, 21, 22, 23, 44, 45, 49, 52, 53, 61, 62, 71, 76, 77, 96, 104, 109, 130, 131, 134, 144 n, 151, 153, 155, 222, 230, 235, 236, 237, 265 n, 266, 346 347, 360, 371, 380, 422, 454, 489, 490

Tadhkiratu'l Akhdí (by Shaykh 'Alí Hazín, A D 1741), 277-281, — Ál i Dáwúd (A D 1803), 444, — Dawlatsháh (xv), 447, — Dil gushá (A D 1821), 304, 307, 309, 317, 328, 337, — Mu'dsirlín (by Shaykh 'Alí Hazín, A D 1752), 281, — Muhammad Sháh (xviii-xix), 298

Tafrish, 282

-Tafstázání, Faridu'd Dín Abmad — (put to death in A D 1510), 63, 69 Tafwid, 386 See Free Will and Fatalism

Tahdhíb (of Shaykh Bahá'u'd Dín 'Amílí), 364, — u'l Akhdm (of -Túsi, xi), 359, 405

Táhir (son of the Prophet Muhammad), 391, — (poet of Qazwín, xviii), 282 ad calc

Tahir ábád, Battle of — (A D 1510), 65

- Tahmásp, Sháh — I (A.D. 1524-1576), 5, 9, 10 n., 19, 28, 34, 43, 50 n., 52, 57, 81, 84-98, 100-103, 106, 172, 238, 241, 406, 456; — b. Muhammad Khudá-banda (circá A.D. 1586), 101; Sháh — II (put to death by Nádír Sháh's son Ridá-qul in A.D. 1739), 129-136
- Tajdríbu's-Salaf (Persian version of the Kitábü'l-Fakhr made by IIIndú-Sháh, q.v., in A.D. 1324), 443
- Táj-i-duwázdah tark (the scarlet cap with twelve gores worn by the Qizil-básh), 48
- Tájü'd-Dín Ibráhím. See Zahid-i-Gilání, Shaykh —
- Takallú (one of the Seven Tribes), 52 n., 70 n.
- Takfír (denunciation as an infidel), 372
- Takya-i-Humáyún (the Royal Theatre, Tíhrán), 194
- Talha (vii), 392
- Tálib-i-Ámull (poet, d. A.D. 1626), 164, 250, 253-256, 267
- Abú Tálib (uncle of the Prophet Muhammad), 392; — Mírzá (son of Sháh Muhammad Khudá-banda, circá A.D. 1586), 101-2; — Kálm (poet, d. A.D. 1651), 164, 166, 250, 258-263, 268; Shaykh — (father of Shaykh 'Alí Házín, d. A.D. 1715), 278
- Táliqán (in Khurásán), 399
- Abú Tammám (compiler of the Hamása, ix), 270
- Tandúkh (Metempsychosis, q.v.), 382
- Tanbúra't (drummer), 110
- Tanukábun, 355
- Táqdís (poem by Mullá Ahmad-i-Niráqí, d. A.D. 1828), 411
- Taqí, Mírzá — (founder of a College at Isfahán, xvii), 366; Áqá — (poet of Qum, called Sahbá, q.v., xviii), 283; — Khán Amír-i-Kabír (put to death by Násiru'd-Dín Sháh on Jan. 9, 1852), 152-3, 316, 329, 333; — -záda, Sayyid Hasan — (contemporary), 29, 485
- Taqiyyu'd-Dín Muhammad (prime minister, xvii), 264
- Táqiya-i-Turkmání (the Turkmán cap), 48
- Taqiyya (prudential concealment of opinions), 16 n., 17
- Taglíd (submission to ecclesiastica authority), 382
- "Tarbiyat," Mírzá Muhammad 'Alí Khán — (contemporary), 458, 467. See Press and Poetry of Modern Persia
- Ta'ríkh-i-'Álam-árá-yi-'Abbásí (by Iskandar Munshí, A.D. 1616), 5, 6, 7, 8, 47, 48, 88, 99 n., 100, 101 n., 103 n., 105 n., 107-8, 172, 238, 256, 257, 427 n., 428, 444; — i-ba'd-Nádiriyya (xviii), 137 n., 445; — i-Bádrí-yi-Irdniyán (A.D. 1910), 413, 446; — i-Guzda (by IIamdu'lláh Mustawfí of Qazwín, xiv), 118 n.; — u'l-Hukamá (by -Qisfí, xiii), 447; — i-Jadíd (the "New History," xix), 197 n.; — i-Jahán-gusháy (by Juwayní, xiii), 443; — i-Wasáfs, 443; — i-Zandíyya (xviii), 140 n., 141 n., 142 n., 444-5
- Tartars (more correctly Tatárs), 3. See Mongols
- Tartufe (by Molière, translated into Turkish), 462
- Tárum, 22, 51
- Tashbúh (Anthropomorphism), 17, 382
- Táshkand, 64
- Tashrífu'l-Afádk (by Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín-'Ámilí, xvii), 428
- Tasníf (ballad), 162, 221-3
- Taswíru'l-Afkar (Press in Constantinople), 459
- Tauris, 61. See Tabriz
- Tá'úsí sect, 391
- Tavernier, 10, 112
- Tawakkul (or Tákíl) b. Isma'íl, 34. See Ibnü'l-Bazzáz and Safwatü's-Safá
- Tawhíd (Doctrine of the Divine Unity), 382-6
- Tayfúr (poet at the court of Sháh 'Abbás the Great), 110
- Tayyib (son of the Prophet Muhammad), 391
- Táza Bahár (newspaper), 345
- Táza-gú'l (originality of expression), 163
- Ta'ziya ("mourning"), 28, 29, 162, 172-194, 459
- "Techellis" (Tekellú, Takallu), 70-72
- "Teckel Schachoculu" (Tekellú Sháh-qulí), 70 and note
- Teixeira, 10

- Telegraph, Indo European —, 154-5
 Tennyson, 227
 Thābit b Qurra, 357
 Thales, 201, 212
 Thanā'ī (poet, xvi), 242, — pen name of Mīrzā Abu l-Qāsim Qdīm maqām, q v
 Theologians, Rise of the Great Shi'a —, 26-8, 83, 114
 Thevenot, 10
 Thibet, 128
 Thiqtatū'l Islām (put to death by the Russians at Tabriz on Jan 1, 1912), 371
Thurayyd ("Pleiades," newspaper), 469
 Tiflis, 104, 109, 130, 134, 298, 462
 Tigris (Diyā), 198, 321
 Tihān, 105, 137, 146, 149, 151, 155, 194, 198, 222, 231, 251, 258, 279, 301, 303, 312, 319, 328, 346-8, 368, 371, 374, 378, 441, 451, 454, 458, 463, 466, 489, 490
Times, 466
 Timur, 9, 25, 46, 57, 348, House of —, 3, 25, 63-4, 77, 83, 229 — ndma (of Hātūfī), 229
 Tiqtatī, Safiyyū'd Dīn Muhammad — (author of the Kutubū'l Fakhrī), 443
Tiyatr ("the Theatre" newspaper), 463
 Tobacco concession (A D 1890-1), 156, 370-1
 Tolerance, Growth of — in modern Persia, 420
 "Tom, Dick and Harry" (English equivalent of Amr and Zayd), 380 n Tomb, State of the Dead in the —, 396-7
 Topāl 'Osman (or Uthmān, Turkish general killed in October, 1733), 134
 Transmigration of Souls (tandsukh), 382
 Transoxiana (alā ward a'n Nahr), 4, 24, 63, 91, 125, 451
 Travel, Five Advantages of —, 433
Traveller's Narrative (ed and transl by E G Browne), 150, 154 n, 294 n, 329, 381, 397 n, 399 n, 420 n, 422 n
 Trebizond, 47, 48
 Trinity, The —, 293-4
Trois Ans à la Cour de Perse (by Dr Feuvrier), 371
Trois Comédies Persanes (ed and transl by C Barbier de Meynard and S Guyard), 462
 Tsar of Russia, Murder of — by Bolsheviks, 371
 Tsitsianoff (Russian general called by the Persians Ishpukhtar), 374, 375 and note
Tubā (tree in Paradise), 401
 Tufān (poet of Hwār jarīb, d A D 1776), 181, — u'l Bukā (the "Deluge of Weeping"), 182
 Tughril (the Saljūq, A D 1037-1063), 31, 54
 Tuhfatu'l Mu'minin (on Materia Medica, composed by Muhammad Mūmin i Husaynī in A D 1669), 439, — 's Zā'irīn (the "Pilgrims' Present," by Mullā Muhammad Bāqir i Majlisī, d A D 1700), 410, 417
Tu, 230, 237, 447
 Tūklī (or Tawakkul), 34 and note See Ibnū l Ba'āz and Safwatū's Safā
Tumān, value of the —, 410 n
 Tunis, 425
 Abū Turāb, Mīr — (Turkmān envoy to Constantinople, A D 1553), 94
 Tūrān, 13, 282
 Turkey, 4, 10, 92, 130, 134, 135, 137, 146, 164, 241, 246, 250, 260, 265, 451, 453, 467, Turks, 10, 135, 140, 280, 427, 450, Turkish dynasties, 3, Turkish language, 14-15, 250, 375 n, Turkish literary taste, 226, 227, 265, 300, 412, 443, 487, "Turkish Sūfis," 46 See also Ottomans
 Turkī (poet of Shīrāz), 182 n
 Turkistān, 451
 Turkmān chāy, Treaty of — (A D 1826), 146
 Turkmāns, 47, 50, 93, 137, 230 See also White Sheep
 Turner Macan (ed of Shdhndma), 228
 Turshīz, 233, 234, 253
 Tūs, 94
 Tūsī, Muhammad b Hasan b 'Alī (d A D 1067), 355, 358, 405
 Tūtl, Mīr — (Turkmān envoy to Constantinople in A D 1553), 94

- Túysirkán, 463
 Twelve, Sect of the — (Ithnā-‘ashariyya), 17, 391. See Shi‘a
- ‘Ubayd-i-Zákání (poet and satirist, xiv), 241, 490; — u’lláh Khán-i-Uzbek (d. A.D. 1540), 43, 73-4, 77, 92, 94-5, 97, 227, 234-5
 ‘Udhri (poet, d. A.D. 1771), 283
 ‘Ulamá (doctors of theology), 353 et seqq. See Mujtahids, Illulás
 Ulfat (poet of Káshán, d. A.D. 1824), 225 n., 311
 Úljaytú (Khudá-banda, Mongol ruler of Persia, xiv), 18, 413
 Úhi’l-‘Azam (the Five Great Prophets), 388
 ‘Umar b. -Khattáb (the second Caliph, assassinated in A.D. 644), 17, 22, 29, 53, 54, 74, 80 n., 95 n., 104, 391, 392, 418; — b. Sa‘d b. Abi Waqqás (vii), 178, 180
 Umayyad Caliphs, 16 n., 180 n., 392-4
 Umíd (or Ummíd, poet of Kirmán-sháh, xix), 225 n.
 Umidí (or Ummidí, poet of Tihrán, d. A.D. 1519 or 1524), 59, 230-233
 Umm ‘Abdi’lláh (wife and cousin of ‘Alí Zaynu’l-‘Abidín, the fourth Imám), 393
 Umm Kulthúm (daughter of ‘Alí and Fátima), 392
 Ummí (“illiterate,” an attribute of the Prophet Muḥammad), 389
 ‘Unsurí (poet, xi), 299
 Urdú (or Hindustání) language, 164, 300
 ‘Urí (poet of Shíráz, d. A.D. 1590), 25, 163, 164, 167 n., 241-9, 265, 268, 299
 Ibn Abi Uṣaybi‘a (author of the well-known biographies of Physicians, xiii), 447 “‘Ussein Alibeg” (A.D. 1599-1600), 5 n.
 Ustá (fortress of —), 56
 Ustájlú (one of the Seven Tribes), 52 n.
 Uṣúli school, 374, 376, 402
 Uṣúli’l-Káfi (Mullá Ṣadrá’s commentary on the —), 430
 ‘Uthmán (the third Caliph, assassinated in A.D. 656), 17, 22, 53, 54, 80 n., 94, 95, 104, 391, 392, 418; Qará — (of the Aq-qoyunlú or “White Sheep” dynasty), 58 n.
- ‘Uyúnu’l-Anbá fí Tabaqáti’l Atibbá (Lives of notable Physicians, by Ibn Abi Uṣaybi‘a), 447
 Uzbeks, 19, 43, 45, 60, 63-6, 73, 74 n., 77, 78, 83, 86-7, 92, 93, 94, 97, 103, 104, 105, 107, 109, 125, 136, 137, 227, 235
 “Uzen Aly Bech” (A.D. 1599-1600), 5 n.
 Úzún Ḥasan (Aq-qoyunlú, A.D. 1466-1478), 47-49, 51, 58 n.
- Valladolid, 21 n.
 Valle, Pietro della —, 10
 Vámbéry, Arminius —, 10 n.
 Van, Lake —, 49, 106
 Venice, Venetians, 5, 6, 10, 21, 22, 47, 48, 50 n., 51, 85-6
 Verlaine, Paul —, 344
 Verne, Jules —, 458
 Victoria, Queen —, 322; “Victorian Era” of Persia (A.D. 1848-1896), 161
 Vienna, 11
 Virgin Mary, 398
 Volga, 6
- Wadí‘at (Trusts, Law of —), 379-380
Wádl’s-Salám (Terrestrial Paradise), 397
Wafayátu’l-A‘yán (Biographies of Ibn Khallikán, xiii), 446
-Wáfi (by Mullá Muḥsin-i-Fayḍ, xvii), 359
Wahdatu’l-Wuḥid (Pantheism), 382, 383, 420
 Wahíd (title given by the Báb first to Sayyid Yahyá of Dáráb or Nayríz, and after his death to Mírzá Yahyá Subh-i-Azal), 208, 218 and note; Muḥammad Tāhir — (poet, d. A.D. 1708), 258, 264-5
 Wahídí (poet of Qum, xvi), 237
 Wahrund, A. —, 462
 Waḥshí (poet of Báfq, d. A.D. 1583), 110, 238-240, 241
Wajh-i-Dín (by Nāṣir-i-Khusraw, xi), 490
Wajhu’lláh (“the Face of God,” title given to ‘Alí), 385
Wakíl (Regent), 139. See Karím Khán-i-Zand
 Walí (poet of the court of Sháh ‘Abbás), 110
 Wálíh (of Qum, poet at the court of Sháh ‘Abbás the Great), 110; —

- of Daghistan (author of the Ryāḍu'sh Shu'ard), 229, 269
- Wāmiq u 'Adhrā* (romantic poem), 283
- Wāqifi sect, 391
- Wāṣṣīl* (of Muhammad b. Hasan b. Hurr-Amill), 359
- Wāṣṣṭa* ("Means" or "Channel of Grace"), 150
- Wassāf (historian of Mongols, xiv), 413
- Watan, yakhod Silistra* (Turkish patriotic play by Kemāl Bey), 464
- Watson, R. G. — (author of the History of Persia), 3, 139 n., 144 n., 145 n., 146 and note, 147, 148 n., 151 n., 152 n., 311 n., 312 n., 314 n., 316 n., 450 n.;
- Welsh song (Mochyn du), 223
- "White Hand" (Yad i Baydā) of Moses, 254 n
- "White Sheep" (Āq qoyūnlū) Turkman dynasty (A.D. 1378-1502), 21, 47, 51, 54, 58 and note, 63, 67-9, 76, 230, 487
- Who's Who*, 149 n
- "Why less" (Bī-chūn), God so called, 212 and note, 218
- Wiedemann, Dr Eilhard —, 425, 440
- "Wiklis" (PWilkins), Mr —, 452
- Wine-drinking, 114
- Wiqār (poet, son of Wisāl, xix), 178, 225, 300, 307 n., 319
- Wisāl (poet of Shirāz, d. A.D. 1846), 168, 178, 225, 300, 307 n., 316-319
- Wustensfeld, 440 n., 448 n
- Xavier, 421
- Yadu'llāh ("the Hand of God," 'Alī so called), 385
- Yaghmā (poet of Jandaq, xix), 26, 168, 326, 337-344
- Yahyā, Sayyid — of Dārāb (Wahid i Awtal), and Mīrzā — Subh i Azal (Wahid i thānf), two notable followers of the Bab, 218 n.; Hajji
- Mīrzā — Dawlatābādī (contemporary scholar), 225, 307, Mīrzā — Khān Rayhānf (contemporary poet and editor of the Gul i Zard, or "Yellow Rose"), 490
- Yāyūj (Gog), 201, 211 and note
- Yaman, 279, 451
- Ya'qūb b. Amīnu'd-Dīn Jibrā'il (younger brother of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Dīn, xiii), 37 n., Sultan — Āq qoyūnlū (son of Uzūn Hasan, xv), 49, 58 n.; — Khān Dhu'l-Qadar (xvi), 104
- Ya'qūbī (historian, ix), 18, 36
- Yāqūt (geographer and biographer, xiii), 397 n., 454
- Yār Ahmad i Khūzānī, Amīr — (entitled Najm i thānf, q v), 59
- Yasā'ul, Darwish Muhammad — (A.D. 1510), 65
- Yd Sīn, Al i* — (the Prophet's family so called), 343
- Yazd, 55, 56, 118, 126, 130, 133, 148, 151, 153, 184-6, 195, 238, 325, 348, 368, 410, 427
- Yazdānī (son of the poet Wīdāl, xix), 300, 319
- Yazdigird (last Sāsānian king of Persia, vii), 18, 393
- Yazdikhwāst, 89
- shippers"), 46, 58
- Year amongst the Persians* (by E. G. Browne), 109 n., 147 n., 156 n., 198 n., 213 n., 221 n., 300 n., 326 n., 335 n., 411 n., 436 n., 442 n., 457 n., 479 n.
- "Young Persians," 15
- Yunus Pashā (executed A.D. 1517), 71 n
- Yūsuf (Joseph), 239-240; Romance of — and Zulaykhā (Potiphar's wife) by Lutf-'Alī Beg Adhar (xviii), 284; Fakhrū'd-Dīn — b. Amīnu'd-Dīn Jibrā'il (younger brother of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Dīn), 37 n.; — b. Ahmad b. Ibrāhīm-Bahrānī (d. A.D. 1773), 356, 449; — b. Yahyā-Yamānī San'ānī (author of the Nasimāt-i Sahar), 358, — the Saddler (Persian comedy), 462
- Yūsufī (heretic put to death by Shah 'Abbās the Great in A.D. 1593), 8

- Zabardast Khán (Afghán general, A.D. 1724), 130
- Zádu'l-Ma'ád (by Mullá Muḥammad Bāqir-i-Majlisī, xvii), 417; — Mushfirín (of Nāṣir-i-Khusraw, xi), 490
- Zafar Khán (patron of the poet Šá'ib, xvii), 266
- Zāhid-i-Gilání, Shaykh — (d. circa A.D. 1300), 38, 41-43, 115, 277
- Zahír-i-Fāryābī (poet, xiii), 284
- Zahíru'd-Dín b. Buzghúsh (xiii), 42
- Zahrá (i.e. Fátima, q.v.), 343
- Zakariyyá b. Muḥammad b. Mahmúd -Qazwínī (author of the Átháru'l-Bilád and 'Ajá'ibu'l-Makhlúqát, xiii), 448
- Zamakhsharī (philologist, xii), 317
- Zand dynasty (A.D. 1750-1794), 121, 139-144, 148, 282, 283
- Zanján, 153
- Zanjání (Arab grammarian), 361
- "Zan-qahba," the poet Yaghma, q.v., so called, 337-9
- Zarand, 151 n.
- Zargar ("Goldsmith," pen-name of Áqá Muḥammad Hasan of Isfahán, d. A.D. 1853), 325
- Zarrín-Kuláh ("Golden-cap"), Fírúزشáh — (ancestor of Shaykh Safiyyu'd-Dín), 32 n., 36; — -Táj ("Golden-crown"). See Qurratu'l-Ayn
- Zayd b. 'Alí b. Ḥusayn (d. A.D. 712), 393; — b. Ḥasan, whom the Zaydī sect (pp. 17, 391) recognize as Imám, 391; 'Amr and Zayd (equivalent to John Doe and Richard Roe in Muslim law-books), 380 and note
- Zaynab (daughter of the Prophet Muḥammad), 392; — (daughter of 'Alí and Fátima and sister of the Imám-Ḥusayn), 179, 181, 191, 193, 392; — Khánum (daughter of Sháh Isma'íl I, xvi), 81 n.
- Zaynu'l-'Ábidín, 'Alí b. -Ḥusayn, the fourth Imám, q.v., 393; — (artist at the court of Sháh 'Abbás the Great), 110; — (printer of Tabriz, circa A.D. 1820), 378; — of Shírwán (author of the Bustání's-Siyáhat, circa A.D. 1831), 450; — (praised by Qá'ání), 332; — of Marágha (author of the Siyáhat-náma-i-Ibráhím Beg), 467
- Zaynu'd-Dín, called "the second Martyr" (Shahíd-i-thání), 427
- Zaytúní, Qádí Naṣru'lláh — (circa A.D. 1500), 54
- Zeno (Zínukn), 201, 212; Catarino — (Venetian traveller in Persia, xv), 10, 22, 60
- Zij-i-Ilkhání (by Naṣíru'd-Dín-Ṭúsí, xiii), 405
- Zillu's-Sultán (son of Fath-'Alí Sháh, A.D. 1835), 146
- Zínatu'l-Madd'ih (Biography of Poets of Fath-'Alí Sháh's reign), 298
- Ziyá (Diyá) Páshá (circa A.D. 1874), 164 n., 173, 228 n., 242
- Ibn Ziyád (vii), 178, 180
- Ziyárat-náma* (of the Báb), 430 n.
- Zoroastrians, 3, 80, 95, 122, 126, 130-1, 230 n., 258, 294 n., 384, 396 n., 401, 423, 452, 464, 479 n. See also Gabr (or Guebre), Magian
- Zotenberg, H. —, 217 n.
- Zubayr (vii), 392
- Zubda* (by Shaykh Bahá'u'd-Dín-'Amill, xvii), 428
- Zuhúr* (the "Manifestation" of the Báb on May 23, 1844), 150
- Zuhúrī (poet of Turshíz, d. A.D. 1615), 234, 250, 253, 268
- Zulálī (poet of Khwánsár, d. A.D. 1615), 251, 252
- Zustände im heutigen Persien* (by Dr Walter Schulz), 467 n.

OTHER WORKS, INCLUDING TRANSLATIONS, BY THE AUTHOR OF THIS BOOK

- A Traveller's Narrative written to illustrate the Episode of the Báb Edited in the original Persian, and translated into English, with an Introduction and Explanatory Notes, in two volumes Vol 1, Persian Text, pp xi+iv 12s net Vol II, English Translation and Notes, pp lv+447 (Out of print) Cambridge University Press, 1891
- A Year amongst the Persians. Impressions as to the Life, Character and Thought of the People of Persia, received during twelve months' residence in that country in the years 1887-8 Pp x+594 Published at 21s London A and C Black, 1893 (Out of print)
- The Táríkh-i-Jadíd or New History of Mirzá 'Alí Muhammad the Bab translated from the Persian with an Introduction, Illustrations and Appendices Pp lx+459+71 16s net Cambridge University Press 1893
- A Catalogue of the Persian Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Cambridge Pp xl+472 17s net Cambridge University Press, 1896
- A Hand-list of the Muhammadan Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Cambridge Pp xviii+440 21s net Cambridge University Press 1900
- A Supplementary Hand-list of the Muhammadan Manuscripts in the Libraries of the University and Colleges of Cambridge Pp xii+348 42s net Cambridge University Press, 1922
- A Hand-list, arranged alphabetically under the titles, of the Turkish and other printed and lithographed books presented by Mrs E J W Gibb to the Cambridge University Library Pp viii+87 7s net Cambridge University Press 1906
- A Literary History of Persia. Vol 1, from the earliest times until Firdawsí Pp xiv+521 Vol II, from Firdawsí to Sadi Pp xiv+568 12s 6d each London T Fisher Unwin, 1902 and 1906
- A History of Persian Literature under Tartar Dominion (A D 1265-1502), being the continuation of the Literary History of Persia mentioned above Pp xvi+586 With 12 illustrations 35s net Cambridge University Press, 1920
- An History of Tabaristán
Vol II of the "E J W Gibb Luzac and Co, 1905
- The Persian Revolution of 1905-1909 Pp xxvi+470 With 46 illustrations (Out of print) Cambridge University Press, 1910
- The Press and Poetry of Modern Persia, partly based on the Manuscript Work of Mirza Muhammad 'Alí "Tarbiyat" of Tabriz Pp xl+357+• 12s net Part II, containing specimens of the Political and Patriotic Poetry of Modern Persia, separately 5s net Cambridge University Press, 1914
- Materials for the Study of the Bábí Religion. Pp xxiv+380, with 15 illustrations and fac similes 16s net Cambridge University Press, 1918
- Revised Translation of the Chahár of Nizámí-i-'Arúfí of Samarqand, folio Mirzá Muhammad's Notes to the Persian Text of the "E J W Gibb Memorial Series, this translation being Vol XI, 2 Pp xv+184 15s net London Luzac and Co, 1921
- Arabian Medicine, being the Fitzpatrick Lectures delivered at the College of Physicians in 1919 and 1920 Pp viii+138, with Frontispiece 12s net Cambridge University Press, 1921

